MASON & DIXON'S LINE.

Some Additional Information About this Famous Boundary.

The author of this interesting sketch—the first part of which appeared in last week's issue—Alfred V. D. Waterson, A. M., J. L. D., of Pittsburgh, refers, in a closing paragraph, to his parcel home. It may be more definitely located by stating that it was quite near the confluence of Marsh and Rock Creeks, or the headwaters of the Potomac.—(Ed.)

In 1747 the proprietaries of Pennsylvania granted to Martin Kitzmiller a warrant for a tract of land, which Kitzmiller in his deposition testified was "situate about four miles to the westward of the company's line by virtue of his majesty's order, and near the line between the company's land and a patent was issued to him in 1756.

Dixes claimed that this land belonged to him, and demanded of Kitzmiller to either pay therefor to his superior grantor, or to grant to him the land which he had been granted from Kitzmiller's father. Kitzmiller refused to do either, and during that time he had been in possession of the land.

On Wednesday, February 25, 1902, Judge Digges died at his residence in Baltimore. He was 72 years of age, and had been a member of the Maryland bar for many years.

The Sun gives the following account of the wonderful powers of the Blind Tom displayed at a concert in Baltimore on Tuesday night: "With his great round head thrown back and his big body swaying from side to side, Blind Tom puzzled an audience in the Academy of Music Concert Hall last night just as he puzzled the grandfathers and grandmothers of the nation, years ago."

A young lady, unknown to the blind pianist, played a difficult selection from the music of A. G. and Tom stood with his back to the audience with bowed head. When she had finished he sat down at the piano and repeated the air identically, even to a flourish and several breaks the young lady had made.

The passenger train for Cherry Run, on the Western Maryland Railroad, was sidetracked Monday night in the yards of Hagerstown by Philadelphia and Reading engine No. 1036, which plowed into the sides of the engine.

THE PUBLIC SCHOOL TEACHER.

Editor RECORD—

"Let us hear from you," you accorded us a valuable privilege, and I will start the ball rolling, hoping others will get into the habit of sending me news items. First, let me say that I receive seven local papers, including one daily, and the RECORD is gladly welcomed in my table, instead of being thrown away as trash.

Since I, as one of a body of teachers, made the resolution in Westminster, not to support a candidate for County Commissioner who would not agree to help the teachers of Carroll county toward securing living salaries, many things have occurred. I broached the subject of increased salaries to a tax-payer, who has no obligation to send to school. You know I want more salaries? Why you get more now for working from 9 until 4 than we do for a hard day's work from daylight until dark.

The salary of a teacher is not a matter of course, but a matter of justice. We are not to be paid less than the other professions. We are not to be paid less than the other professions. We are not to be paid less than the other professions.

Should a mark be made in front of the name of Gustavus A. Barnes, the vote would count for George Bond, Social Democrat, (in first column) for Comptroller; a mark in front of the name of Daniel J. Hesson would thus count for James Edwards, Union Reform, and one in front of the name of Samuel S. Shoemaker, for Joshua W. Hering, Democrat, for Comptroller.

The voting of a full ticket requires four marks to the right of the first column of names, and seven marks to the right of the second column of names. No smaller number will vote a full ticket, therefore, those who have been accustomed to making one X mark in front of the name of a party emblem, must distinctly remember that eleven separate marks must be made this year, to answer the same purpose.

A reward will be offered for the return of your New Windsor correspondent, who has very mysteriously disappeared without a trace. Our town, though not as large as some, would yet appreciate regular letters in your paper.

Mr. Estabrook has taken on another paint fever. J. F. Lambert is having his store and house painted, which will be finished in a few days. Mr. Estabrook's appearance, while others will follow.

Must Produce the Census List. Hagerstown, Md., Oct. 10.—The writ of habeas corpus was granted to the late Col. Buchanan Schley to submit the census reports to republican inspection was served to-day by an officer. The wording of the writ conforms closely to the prayer of the petitioners. It commands and enjoins the Superintendent of the Census to deliver to the petitioners a copy of the list; to do so without delay, and at such time and place as the court may prescribe; to allow copies to be made of them; to deliver to the petitioners, and under such reasonable regulations and conditions as that perfect obedience to the writ be certified to the Superintendent of the Census on the second Monday of November next.

Orphans' Court Proceedings. MONDAY, Oct. 7th, 1901.—John H. Garber and John E. Eppley, executors of William Garber, deceased, received orders to sell real estate and disburse.

Samson wants Representation. Washington, Oct. 10.—Rear Admiral Samuel C. Ripley, of the U. S. Navy, has again appeared to the members of the Schley court of inquiry. In a letter, he requests that the court be allowed to have a representative. He states that the name of his client has come up time and again, and he hints at an effort to deprive Samson of his honors and of his good name.

Blind Tom, the Musical Wonder. The Sun gives the following account of the wonderful powers of the Blind Tom displayed at a concert in Baltimore on Tuesday night: "With his great round head thrown back and his big body swaying from side to side, Blind Tom puzzled an audience in the Academy of Music Concert Hall last night just as he puzzled the grandfathers and grandmothers of the nation, years ago."

SAMPLE BALLOTS POORLY DESIGNED.

Sample ballots are now being circulated, and the campaign of "Education" may be said to have commenced.

The lines surrounding the boxes, or squares, in which the X marks are to be placed, are the same as the lines dividing the columns. The latter should be separated by double lines, otherwise, in voting for candidates in the middle column the mark may easily be made by mistake in front of the name on both right and left of each name as below, the lines and type used being exact copies of the ballot.

Our Funny Language.

Verb endings, as they're used by us are nothing short of marvelous. And full of oddity, as time. If a nap you take, that nap is taken, but bread is baked, and never baked. And a Klondyke claim is taken, not taken. A man who swims may say he's swum, but milk is skinned and never skinned. And nails you trim—they are not trim. When words you speak, those words are spoken; but a nose is tweaked, and can't be tweaked. And what you seek, is never spoken. If I should stick you, you'd be stuck; should you lick me, I'd see the lick. Nor could I by a mule be kuck. If we forget, then we've forgotten. But things we sell are never written. And houses let cannot be letten. The goods one sells are always sold, but tears spilled are not dispoird. Nor what you smell is ever soild. When young, a top you off say spin, but did you see a girl or grun? Or a potato neatly skun? The drinks you drink of course are drunk. But who shall say that though are drunk, Or at a pretty girl's wunk? And so from time to time, you see, Great errors would be made if we spoke English by analogy.

White House Customs.

President Roosevelt has adapted himself to the routine of the White House with surprising ease for a man of his active habits. The demands on the time of a chief executive are so great that unless a perfect system is followed there will be much confusion and little accomplishment. President McKinley was a most methodical man. He had certain hours for doing certain things and he never varied. President Roosevelt is his predecessor's opposite in temperament, but a few months in the White House will make him a man of the same method, for he cannot be anything else and get each day's business done. The new President rises at 7:30, breakfasts at 8:30, and is in his office at 9 o'clock a. m. From 10 a. m. to 1 p. m., is the time set apart by immemorial custom for receiving general visitors. When Congress is in session Representatives and Senators have the hours between 11 a. m. and noon, leaving the rest of the time for the others. Of course, visitors by appointment or otherwise are received at all times, but these hours are for the uninvited and, usually, the self-seeking public. During the odd moments of these morning hours the President uses his secretaries usually on that portion of his immense mail that Corley thinks he ought to see. Probably the President gets one out of 30 of the epistles that are sent to him. Corley, you know what are important and what are not, and only the important ones get in. After luncheon until 4 o'clock p. m. there is work enough for a dozen men. Then come the interviews by appointment and the private talks with the chiefs of the various departments and with the political leaders who have matters to discuss. Custom has decreed that the hours from 4 p. m., until dinner shall be the President's own for recreation or exercise or for a nap, perhaps. Mr. McKinley went out driving nearly every afternoon at this time. President Roosevelt goes horseback riding. Dinner is usually served at 7 o'clock p. m., and is over in an hour, unless it is more elaborate than the ordinary meal. President McKinley had a few intimates whom he had to dinner very often. President Roosevelt delights in having people at his board, and there are few meals when there are not some guests. After dinner President McKinley went into his private office and smoked a contemplative cigar. President Roosevelt does not smoke, so he takes that half hour for work. The evening is the time when a President is reasonably safe from interruption, and from 9 p. m., to midnight are generally busy hours. With President McKinley it was Secretary Cortelyou's custom to come to the White House about 10 o'clock and stay with his chief until midnight. President Roosevelt will be in the White House nearly as long as he has then undoubtedly devote a great portion of his evenings to work. President Roosevelt is more effusive in his greetings than President McKinley was, but he is every bit as tactful. For example, the other day Senator Heifelt of Idaho came in to pay his respects. Heifelt is a giant of a man, who has lived in the Far West all his life and who is an Indian fighter and a ranchman, with a reach pretty nearly as big as the State of Connecticut. When the President saw his big visitor at the door he stepped forward, put out his hand and said simply "How." It was the greeting of the West, and Heifelt grinned at the recollection. He said "How," and the two strong men shook hands with a grasp that would have sent a grip tester up a good many notes. When a Rough Rider comes in to the President is delighted. He would leave any other shake hands out with one of his comrades. There have been half a dozen of the old regiment to see him since he went into the White House. Heifelt is a man who swears that Roosevelt—"Teddy," they all call him—is the greatest man in the world and the best fellow into the bargain.

White House Customs.

HAD TOO MUCH TO DO. A Story for Husbands Who Think Wives have Easy Times.

Housewives will appreciate a Russian story told by Count Leo Tolstoi. It relates that a Russian peasant and his wife, after an earnest discussion of the question which of them had the more and harder work to do, agreed to exchange tasks for a day. The woman went to the field to plow, while the man staid at home to do the housework. "Now mind," said the wife, as she started out, "turn the cows and the sheep out to pasture at just the right time and feed the little chickens and look out that they don't wander, and have the dinner ready when I come back. Mix up some pancakes and fry them, and don't forget to turn the butter. But, above all, don't forget to beat the millet." The peasant had so much trouble in getting the cattle and sheep out that it was late when he thought of the chickens, and in order that the little chickens might not wander he tied them all together by the legs with a string and then fastened the string to the old hen's leg. He had noticed that while his wife was beating the millet she often kneaded her pastry at the same time. So he went to work to do these things together, and as he had to shake himself to get the millet done he saw an excellent chance to get the butter churned at the same time by tying the cream jar to his belt. He had hardly begun his triple task

TURF TOPICS.

Metella, 2:11, will not start again until next year. John, 2:14 1/2, is another 2:15 pacer for Joe Patchen, 2017. It is noted that Geers, who has formerly used an open blind on The Abbot, 2:03 1/2, is now using blinds. Time Pointer, full brother to Star Pointer, has taken a pacing record of 2:24 1/2. Soprano, by Strathmore, is now the dam of eight in the list and right up in the foremost rank of matrons. Personette, 2:09 1/2, pacing, has not lost a race this season, and she must have won over a dozen, if not a score. The lameness of Admiral Devey, 2:14 1/2, was caused by the straining of a ligament of one of his hind legs and is not serious. Mascot, a four-year-old by Arlon, 2:07 1/2, out of Henri, 2:17, by Onward, recently made a race record of 2:20 1/2 on the Worcester (Mass.) half mile track. Senator Bailey's two-year-old pacing colt Bronson Cooper, by Electric Bill, dam Matilda, by Nutwood, showed him a mile in 2:11 at the Lexington (Ky.) track a few days since.

ORCHARD AND GARDEN.

Be careful not to break limbs when gathering fruit. Soft wooded wood plants should stand nearest to the light. Take the first lessons in fruit culture by growing a family supply. All the fungous diseases of plants, such as mildew, scab, blight, rust and rot, are contagious. Pruning when the sap is active and the tree growing rapidly promotes the forming of fruit buds. Fruit trees on the farm always help its selling value, even if the trees are not old enough to produce. If all wormy fruit is destroyed as soon as it falls, the orchard will eventually be made free from worms. Nothing is so destructive to fungous spores as fire, and all affected plants or parts of plants should be burned. For market pears should be harvested as soon as the dark green color begins to turn lighter. Pack in crates that allow a free circulation of air. When the summer growth proceeds uninterrupted by drought or other cause, it becomes slower and slower until it finally ceases, and the wood ripens thoroughly.

Children's Fertilizer.

That's a good name for Scott's Emulsion. Children are like young plants. Some will grow in ordinary soil. Others need fertilizers. The nature of some children prevents them from thriving on ordinary food. Such children grow right if treated right. All they need is a little fertilizer—a little extra richness. Scott's Emulsion is the right treatment. Fertilizers make things grow. That's just what Scott's Emulsion does. It makes children grow in flesh, grow in strength, grow rich blood, grow in mind, grow happy. That's what we want for our children.

ITEMS OF INTEREST.

The Interstate commerce commissioners receive $7,500 a year. Nearly 2,000 farmers within thirty miles of Chicago have had their houses equipped with telephones. The state of Washington has 444 lumber mills, sawing over 9,000,000 feet per day, turning out 29,000,000 shingles and employing 24,000 men. Three Mormon missionaries have started for Japan to gain converts, and the creed will probably spread to China, the Philippines and other oriental countries. The Longfellow house in Portland has been opened to visitors by the Maine Historical society. Mr. A. W. Longfellow of Boston, an architect, will restore it to its ancient condition. The cornerstone of a monument to the Maryland soldiers who fought in the Revolution was laid in Baltimore recently under the direction of the Maryland Society of the Sons of the American Revolution.

Did You Inherit SCROFULA?

Scrofula is a scourge. It has been called "external consumption." Over 60 per cent of children inherit it. A large percentage of people die from its effects. It is called catarrh, consumption or a kindred disease at the end—but it was scrofula to begin with. It wasn't your fault if you inherited scrofula. It will be your fault if you pass it on to your children. It is a moral wrong if you allow your children to grow up and become a victim of its ravages when you can find a cure for scrofula as sure as

Yager's Sarsaparilla With Celery The Great Purifier

Scrofula is a blood disease. The impurities instead of passing away through the natural channel come out through the skin. Yager's Sarsaparilla with Celery is a blood purifier—the greatest that medical science and medical experience ever evolved. It takes the impurities from the blood and passes them out in the natural way. It makes rich new blood to take the place of the anemic fluid that goes through scrofulous veins. It creates an appetite and gives the body force to digest it. It makes an abundance of sound, healthy flesh to meet any emergency. Yager's Sarsaparilla with Celery is sold by leading druggists at 50c a bottle.

ELECTRIC PRINTING.

The chemicals used in the Friese-Greene Process. An account of the interesting process of electrolytic printing devised by Mr. Friese-Greene was given in a lecture by R. C. Darling to the Royal Artillery Institution last year and is published in the proceedings of that society. The object of the inventor is the supersession of printing ink, with its accompanying complications. The same presses and type can be used as heretofore, but instead of linking the type the latter is connected to the negative line of some source of electricity. The paper used is impregnated with suitable chemicals, while the pressure rollers are connected to the positive line. A current accordingly traverses the paper as it passes through the press, and the chemicals being decomposed thereby a sharp impression of the type appears on the surface of the paper, which is of course essential if the process is to compete with the other methods. By suitably selecting the impregnating salts prints can be obtained in a great variety of color. It has further been suggested that the method might be applicable to the typewriter, the ink-line ribbon being done away with and the prepared paper used in conjunction with metallic type connected to the negative main of an electric lighting circuit. A modification of this scheme has been suggested by Mr. Vren of the United States weather bureau. In this a little book the size of an ordinary type replaces the type wheel or keys. This book is built up of a very great number of very fine wires, each insulated from the other. These wires are connected in groups to the keys, the arrangement of each group being such that on putting it in circuit the letter corresponding to the key depressed is printed on the paper.—Engineering.
