AMERICA'S FIRST GEORGE.

How He Tried to Run Away From His Admirers. Washington was not churlish, but he had that preference for being unob served that develops at times into a longing in a man whose life is spent in public. He quitted the Macomb house on the morning of Aug. 30, 1790. The servants were instructed to steal away at dawn, to have the carriages and luggage over the ferry at Paulus Hook by sunrise. By candlelight, Mrs. Washington, the children and the secretaries assembled in the morning room. The president entered, pleased with his stratagem. He was enjoying in prospect his concealed departure. Immediately under the window suddenly struck up on the still morning air the blaring, vigorous notes of an artillery band. From the highways and byways scurrying people appeared. To witness his first step outside the door a thousand goggling, affectionate eyes watch-

"There!" cried the general, in half NEW comic despair-I cannot think altogether displeased. "It's all over; we are found out. Well, well! They must have their own way."

It was the "general" they waited to see, not the president. They lined the roadway from house to barge, recording every movement in observant brains. (A distinguished man can never know which of his audience is to be his biographer. It may be one of the "supers" on the stage rolling off the carpets.) anecdote of Humboldt: One day he was dining with Mendelssohn, the banker, and, an unusual thing for him, was very silent. His host, remarking it, observed to Humboldt that he was sure he must be ill. "No," said Humboldt, "but I am in great trouble. Only ten minutes before leaving my apartment to come here] received from my landlord a note in forming me that he had sold the house in which I reside and that I must move. The very thought drives me to Mendelssohn gradually led Humboldt into conversation, during which he found time to write a note and receive an answer to it. He then took Humlearn that I am now the owner of the house in which you reside. The condition, however, upon which I have beas you live.'

Goat's Milk. Modern Medicine says that goat's milk, contrary to the general impression, differs from cow's milk not in being more digestible, but in being less tween them, so that the blanching is digestible and less nutritious, although it contains a larger amount of solid matter than cow's milk. It is indeed the most indigestible of all milk. Goat's milk has a peculiar and unpleas-Twenty-five Years' Constant Use ant odor and flavor, due to hircic acid, or bircine.
