The Ballot, under the New Election Law.

As the new Election Law is now a fact to be met, the sooner it is understood the better. As we have heretofore pointed out, the sooner it is under-stood the better. As we have heretofore pointed out, this law is not so much an educational test, as it is a difficult method of voting. The illiterate, who possesses good eyesight and a reasonable amount of acuteness, will have but little difficulty in marking his ballot; but, the older men, with their failing eyesight and uncertain nerves, although men of intelligence and good judg-ment, are as likely to vote against their convictions, as for them.

Many persons who read and write—or could, before their eyesight failed them—will find it a difficult matter to clearly see, and properly mark, the names on the ballot in the poor light of the little booth in the polling room.

names on the ballot in the poor light of the little booth in the poining room. Many such, no doubt, will remain at home, preferring to lose their vote, rath-er than cast it by mistake against their convictions. While the law was made to disfranchise negroes, it is a remarkable fact that this race has not con-cerned itself greatly about the passage of the law, and it is altogether prob-able that more whites than negroes will be affected by it.

Cerned itself greatly about the passage of the law, and it is altogether prob-able that more whites than negroes will be affected by it. The negro is an apt imitator; and, while he may not be able to read a word, he is just as likely to distinguish the difference between the formation of the words "Democrat," and "Republican," as between the hickory tree and Lincoln's head—it is a mere matter of acuteness of vision, in which in-stingt is as effective as intelligence and Lincoln's head—it is a mere matter of acuteness of vision, in which in-stinct is as effective as intelligence. This year being the year for a general election, the law will receive a pret-ty thorough test; assuming, of course, that its constitutionality will be sus-tained by the Court of Appeals. The state officers to be elected are a Comp-troller of the Treasury and a Clerk of the Court of Appeals. A judge will al-so be elected, in the Judicial Circuit, to succeed Judge Charles T. Reifsnider. There will also be a county ticket. The names of the candidates will be placed on the ticket in alphabetical order—the proposed "shuffling" plan having been defeated—and there will be no separate column,or party emblem,for each party. The ballot will like-ly contain two or more broad columns of names, and each name must be

I have on several occasions received letters with circulars enclosed, asking my advise on Air Churns—wanting to know if it is a fraud. The new process of churning is by the forcing of air through the cream, claiming several points of superiority. The above is from the circular that explains the working of the above

In the Garden.

(For the RECORD.) The brook of Kedron murmurs as it flows; The winds are sighing in a plaintive tone, To Olive's garden Jesus meekly goes And bears the burden of his heart alone.

The dews are damp upon the mossy sod; Cold are the sweat-drops on his noble brow; His mien is like the manner of a God, As there he prays beneath the drooping

The moon, her rays of clear and silvery sheet Anon withdraws behind a cloudy veli, And then in awe to view the solemn scene, Through misty curtains shows a halo pale.

The mighty King of Kings! behold, he yields Meekly to sorrow that no mortal knows; No jeweled crown he wears, no sceptre wields The hand that ministered to human woes.

No princely vestments decked with gems and gold Array that form so matchless and divine: To-night he wears to shield him from the cold A seamless garment of no texture fine.

The world's great expiation ! there he kneels Gently and calmly in his nameless grief; The woes of ages in his soul he feels As pass away those fleeting moments brief.

His eve is kindled with supernal light His bosom swells with deep emotion's power From deep of hell to lofty heaven's height His thoughts have turned in that moment ous hour.

What means this suffering of mortal pain, Why left the cup of agony to drain, And feel within himself the deadly throe?

In calm submission to the will supre He bows to bear the coming stroke of doom Then victor, he who can a world redeem Has passed the trial in the midnight gloom.

As falls the light upon the cloud at morn When sable night before the sun has fied. So to his side on ether pinions borne A radiant angel has from heaven sped. J. W. SLAGENHAUP.

Some time ago, the editor of the RECORD suggested a number of sub-jects to the contributors of the Home Circle, upon which to write, amongst them was the above. Upon a subject on which good people differ so widely, one does not always like to set up her opinion as the only right one, so again." Might it not be well for us cloud scenery, except he bend low and her opinion as the only right one, so perhaps this accounts for the reason all to test his plan? that no one has ever written upon this topic. It is a well known fact that Scripture can be found to support almost any theory that one per-suades himself is right. I know there are those, who in all sincerity quote as their authority for engaging in this kind of work.

The question is sometimes asked, we have not been given an unmistakable "yea" or "nay" in regard to these things which are questionable; but, christianity does not consist in conforming to a narrow set of rules-a rigid pharisaical titling of "mint, anise and cummin"—it is as broad as the mind of God—a life of liberty: not liberty to sin, but liberty, through love and union with God to serve and honor Him who gave his life for us, and to grow continually into conformity to the image of the perfect man. And this is the thought and influence us in our decisions concerning these things. Conformity to
