> Next winter the passenger coaches of the B. & O. Railroad Company will be heated by steam. This will be obeying the edict of the Maryland legislature, which forbids the use of the car stove, which in the past has been the cause of so many holocausts. The law was first adopted several years ago, but the railroad companies with each recurring session succeeded in having the time for its operation postponed, principally on the grounds that the experiments in the direction of heating by means other than the car stove had not progressed sufficiently far to justify the large expenditure incident to the change whereby each and every car would have to be equipped with paraphernalia which possibly might have to be supplanted by a better system later on. The last legislature did not, however, extend the time, and the law was in force on the 1st. of July. To meet the requirements of this law, the B. & O. Railroad Company has just let a contract for the heating of five hundred of its cars. But at the great races what a multiplicity of beautiful toilets! What rav- larity of fine black woolen dresses for ishing hats and entrancing gowns! At street wear by women who like to be the races the dresses are as light and classed as elegant rather than showy ethereal as laces can make them and as dressers. The fine camel's hair, the silk delicate and flowerlike as the exquisite warp henrietta, the superb eudora cloth, tints can render possible. One sees pale | are all even handsomer than silk and pink covered with cream lace, blue un- set the stamp of true taste npon the der butter color, green under white, lilac and mauve with cream or maize garniture, save such as would be put lace, or net overdrapery or trimming. Some of the dresses are entirely covered with lace, as if the dress was of that material over a lining. There are capes, fichus, collets and berthas of lace, and these, with the soft and summerlike colors of the materials, make the vast assemblage a beautiful thing to see. The parasols in nearly every case matched the color of the dresses and were ornapuffs and gauffers of illusion, crepe lisse, chiffon or lace. Some of the lace parasols have the covers wrought to fit over the parasols smoothly, and for such there are bows of narrow ribbon, with many loops fastened to the top and also to the handles.

Among the loveliest of the toilets seen at the Grand Prix was that of the Vicomtesse de Logne. It was of rose colored taffeta, with white pear blossoms in bunches and their foliage as pattern. These flowers were natural size, and some declared they were hand painted. The skirt was made extremely full and gathered all around at the top. At the bottom was a shell trimming of white valenciennes lace about an inch and a half wide, exquisitely made. The corsage was French shape, gathered very full top and bottom to the belt. Around the waist was a belt formed of heavy cream lace with deep vandyke points, with a row of points turning downward and another pointing upward, so that it formed a sort of corselet over the shirrings of the waist. At the neck the lace was gathered full like a pierrot collar.

The sleeves were large balloon puffs, with outline cuffs and caps made of the vandyke lace. The hat worn with this was of white neapolitan, with pink velvet rosettes and bunches of the white blossoms of the cherry set loosely wherever they would hold, one bunch falling Taneytown Literary Society. (Adjourned for on the hair from under the brim.

Mme. de Giers, nee Countess Hoyos Herberstein, wore an elegant costume of salmon colored striped crepon with black dots. The corsage was draped with guipure both front and back to two small points. The edges of this flax colored guipure were bordered with a very narrow black chantilly lace. Around the neck was a flat band of black moire, and above that a full ruche of crepon. The belt was of wide black moire ribbon, tied in the back and hanging in two long ends to the bottom of the skirt. The skirt was finished plain around the bottom, but had rosette bows of moire set at intervals of 12 inches all around. The hat worn with his refined costume was of white chip, trimmed with much white lace and a few small black wings and two bunches of pink cornflowers on the salmon shade.

Another beautiful Parisian had a costume des courses worthy of her, and it was composed of mauve crepon and lilac silk muslin. The front of the waist was of plaited silk muslin and formed a small vest in front, with revers of Duse shape, with upturned cuffs of brocades and moire silks and trimmed two roses with foliage—one deep red and of muslin. THE STYLES IN PARIS of silver gray crepon, with black moire as trimming. The waist had a full vest simulated between two rounded revers of very heavy moire and a small Medicis collar of the same. The drooping puffs of the upper sleeves fell over the moire mittens. On the skirt were two rows of moire ribbon sewed flat and ending on each side under large rosettes of the ribbon, which, being 3 inches wide, made the rosettes 6 inches in diameter With this was worn a tiny capote of gray chip, with black lace and yellow roses as trimming.

There were several barege dresses in evidence, two woolen barege and the others silk and wool. Those who have not seen one of these robes made by the skillful fingers of a French modiste miss seeing a thing of delicate beauty. These bareges are almost transparent, and yet they drape as richly as silk. Some of them are figured in small splotches of color, in polka dots, pin points, etc., and a few have clouded effects, and some have chency flower patterns. All are beautiful. A few have crossbars of Prix and the Vernissage the so beauty. These soft barege dresses recial season in bequire little trimming—inst. enough to quire little trimming—just enough to finish off the edges and perhaps a bertha or bretelles of lace or silk. The most artistic decoration of the new bareges is shirring and gauffering. This material gathers set up so well in view that it becomes ornamental when well done.

I wished to mention the great popuwearer. These dresses require little upon any corsage. The bourdon lace is a very suitable trimming for these rather light weight are being finished in many houses now for early fall. Many are draped with what they call Greek net, which has a large coarse mesh and is very showy, and it wears well too. Many dresses have full, drooping vests of this net, and others have the upper and panniers. The bayadere silk in brilliant cross stripes is now considered the prettiest of materials for morning dresses, and the most remarkable of them resemble a burnoose in form.

Three or four elegant jackets made of fine, glossy black mohair have been seen. They fly open in the front to show a lining of rich white satin. The enor mous revers are covered with white guipure, and a row of guipure insertion is carried all around the full skirt. The sleeves are simply enormous gigot, but the whole jacket is very stylish.

Among the minor matters, which still have their places, I may speak of the novelty of having a fitted waist lining of whatever kind or color suits, and over this is draped in the fluffiest of puffs chiffon in white or colors. Silk should be the lining. They may have a little neat and fine lace insertion as finish or not, but the belts and shoulder knots, or harness bretelles, are always made of 3 inch satin ribbon. These can be worn with evening silks.

Among the new costumes for very warm days there are complete outfits all in mat white. The dress is of whatever material or style the wearer prefers, but she must wear with it white shoes, white gloves with black stitching, white hat and a white silk net veil, and she must have a parasol also all white. The hat preferred with white suits is generally a sailor, but some prefer the fancy brims on neapolitans. All the white parts of her outfit must be mat-no cream or oyster. MARY DERWENT. Paris.

The Silk Petticoat. The silk petticoat has become an ardark green moire. The sleeves were ticle of artistic elegance, made of rich green moire. Sleeping in Church.

Dr. Chalmers went to preach for Edward Irving, the erratic genius who asked the privilege of making a few preliminary remarks and spoke an hour or so in a crowded building, says the Christian Advocate. Chambers, referring to it afterward, said: "What could I do in an exhausted receiver?" There are many cases justifying sleeping in church: the mother who has been watching two or three nights with a sight bild. or three nights with a sick child, the father who has been thoroughly overworked, and invalids, are not to be condemned if they doze in the sanctuary unwillingly.
