Snaky Legislation.

It appears that almost every bill an emphatic negative response. presented before our legislature has a "snake" in it, and for this reason it time to prevent bad legislation as it does to pass the good. As has been said by one of the members of the House, "it is next to impossible to secure concentrated attention to the details of subjects of large and general interest to the state." It is absolutely necessary for the few expert "snake hunters" to be continuously on the alert, as the average member-especially green ones, serving for the first time—is liable to be wholly under the control of leaders and the famed

In all this old, sinning, sorrowing world, is there a being, apart from God himself, so quick to instinctively detect the presence of wrong, and whose judgments of moral questions are so certain to be correct, as a true woman whose heart from infancy has been tuned to the rhythm of the Eternal harmonies?

But woe to her, and those she loyes, if, through loye or pity for these subjects of her affection, she sacrifices this intuition of the right, upon the altar of their reasoning or philosophy.

John Winston was a good farmer. In the cultivation of the soil, in the care of stock, in much of nature's phenomena, he was well versed; beyond this his knowledge was limited. Of the great business of the world, he knew little; of its society, less; and of its trickery, duplicity, and sin, still less. Born and reared in the lowely valley of Connaught, of contented spirit, he had seldom been beyond the city of Leighton, on the lower falls of the Connaught river, at the extreme southern limit of the valley.

At the age of twenty, Winston was a fine specimen of manhood; tall and straight as an arrow, almost princely in carriage, noble forehead, eyes of

A NOTABLE MEDICAL DISCOVERY.

No event in the history of medical science is fraught with more importance than the discovery of the ideal combination of sarsaparilla with celery, that is, if the greatest good to the greatest number is the standard of comparison. There are millions of people to-day suffering from ailments which sarsaparilla and celery will cure. There are thousands of people in every country who could be saved from future sickness to-day by its

Ninety per cent. of the diseases which afflict mankind come through impure blood or disordered nerves. For the former, sarsaparilla has been the ideal cure for centuries. For the latter, celery in its concentrated form is the proved corrective.

The ideal combination of both these drugs was discovered after years of experiment. It was produced under the name of YAGER'S SARSAPA-RILLA WITH CELERY. It is today proving its worth by effecting wonderful cures in the manifold disorders which arise from impure blood and weak nerves. Wonderful cures are reported in cases of rheumatism, scrofula, catarrh, malaria, loss of appetite, biliousness, nervousness, female diseases, etc.

This blue is of course not a pure monochromatic blue, and the expression really means that it sums up the dominant note in the color scheme. What, therefore, the atmosphere may be considered to do is to stop out or absorb all the colors at the blue end of the spectrum, the residue filtering through to the earth as white light. When the rays of light first left the sun the blue rays were the strongest, but very soon after they entered the earth's atmosphere their progress was impeded, and of all the rays journeying from the sun they quickly became the weakest. On the other hand, the red rays, which at first were inconspicuous, had the facility of penetrating the earth's atmosphere and were the most in evidence at the end of their long journey. The first step, accordingly, to be taken when investigating a sunset is to realize that the white light from the sun which is commonly supposed to be composed of the seven primary colors should rather be thought of as a residue of the original radiations. A further important point is to bear in mind that all radiations of light are of different wave lengths. This fact indeed is at its very foundation, so to speak, of all sunsets, and it is the prime agency by which their flaming, It is due to this fact, for instance, that in the neighborhood of large towns the sun nearly always appears to set as a red ball of fire. In such localities, as the sun that isn't much, but"— Here the teller sinks to rest, the green rays are first absorbed by this bank of haze, and then the yellow, and, lastly, the orange and the red, the latter, more often than not, being the only ones to get through at all.

A careful observation of a sunset will reveal the fact that the colors fade in the above mentioned order, and the reason they do so is that they are of different wave lengths.

A similar kind of thing hap-pens in respect to the clouds, where dust pens in respect to the clouds, where dust readily accumulates and, reflecting the light, produces their brilliant whiteness. At the edges of the clouds, moreover, the atoms of dust are busily engaged in re-fracting the beams of light, and to this cause is due that brilliant fringe of brightness which so often adorns many of the largest clouds. Not only therefore does the atmospheric dust filter out of the blue light that tints the sky, but it also fabricates the pigments that cold the clouds, effects which can most readily be observed in contemplating the glories
