CROP DECLINE IN JULY FORECASTS

Wheat, Corn, Rye and Potatoes less than in 1922.

Washington, July 9.—Smaller crops than last year were indicated in the July forecasts of the Department of Agriculture, issued today, for wheat, corn, rye, white and sweet potatoes, rice, hay, apples and peaches. A tobacco crop 100,000,000 pounds larger than last year's and a large production of oats, barley and flax-seed were indicated.

This year's corn crop, although growing on a slightly larger acreage than was planted last year, will be some 14,000,000 bushels smaller than the 1922 crop, owing to a poorer condition July 1 than a year ago. Production this year was forecast at 2,877,000,000 bushels.

Winter wheat showed a slight improvement over a month ago, but spring wheat showed a deterioration of 7.8 points in the month. The combined production forecast, however is 4,000,000 bushels larger than the June forecast, with a total crop of 821,000,000 bushels now indicated.

Wheat remaining on farms July 1 is estimated at 35,634,000 bushels, compared with 32,359,000 on July 1 last year, and 29,838,000 bushels the average July 1 stock for the five years, 1917-21.

This year's potato crop probably will be 9,000,000 bushels less than last year's record production, this season's production being forecast at 382,00,- tobacco crop of 1,425,000,000 pounds, as forecast for this year, would make it the fourth largest ever grown, while a flaxseed production of 18,000,000 bushels, as forecast, would make it the largest crop in ten years. Forecasts of other crops, as of July

1, were as follows: Winter wheat, 586,000,000 bushels; spring wheat, 235,000,000; corn, 2,877, 000,000; oats, 1,284,000,000; barley, 198,000,000; rye, 68,700,000; sweet potatoes, 93,700,000; rice, 33,100,000; hay, 99,000,000 tons; apples, 189,-000,000 bushels; peaches, 48,400,000.
Government officials state that

Europe is not in a financial condition to buy all the wheat it wants, and that the Argentine and other countries. are competing for the foreign market, which weakens the American price. The following figures are given, as explaining the situation. Probable wheat crop this year,

830,000,000 bushels. Carry-over from last year, 140,000,-

000 bushels. Total American supply, 970,000,000

American consumption, 550,000,000

American seeding, 60,000,000 bush-

Exports to Europe, 125,000,000 bus.

Total disposition of the year's supply, 735,000,000 bushels.

These figures show a surplus in this year's supply of 235,000,000 bushels.

The Carroll Record Commended.

P. B. Englar, Editor Carroll Record:

"the flight of time" your editorial, "Has It Been Worth While" in July 6th. edition, confessing thirty years of youth, and the continuous service of the editor, and I desire to assure you, as one who has read almost every issue in the last twenty years that I do most emphatically believe that The Record has been "Worth While."

You have been clean when other papers were receiving large returns from questionable advertisements. You have kept the paper free from fraud in this line, and, few, I think, will arise to accuse you that you have accepted paid advertisements that have been accepted as true because you published them.

You have been right, I think, on the great Civic-Moral issues, when the thunders of metropolitan journalism all around have sneered and scoffed at all reforms and all reformers. You have been fair in your treatment of subjects, even when we have felt you were treating subjects with which you had but little sympathy, and which in your own mind we have surmised you were not in sympathy; but always you have been fair.

You have been decidedly a home journal, and the "official organ" of all that was worth while to your own town and community. Taneytown is a better place and better known because of Carroll Record. Yes you have been "worth while," and I doubt greatly if any other in your place could have taken the same matter and produced such a creditable rec-

And now, brother editor, in conclusion, let me wish you many years of the joys of appreciation, that we who receive the Carroll Record may continue to feel, that here comes a paper always welcomed because always clean, and right, and fair, and with it all a "newspaper" carrying the records of home to those at a distance.

Sincerely, WM. JAS. HEAPS, Baltimore, July 7.

Adams County Treasurer Zinn has already issued 752 fish licenses, as against a total of 340 for all of 1922. With the opening of the bass season there was an increased demand and it is expected that the thousand mark will be reached before the end of the DEATH OF DR. F. H. SEISS. Former Taneytown Physician a Victim of Apoplexy.

Dr. Franklin H. Seiss died at his home in Takoma Park, Washington, last Saturday evening, following a stroke of paralysis, received on July 5, aged 64 years, 9 months, 20 days. He was the last member of his family and leaves no near relative but his wife. Several cousins reside in Phil-adelphia and Cumberland, and a

Dr. Seiss practiced his profession in Taneytown from 1881 to 1920 a period of 39 years. His first location was at Thurmont. He was both successful and popular as a physician, and as a citizen stood high in the esteem of all. During his life in Taneytown he served as Burgess, member of the Council of the Lutheran Church, member of the County Board of Health, Secretary of the Board of Directors of the Carroll Record, and in many ways was actively identified with local affairs. He was a staunch friend of Taneytown, and the people of town and vicinity among whom he labored so long.

On removing to Washington he first held a position as assistant medical examiner in one of the governmental departments, but resigned on account of the confinement of office work, purchased a home at Takoma Park, and again resumed the practice of medicine. Quite recently, Dr. and Mrs. Seiss had purchased another home, to which they had made preparations to remove during the past

The body was brought to the home of Mr. and Mrs. D. W. Shoemaker, on Monday evening, and funeral services were held in the Lutheran Church, Tuesday morning, by Rev. L. B. Hafer, assisted by Rev. Guy P. Bready, followed by interment in the Littlestown cemetery. Monocacy
Lodge No. 203, A. F. & A. M., of which the deceased was a member, rendered the Masonic service at the grave. The funeral was one of the largest ever held in the church, thereby attesting the high regard with which he was held by the public.

Carroll County Sunday Schools.

The annual convention of the Sunday Schools of Carroll County will be held in Grace Lutheran Church, Westminster, on Tuesday, July 24, three sessions, morning, afternoon and evening, beginning at 9:30 A. M.

No effort has been spared to make the program interesting and helpful. Mrs. Karnell, of Philadelphia, who delighted all two years ago will again be with us. The night address will be by Dr. Lathan, of Chester, said to be an exceptionally strong speaker. The state officers will be present and there will be helpful conferences on different phases of Sunday School

Mr. I. H. Mack, of Hall-Mack Co., Philadelphia, and B. D. Ackley, noted composers, will have charge of the music and the singing will be a feature throughout the day.

Grace Lutheran Church has recently been renovated and remodeled at great expense and a new organ installed. This will give an excellent opportunity to visit it. Every school is urged to send at least three representatives, but every-I have read with a realization of | body is invited and will be welcome.

It has been found impracticable to serve meals at the church. Delegates are requested to bring a box lunch or they may avail themselves of the many places the town affords.

Freight and Coal Costs.

One of the important items in the cost of hard coal is the freight rate. In nine years this has been increased by almost 100 percent. There was a 40 percent increase in the general freight advance of August, 1920. A part of this was removed on July 1, 1923, by an order making a 10 percent reduction in coal and certain other commodities.

Between midsummer 1920 and July 1, 1922, the rate per ton on hard coal from mine to tidewater had been about $2.63. It is now about $2.34, a saving of twenty-nine cents per ton. To the consumer the reduction made no difference whatsoever, as consumers know. The tidewater consumer has been paying the roads sixteen cents of every dollar he spends for coal. The buyer at the outer rim of the zone of hard-coal distribution has been paying as much as thirty cents of his coal dollar to the railroads. There has been a suspicion, deepening to a conviction, that the roads are getting too much out of the coal dollar .- Phila.

_\W__ Presbyterians at Pen-Mar.

The 50th, annual reunion of the Presbyterian Churches of Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia and Pennsylvania was held at Pen-Mar on Thursday. A special pragram was arranged for the day and the services at the large tabernacle were in charge of the Rev. Lewis S. Mudge, LL. D., of Philadelphia, stated clerk of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church. He also delivered the principal address of the day. He is a noted preacher, orator and organizer, and his address was on "Presbyterianism and Progress."

A special feature of the service was the appearance of James McKinley Rose, a lyric tenor from New York. The concert of the day was rendered by the Pen-Mar Park Orchestra, under the direction and leadership of Prof. John Bohl, of Baltimore.

CONFERENCE OVER COAL SITUATION

Another Strike May Begin Sept. 1, if Union Demands are Refused.

The hard coal miners seem to be preparing for another strike, August 31. At any rate, they have refused, through leaders, to enter into any agreement to continue work after August 31, pending the result of negotiative now being held at Atlantic City. They demand a 20 percent increase in wages, and the abolishment of the 12-hour day. Samuel D. Warriner, spokesmen for the operators, offered the following resolution, that was refused by the miners;

"In view of the recent letter from the President of the United States to the United States Coal Commission and another letter from the commission to the operators and miners admonishing us in no uncertain terms that the public must be protected from the menace of another stoppage, the operators desire to make a proposal for which they bespeak a cordial response from the miners. "The suffering caused by the coal shortage of last winter, which is still fresh in the minds of the householder has made the public apprehensive of another cessation of operations. Un-der the circumstances, our first duty is to allay such apprehension and to pledge ourselves to the public that there shall not be a stoppage with a full consciousness of our responsibility, let us here and now resolve and publicly announce that if the completion of negotiations should be delayed beyond September 1 the mines shall, nevertheless, be continuously operated upon the understanding that the settlement when reached shall be retrocative to that date. Such a course will reflect credit on the industry and will revive faith in our joint determination to recognize and to serve pub-

Mr. Warriner spoke first on the demand of the miners for increased wages, which he said were not in accordance with what the industry could

"The report of the United States Coal Commission does not indicate that the earnings of the miners are incommensurate with living standards," Mr. Warriner said, "We beards," lieve the wages are adequate to meet present-day conditions. The present wage scales are the highest the industry ever enjoyed, and the Coal Commission has found a record of service and steadiness of employment which stands out in striking con-trast to that enjoyed in other intries."

The main contention of the miners is thought to be an effort to make a compromise that will recognize the union, and the check-off, which would mean the "closed shop" and the employment of only union labor, an issue hat has existed since 1902. Should this concession be granted, then an agreement to continue working after August 31 would follow.

Grade Crossing Accidents.

Despite all efforts to emphasize the perils of recklessness, grade crossing accidents on the Pennsylvania Railroad system, during June, showed an increase of 60% as compared with the corresponding month of 1922, and an increase of 115% over the same month of 1921. A large majority of these accidents involved motor vehicles.

Reports of casualties on the streets and highways, which appear daily in the newspapers throughout the country indicate that the experience of the Pennsylvania Railroad in this respect, closely corresponds to that of country as a whole. If the record of accidents at crossings for June may be regarded as the trend of such accidents generally, the showing for the present summer will be by far the most deplorable yet recorded.

An examination of the accident reports show that defective automobile brakes, disregard of crossing watchmen's signals to stop, stalling on tracks, high speed and other forms of reckless driving are the primary causes of the increase in deaths and injuries at highway crossings.

In a typical case reported last week the driver of a motor truck, accompanied by two other persons, attempt. ed to cross the track ahead of a passenger train after other people had stopped and were waiting for train to pass. The truck was struck by the train and one person was killed and two seriously injured. Many instances of utter disregard of crossing watchman's signal to stop are reported daily, and running through crossing gates while they are lowered for trains to pass, is a common occur-

No "Pay Up" Notices.

No reader ever sees requests in The Record for subscribers to "pay up." These requests, however, do appear in some weekly papers, and we wonder why? as the Postal laws require that papers be not continued beyond their paid for term, unless the same are specially ordered continued, when credit may be extended for a short

While a few object to the rule of discontinuing papers at the end of the paid for period, most persons prefer As a rule, those who are not willing to pay in advance for a paper, do not want it very strongly. The fact that The Record is found in a home, is pretty substantial evidence that it is both wanted, and paid for.

ETCHISON ON SCHOOLS. Urges Greater Economy in this Depressing Period.

The following is a portion of a special dispatch from Frederick, to the Baltimore Sun, in its issue of Thursday, relative to the matter of the conduct of public schools, now enlisting unusual interest.

"Attorney H. Dorsey Etchison, in a statement today, answered Dr. Albert S. Cook, State Superintendent of Education, in a controversy over expenditures for State and county schools. Mr. Etchison vigorously opposed the appropriation, asked by the County Board of Education schools for the fiscal year. His stand and a subsequent statement brought a reply from Dr. Cook, which was answered by Mr. Etchison as follows:

'I have read with interest the reply of Dr. Albert S. Cook, State Super-intendent of Maryland schools, to my blanket criticism of the system of public education of our State, made before the County Commissioners some days ago. It was just what could be expected from a self-defend-ing job holder of a finacially fat, upholstered, public office at the expense of a tax burdened people. Perhaps I could better characterize it as the usual politician's defense.

"Let us see by the book just where
Dr. Cook is, I quote from page 1277,
Laws of Maryland, 1922, I find that there is a State Department of Education and the State Superintendent receives $8,000 as an annual salary. I find that he has 13 others in his office who receive $34,000 for their services, with the sum of $23,150 as general expenses. Thus, the taxpayers of the State are paying $65,650 to one man, plus his office force and other things for giving us what I have said is a nonsensical waste in a State public and high school system, paid for by an army of tax payers who are now beginning to find out that they are an army of fools.

"It is time now for the poor farmer, mechanic and average toiler to mobilize themselves into a solid opposing public opinion and stop politically granted swollen salaries, expensive experiments and the wide swinging circles of supervisors, assistants and secretaries, all mixed up in the daily occupation of formulating a complex system, which each passing year makes confusion more confounding. "I have said the present system of education is extravagant and ineffi-cient. I am of this frame of mind on this matter. These are not the times, in the aftermath of a World War and agricultural depression on every hand, to exploit a public expense, elaborate programs of ologies and isms of science and arts and a whole lot of other fancies, all perfumed with odors

The members of the County Farm Bureau are very well satisfied with the quality of the bindertwine they bought co-operative through the Agricultural Corporation. Sixteen ton and two hundred pounds were bought co-operatively at a saving of over three hundred dollars to the farmers.

No Clover Hay Next Year.

The 1924 hay crop will be very shy of clover, from the prospects as they now show up in the wheat stubble. Due to lack of spring rains and the extremely dry months of June and July, the clover that did get a start has been burnt up.

There is a system of farming which is in practice in certain sections of Maryland which we may use to advantage in Carroll this year. Instead of seeding timothy and clover in wheat, the hay mixture is seeded in wheat ground in August. There are two advantages of this system, clean hay, and a sure crop.

Disc the wheat stubble from now until the first of August about every ten days, and then seed with a wheel barrow seeder, a mixture of 6 to 8 lbs. red clover, 4 to 7 lbs. alfalfa, 4 to 5 lbs. alsika, 6 to 8 lbs. timothy. This should then be followed with a pulverizer. If you don't have the machinery which every farmer should own, roll the land, seed with a wheelbarrow seeder, follow with smoothing harrow set back at a 45 degree angle. This system should give very fine hay crop next year.

The Employment Situation.

According to report from Pennsylvania state employment office, there is a shortage in the supply of month hands for on farms; the demand for skilled mechanics is not pressing, except for bricklayers and plasterers; hatchet and saw men and rough carpenters are in demand; slight reductions are being made in packing houses and some other lines; and in general, the demand for labor is on a stand-still

For women, the demand for steno-graphers and clerks has fallen off, and especially those wanting summer work only, are finding difficulty in getting places. Factory work is not plentiful, and where work is offered the pay is not attractive.

BOOZE RAID IN LITTLESTOWN.

But some co-operation should be given and some effort put forth to get the men "higher up," or those who are responsible for bringing the liquor into the town. There seems to be no question in the minds of some of the people that it is brought here by bootleggers from other places and that their trips are so frequent that they have become very regular."

Our Public Schools.

Our editorial page, this week, is largely taken up with comments on various phases of our public school system, a topic that is beginning to be widely considered, especially because of the heavy demands made by school officials for financial support. The subject is one that should be fairly considered, and to this end the press should give it ample space.

During the month of May the Pennsylvania Railroad System broke its previous high record for the movement of freight cars over its lines. A report compiled by the Freight Transportation Department shows that during this month the average mileage per car per day on the Pennsylvania Railroad System increased 8% over the month of April, the best previous performance. This increase in mileage is equivalent to an increase of more than 21,000 cars available for service.

Bureau of labor statistics says electricity is the only large item in cost of living which has decreased in price since 1917; all other mediums of fuel and light have shown large increases.

Harding, and Price of Wheat.

"Wheat declines 50 cents a bushel, during two years of Harding" was the caption of a recent newspaper article. It is a true statement, but the use of it was not to state the mere truth fact but to charge it up against Mr. Harding's administration, as a fault.

Mr. Harding, unfortunately for himself and his party, can not control the world production of wheat, nor can he keep up the price when the supply greatly exceeds the demand. It would be just as true, and just as unfair, to credit Mr. Harding for high prices where they prevail, for the benefit of certain classes.

A Public School Question.

An item of importance, not generally considered in connection with our public school system and its cost to the taxpayers, is the fact that the Catholic church educates practically 2,000,000 children, free of cost to the state. This involves several hundreds of millions of dollars invested in school buildings and cost of education.

The Catholic church, for the sake of giving its children a Catholic education, therefore indirectly contributes an immense amount, each year to the public cost of maintaining schools. Other denominations, also, maintain private schools, further adding to the immense saving, should all schools be of the public expense class. This is entirely aside from the merits of the two forms of educationmerely a view of the financial end, as the public is concerned, and raises the question of how the country would be able to conduct its school system with | this large additional expense added for more and larger school buildings, and greatly increased teaching per-

The state, of course, can not be expected to furnish, at public expense, the many various forms and degrees of education demanded by our big population for the country's needs; and there is no demand that it should. But, it is a debatable question, perhaps, whether the public schools are not strongly-too strongly-being directed toward giving a higher education, and more extensive in scope, than the real equities of the situation demands, at the expense of the public.

The Unfortunate Third Party.

The situation in England with reference to Labor Unions is worse, if anything, than in this country. A recent attempt to reduce wages a shilling a day, for ship-workers, caused the walk-out of thousands of Unionists, despite orders of the leaders to continue work. The immediate effect, has been the rotting of fruits and vegetables awaiting shipment, and the rise in cost of refrigerated meats and other items entering into the cost

The government had just shown, by figures, that the cost of living had been materially reduced, justifying a wage reduction, but the strikers deny the statements made. Temporarily, at least, the cost of living will be boosted, and even if the strikers win out, they will likely be worse off than if they had accepted the cut.

Unfortunately, such clashes and disagreements are not confined to employer and employed, but the heaviest loser is always the third, and largest, party-the non-union public, that apparently has no recourse but must stand on the side lines and watch the progress of the contest, while his own loss goes on.

Foolish Concern For the Poor Farmers' Children.

We read an article recently, written by a woman-perhaps a school teacher-that is a fair sample of the great amount of misconception concerning the children of farmers, and their short school attendance, usually blamed on the farmer. For instance-the cities must be grown and harvested with child labor, the farmer's wife is handicapped. If every child of school age attended school every day, think what wonderful things could be accomplished? The men, now soliciting votes for the fall election, should take this matter into consderation; that of reducing the cost of education in the counties. It could be done in this way: Use every teacher, every book, every desk, every school day. That would make the per capita about one-third less than it is now.

They should insist that the money pent on schools should not be wasted, that the school attendance officer be upheld by public opinion, as well as by law. If the State loses two dollars day for every day the high school student is absent, the State should find some way of subsidizing the farmer, so that he might be paid a little towards hiring a man to take the place of the boy or girl under 16, who must be at home working. Fifty cents a day spent to keep the boy in school will not only save the two dollars being wasted because he is not present, but will do much towards making that boy a contented farmer.

There are no rights for the child on the farm. If he is poor, he must stay at home and work, and if he is able to go to school, he is compelled all his life to be tied down by those who have not been able to get an education."

The average farmer is anxious for his children to have at least a good, practical education. Not the education of the so-called improved methods so in vogue these times, but a sound foundation in reading, writing, spelling, geography, grammar and arithmetic—a satisfactory working capital in mental training. That their children should attend through all the grades, then up to High school graduation, and perhaps a College course afterwards-which seems to be the line mapped out by many of our theorists as the only one that will give the children their full right—is too idealistic for argument.

It may be of great benefit to the country as a whole, and to the people as a whole, to enjoy cemplete higher education, but we doubt it. In fact, we are sure that it would not be beneficial. With universal high mental training comes distaste for physital training comes distaste for physical labor—unfitness for it, in fact. It cation has become both free and easy. carries with it a tendency toward overcrowding the professions calling for mental proficiency, and a corresponding deficit in those fitted for, and satisfied with, physical labor.

Much of the intellectual pity manifested for the handicapped farmers' wife, and his poor overworked children, is wasted—an evidence in fact of the ignorance of those who express the pity, and who may be, in some way or other, boosting their own pupils with the essentials of an edjob of teaching, or managing schools.

As a matter of fact, a lot of those who assume to possess a superior education can hardly write a legible let- | cor starving families, feed hogs, play ter, spell correctly, or solve an arithmetical probem in any degree complex without reference to books and the schools do it? Many people, and rules. The best sort of an education not a few very brilliant educators is one that fits its possessor to carry on the work he or she is best fitted to engage in. We must have farmers, mechanics, day laborers and tradesmen, and these do not need long course nor expensive educations.

The people of the world are happiest when employed and contented, and there is a quantity and quality of education that produces discontent, and distaste for much of the labor that is essential to the world's welfare.

Talk of "subsidizing the farmer" so that he may be "paid a little toward's hiring a man to take the place of his curriculum in order to make room for boy or girl under 16 who must be such courses."

"Due to the fact that the food for home working," is rank silliness in every word of it. Who would pay the "subsidy" and where would you get "the man?" And where would you get the other men needed to take the places of the boys and girls educated to leave the farms due to hiring "the

A lot of those who write and speak of the horrible benighted condition of the farmer boys and girls, ought to be tied up and muzzled. The average farmer is neither a tyrant, nor an inhuman ignoramus, nor are his children heading toward insane asylums and homes for cripples and incurables.

Public Schools Criticised.

Last week's issue of The New Citizen, Frederick, has a lengthy editorial on "The Public Schools" from which we clip the following extracts, as showing interest in, and dissatisfaction with, our present school meth-

"Mr. H. Dorsey Etchison has recently been saying a few things about the public school system of Frederick county. The proposed appropriation for the public schools which provoked his remarks is now a settled matter. But what Mr. Etchison said about the schools still deserves serious consideration.

Briefly, his objection to the present school system of instruction is that it neglects the essentials of sound education while emphasizing frills and flourishes. He is by no means the first person to raise this objection. Many educators the country over have been combatting this tendency for years. But Mr. Etchison is the latest person to agitate the subject in Frederick, and, as such, deserves much credit for bringing it before public attention.

There is unquestionably too much bogus instruction nowdays being palmed off, at the expense of the taxpayers, as education. There is an urgent and growing need for some definition of the subject. Everything from press agentry to plumbing and from political campaigning to money solicitation is being passed off as "educational" endeavor. Chatauquas, motion pictures, public playgrounds, publicity bureaus, advertisements and many other suchlike things all have

The effort to put education within the reach of all is a sort of frantic mania with great hordes of persons, who are well-meaning no doubt, but who are also thoroughly incompetent to grapple with such an abstruse problem as education. The consequence is that what they succeed in placing within the reach of all and sundry is not education, as they aver, but a make-shift that parades under the alias of education.

It would be very fine if the public schools, in addition to furnishing their ucation, could also teach them how to mend furniture, repair their plumbing fixtures, cook French Fried Potatoes, raise funds for starving babies, sucgames with children, take short-hand, keep expense accounts and do other practically helpful things. But can them, think that the scho are abandoning the essentials of education and trying to teach only the latter class of subjects.

The principle difficulty with our system of public education, as we see it, is that there are too many people with a great deal of time on their hands, and nothing but oxygen and nitrogen in their heads, who feel it is their duty to run the show. We do not question the good intentions of people who demand large appropria-tions for the establishment of courses in dish washing in the schools, but we do question the advisability of clipping, say, trigonometry from the

Flesh of Guineas Much

Like That of Game Birds Guineas are good layers; the eggs are good for cooking and table use, and the meat, while not as popular as chicken, is used extensively in hotel circles to take the place of game birds, which their flesh resembles very closely. The meat of old guineas is very tough, so they should be eaten before they are a year old, unless kept for breeding. They do not scratch like hens, so are very useful for eating bugs in fields and gardens. This suits them fine, for they dislike confinement, but are great foragers. When the guinea hen starts to lay you may remove some of the eggs, but this must be done very carefully and without touching any of the eggs with the hand. It is recommended that they be taken from the nest with a wooden spoon. Not less than five eggs must be left in the nest all the time the hen is laying. She will lay many more than are required for one sitting if properly managed. The extra ones can be marketed or used in the household, or set under hens or turkeys, but if, after the first five eggs are layed, there are not that many in the nest at any time when the hen returns to lay, it is said she will abandon the nest and start another elsewhere.

Some people say the guinea fowl can count five. If not she has a remarkable intuition, and it is well to humor her with regard to her peculiarities. They should not be confined with hens, as they are very domineering and will chase hens all around the yard or pen and prevent them eating with any degree of comfort.

Feed All Young Chicks Little but Do It Often

Young chicks should be fed a little at a time and often. They should be fed early in the morning and just before going to "bed" at night, and not less than two times in the intervening period. For the first two weeks they may be fed three meals of soft feed and two of hard, feeding less soft feed as they grow older.

No more moistened soft feed should be given at one time than they will eat up clean. If any feed is left it should be removed or it will grow sour and cause bowel looseness and dysentery. The finely cracked grains may be safely used from the start, but the chicks do not as a rule grow as rapidly as when a part of the feed is ground. When the chicks are from four to six weeks old the frequency of feeding may be decreased to three

From the very first chicks should be induced to exercise. Activity is a prime factor in promoting health and growth. Feed grain in the litter, and make them scratch for it. A little fine chaff or finely cut clover makes a good litter.

Decayed Animal Causes

Limberneck Among Fowls Limberneck is recognized by the fact that the fowl seems to lose control of its neck muscles, thereby allowing the head to hang down and touch the ground. The fowl seems powerless to raise the head or have any control of

The trouble, according to Harry Embleton, professor of poultry husbandry at Oklahoma, A. and M. college, is brought about by the eating of decayed animal matter. "The best means, therefore, of preventing further trouble is to look the premises over for a carcass of some kind," Embleton says. "In some cases we have found it to be rabbits, in others, snakes or carcasses of fowls. Castor oil given by means of a small funnel and a rubber tube inserted in the food passage seems to help somewhat in restoring the affected birds to health."

Light Brahmas Are Too

Large to Mature Early The Light Brahmas are used commonly for capons, but they are rather too large to mature during the comparatively short summer season. Nine or ten months would be required for them to mature if they were standard

POULTRY POINTS

The rearing of ducks for market on a large scale requires extensive capital and experience.

About 50 per cent of the chicks hatched die. For every six eggs used for hatching purposes one mature pullet is produced.

After the growing poults "shoot the red" as it is called, that is, after the bright red begins to show on their heads and necks, there is comparatively little danger of loss except through accident or hostile animals.

A flock of turkeys requires lots of water during warm weather. Be sure that a fresh supply, in a clean pail or keg, is always available.

Practically all the large duck farms are situated on streams of running water, and this water aids greatly in successful duck farming.

When hens become too fat the result is apt to be egg-bound, soft and irregularly shaped eggs, dizziness, apoplexy, liver complaint and kindred diseases.

HOW=

BRITISH LAND IS BEING TAKEN FROM CULTIVATION. -Great Britain would have been compelled to capitulate within eight or ten weeks if Germany had declared war in May or June, instead of in August, when the English had started gathering their harvest, is the belief of Sir Herbert Matthews, secretary of the central chamber of agriculture.

Britain is still reaping a little benefit from the land put under cultivation during the war, Sir Herbert states in the London Weekly Dispatch, but that land is rapidly passing out of cultivation. England today approximately consumes 35,000,000 quarters of wheat a year, and of this quantity produces about, one-fifth.

Prewar production was only 5,000,000 quarters for a consumption of 32,000,000, and soon 7,-000,000 quarters will be an optimistic estimate of the English output. The remainder must come from the plains of Canada, the great spaces of the United States, from Argentina, Australia and India.

Not quite so serious is the position in regard to meat. About three-fifths of the meat consumed by England is produced on home land. In a pinch, in this respect, the nation could carry on. No milk is imported, and the trade is prosperous, but milk products are not encouraged in Britain, as the farmers are unable to compete with cheese from America and Holland. Sir Herbert predicts that we may live to see the day when British butter will be a thing of the past. His panacea for these evils is some form of protection to encourage home growing.

TAPIOCA IN SOUTH AMERICA

How Indian Women Turn Out Condiment That Is a Favorite Article on Their Menu.

How the Indians of Brazil manufacture the starchy, jelly-like globules, called taploca, is described by Mr. Charles W. Mead in "Natural History." The Indian woman, he says, takes a large piece of bitter cassaca root in both hands and rubs it back and forth on a board studded with hundreds of sharp pebbles until the root is reduced to pulp.

When she has grated a sufficient quantity she presses as much water out of it as possible. For that purpose she uses as a press a long, nor row tube of basketwork called a tipiti, with a loop at either end. She forces the pulp into the press, which she then hangs up by one of the loops. Through the lower loop she inserts & long, stout pole, which she runs under some convenient object, which serves as a fulcrum. Then she sits on the free end of the pole, and her weight stretches the press and forces the liquid through the interstices of the basketwork.

The liquid is caught in a pottery vessel and is made into cassareep, the favorite condiment of the South American Indian.

How Fox Farm Was Founded.

Fifteen years ago Blake Vaunetter, a farmer's boy at Georgetown, Ont., caught a pair of ordinary wild foxes on his father's farm. Despite parental opposition he preserved them, and they became the foundation of the largest fox ranch in Ontario.

The home of fox ranching is Prince Edward island. There, in the seclusion and simplicity preserved by the tight little island that serves as a guardian of the Atlantic coast, the art of fox raising was begun many years ago by individual farmers who dug the progenitors of the present purest silver foxes out of their dens in the woods. For a long time these pioneers worked in secret, and it was many years before the world knew, before their neighbors knew, their source of revenue or the methods they pursued in securing it.

How to Escape Trouble.

The following tips for world tourists are contained in a book just written by Rev. Frank Tatchall, vicar of Midhurst, England, a seasoned traveler:

"If you are lost don't worry about starvation. The ordinary traveler can live on his own fat for a week, and he can sustain life by chewing pieces of his shoes.

"If attacked by a dog, shove your hat at him and, when he takes hold, kick him under the chin.

"If you get into a mob in the East, hurt one in the crowd, and hurt him quickly, and you will be able to slip

"To drive away homesickness, blues and induce sleep, sing and whistle in bed and let out piercing yells with your head wrapped in the bedclothes."

How to Remove Old Paint.

Probably the best way to remove paint is to apply a solution of soda and quicklime in equal proportions. The soda should be dissolved first in water and the quicklime added, the mixture being applied with a brush. A few moments are sufficient to remove the paint, which may then be washed off with hot water. To remove traces of the alkali, the wood should be afterward washed with vinegar or some other acid solution. The best way to remove varnish is to apply a mixture of equal parts of ammonia and water.

HAVE HOMES UNDER GROUND

In One Part of France Whole Villages Have Established Themselves Beneath the Soll.

In his account of the "Retreat of the Ten Thousand," after the failure of Cyrus the Younger to capture the crown of Persia from his younger brother, Xenophon (400 B. C.) mentions a peculiar tribe living in the Armenian highlands who dwelt under the ground with all their live stock. In some regions along the chalk cliffs of France one will find whole villages under ground, for the reason that the surface is valuable for vineyards. The owner digs a pit or quarry in the surface, forming a cellar, which is accessible from one side only. Then from the sides of the pit he cuts the rooms of his dwelling under the vineyard. The windows and door open into the pit, while the rock that is taken out is used for a fence.

In these chalk cliffs primitive man found shelter in caves or beneath overhanging ledges, where he also found flint for his tools. Later came the ancieut Gauls to dwell in these caves, which offered homes for a large popu-

ANCIENT CELTIC BELL FOUND

Believed by English Archeologists to Have Been Buried for Hundreds of Years.

The Celtic festival of St. Bridget was revived recently at Glastonbury, the first time for centuries that the anniversary has been observed. A service was held in the ancient chapel of St. Patrick, at the entrance of the abbey ruins, with its pre-reformation stone altar. Rev. Lionel S. Lewis, vicar of the parish, and a keen Celtic student, announced that there had recently been discovered in an old oak box from a farmhouse on the moors a curious bronze bell which proved to be identical in construction with St. Patrick's bell, so venerated in Dub-

The British museum authorities pronounced it to be undoubtedly an an- the air, you would think him particucient Celtic bell. According to tradition, St. Bridget, when she went from Glastonbury to Ireland, left behind a bell, and that discovered has every appearance of being the identical bell It was wrapped in extremely old linen.

The "Angelus" was rung on the bell at the close of the service by Mother Eve, superior of the Order of St. John | that catching "flying fish" is better the Baptist, St. Mary and Ct. Catherine. The tone of the bell was very rich and musical.-London Mail.

WORK THAT REQUIRES SKILL

Efficient Handling of Submarine Vessel Calls for Ability of the Highest Order.

The commander of a submarine must lie in wait for his quarry, with the nose of his boat pointing in the direction where he expects the enemy's vessel to pass. Then he has to estimate the speed of the approaching ship and her distance and to fire the torpedo at the point where he calculates she will have arrived when the torpedo has finished its run.

A naval officer says: "If any one wishes to appreciate some of the difficulties of submarine work let him sit down under a chart of any portion of the seas, suspended from the ceiling; let him punch a hole in it, and above the hole place a piece of mirror inclined at 45 degrees.

"Let him further imagine his chair and glass are moving sideways as the effect of tide. Let him occasionally fill the room with steam to represent mist. Let him finally crumple the chart into ridges to represent the waves, and then try to carry out the maneuvers that look so simple when the chart is spread out on the table and looked down upon in the quiet solitude of a well-lit room."

Greeting Him Sweetly.

We had a dog. I called him "Little Boy." He was a great pet. Whenever he wished to come into the house Ne would stand up and rattle the door knob with his paw.

One afternoon I heard a fumbling at the knob. I hurried to the door, but had some difficulty in opening it. The fumbling became more insistent.

"Just a minute, Little Boy," I called out. "Bad, bad Little Boy, not to wait one itsy bitsy minute."

I pulled the door open. The janitor gazed at me in blank amazement. He his companion in crime, a veteran benwas repairing the screen.—Chicago edict.

Bird Brought Calm Weather.

Fung, a fabled weather bird, of royal lineage, long-tailed and green of hue, has become one of the valued bits of property aboard the Oriental liner President McKinley, avers Leo Matthews, purser. Fung dates his origin back to a family of regal birds of the province of Hunan, China.

At any rate, Fung brought summer weather to the last round trip of the liner. Soon after the ship left Yokohama the wind rose and lashed the sea into combers. Fung perched on the compass. Immediately calm prevailed and summer skies accompanied the ship through 8,000 miles.-Portland Oregonian.

Couldn't Quite Place Him. George Arliss never tires of recalling an incident which occurred while he was acting the title role in Louis N.

Parker's "Disraeli." An earnest young lady in Philadelphia sought out Owen Wister, the novelist, and told bun that she had planned to see 'Disraeli,'" says Mr. Arliss, "but she first would like to read up on him. Here she found herself in great difficulty. "'You see, Mr. Wister,' she said, 'I know he is in the Bible, but I'm not sure whether he appears in the Old or the New Testament."-New York

Tracing Migration of Fish. To get a record of the migratory movements of cod, pollock and haddock, the United States Bureau of Fisheries plans extensive experiments in the Gulf of Maine. Many of these fishes will be caught and numbered and metal tags will be clamped on their tails. They will then be released, to go their own way. Where they go will be revealed later when fishermen netting the tagged specimens report the number and place where the fishes are caught.

Cattle Raising in Africa.

Southeast Africa, that part included in the British possessions, is reported to be as rich in natural grasses as any choice part of the world. It is too valuable for the rearing of cattle for slaughter; but it is predicted that in the next generation Africa will be the greatest cattle-producing country in the British dominions and in 50 years; one of the greatest in the world.

RARE EAGLE IN LONDON ZOO

New Arrival Has Easy Time of It, If He Can Forget He Is a Prisoner,

"Tim," a large white-tailed sea eagle from Mesopotamia, presented by Sir Percy Cox, has just arrived at the zoo and is vying with the sea lions in the profitable pastime of catching fish thrown by the keeper.

Though the newcomer is the sole representative of his species in the garden the white-tailed sea eagle was, at one time, fairly common in England as far south as the Lake district.

Now it is verging on extinction in these islands, there being only a few pairs left, which nest on the inaccessible cliffs of the west of Scotland and Ireland.

To look at this feathered giant of larly flerce and unapproachable, but "Tim's" appearance is deceptive, for he is really quite tame.

Under the tuition of his keeper, he is speedily becoming proficient in the art of aerial sprat-catching-which probably accounts for his docility.

"Tim" seems wise enough to realize than swooping at keeper's caps, as some of his kindred do, and for his good conduct he is occasionally rewarded with a nice home-bred rat, by way of a change.

Eagles, however, are treacherous birds, and the keeper is quite as watchful as "Tim" when in his company .- A. E. H., in London Daily

SPIDER NOT REALLY INSECT

Fundamental Difference Which Has Been Recognized by Those Who Have Studied the Subject.

Spiders and their near relatives, the scorpions, are much more closely related to lobsters than they are to true insects. Spiders and insects are both small, both have a number of legs, and both appear superficially alike. The differences between them, however, are of a major sort. First, as you will see if you examine one, a spider has no head. All real insects have heads. Herein lies a most fundamental difference. A spider's face comes directly to the thorax, like that of a crawfish. Every insect has eyes, both compound and simple. The compound eyes are usually large, occupying half or more of the entire head. Between them, in what would be the middle of the forehead, are three simple eyes. Spiders have eight (in some species only six) simple eyes. Each one is fixed and can see in one direction only. Some look forward; some sideways, and some upward, so that spiders are not blind by any means.

Advice Was Disastrous.

He was a newly admitted member of the ranks of married men and after having behaved himself for a period long enough to cause amazement to all those who had known him in the old days he broke out. He was on his way home very much under the weather and growing more timid as his street neared, says a New York Sun writer. "What'll I do?" he asked thickly of

"Throw your hat in first," said the old-timer. "If it comes out, beat it; if not, follow it in."

The advice was acted upon literally and now the newly admitted member and the old veteran are on the outs. The hat flung into the dining room landed on the table, broke two glasses, spilt a bottle of catsup on the floor and ruined the carpet, upset the table oil lamp and almost set fire to the house.

Health Talks by Radio.

In his nationwide campaign to prevent the spread of disease and to give impetus to his efforts for the medical education of the country, Dr. Hugh S. Cummings, surgeon-general of the United States Public Health service, has turned to the radio. Twice each week he sends his messages from the government radio station at Washington and from commercial stations.

The surgeon-general is a Virginian and was graduated in medicine from the University of Virginia. For a number of years he was quarantine officer at Hampton Roads, and most of his work prior to his present duties, had to do with quarantine regulations. At the time of his appointment he was in Naples fighting a typhoid epidemic.-New York Herald.

Tempt the Child's Taste. With the value of milk to the growing child so well known, it is a common occurrence for the school child to wish to carry milk to drink at recess time. This is a good habit, as it answers for both food and drink. The difficulty is in carrying it safely to school. The top of a stocking sewed together at one end and shaped into a handle with the edges stitched, or with a small piece of black tape sewed on for a handle, makes a very good milk carrier. If the child should stumble the carrier protects the little 1/2-pint bottle of milk. This may be taken through a straw, which may be obtained at school or carried in its paper container.

Odd Experience.

At high school we were preparing for our semiannual examinations. The night before the exciting event took place I had to go away and had not studied my French at all. That night I dreamed we were having our examination in French. You can imagine my astonishment when the teacher wrote the very same questions I had dreamed of on the board.

We announce the opening of our office in Carroll County for the practice of Chiropractic.

Our methods will be strictly Palmer Chiropractic. Nothing further can be said, for "Palmer" when applied to Chiropractic has the same meaning as "Sterling" when applied to silver.

We are here because we like Carroll County, and Chiropractors because there is much suffering and pain and unhappiness everywhere that is needless and which we know we can help. We like this county, like its people and made quite a few pleasant acquaintances; expect to make more and trust that, with time, many of them will grow into real friend-

Saturday, July 14th. Westminster, at Taneytown. Union Bridge, at New Windsor.

Wednesday, July 18th. Union Bridge, at Westminster. New Windsor, at Taneytown. Saturday, July 21st.

Taneytown, at Westminster. Union Bridge, at New Windsor.

Westminster 9-Taneytown 8.

In a game of hard hitting and thrills from beginning to end, last Saturday, Westminster had one run to the good, at the close. Taneytown had 11 men left on bases to West-minster's 7, which means that hits for Taneytown when most needed, did not come. Bonsack had rather the best of the pitching over Patterson, but after he had given two passes to first in the 9th inning, with no hands out, he retired in favor of Jenkins. The feature of the game was the batting of Fisher, who made a home run, 3 base hit, and a single.

Base Ball Notes.

For the first time since the opening of the season, our score of games played is incomplete. We have repeatedly solicited the managers of all the teams to see that the detailed scores are sent us promptly. We can only offer the service. It is up to them to co-operate, or not.

HENRY KITCHELL WEBSTER

Like so many of America's big authors, Henry Kitchell Webster began writing at an early age. His first work brought forth stories of mystery-thrillers; he specialized in

Then he turned from that form of fiction to material with more substance. For one of the leading magazines he traveled in the tropics and wrote articles, not purely for local color, but studies of the life with a sociological background. Later came his novels with their portrayals of real people and real problems, showing the power of Mr. Webster's mental equipment, for he is a widely cultivated person with a knowledge of the drama, music and literature. He speaks with authority on all of these sub-

MARY STEWART CUTTING, JR.

The telephone rang for the third time since they had sat down to dinner. The maid, in her flurried haste to placate the tyrant, set down the dish of fried eggplant from which George had been about to help himself on the sideboard out of his reach. George and his wife sat listening in silence. The maid returned and said, "I think it's for you, Mrs. Tait." George sighed and produced the evening paper, which had been tucked under his leg against this precise con-

He didn't particularly care about the news, of which he had already read the unexciting headlines, but he did want to register a not unamiable protest against these continual interruptions of their dinner. Emily insisted on making a more or less formal meal of it. She'd have been mildly annoyed with him if he'd gone to the sideboard and helped himself to the eggplant while the maid was at the phone. Then why couldn't she instruct Anna to say to these importunate telephoners that her mistress was at dinner and ask them to call her in an hour? It wasn't as if they ever had anything to say.

There was no Emily. He knew her argument as well as his own. Anna's morale would be ruined if they short-circuited her services by helping themselves, and then where would they be when they had people in to dinner? But if he didn't want the meal interrupted by telephone calls, why did he insist on their dining at the bucolic hour of six instead of seven when most of their friends did?

Of course Emily knew his answer to that, too. By dining at six they could, whenever they felt like it, go to the first show at the Alcazar and see the picture right end to, instead of from the middle of the fourth reel. Also they could find a convenient place to park the car. And they were home again by nine, so that if George had any evening work to do there were a couple of solid hours left for it. And as for setting an example of propriety to Anna, George felt it was rather hard. Ever since their first child, George, Junior, had been two years old, George, Senior, had been submitting to innumerable small infringements upon his personal liberty under the plea of setting a proper example. But now that Junior was in college, and his younger sister in a boarding school, it seemed to George at forty-three that he might be allowed to tilt back in his chair if he liked and empty his pipe scrapings into the dessert plate. There was no good saying any of that, either, for Emily knew it as well as he did.

Well, he knew her answer, too, though this last word was one she had never said. After all, they didn't live in New York nor in Philadelphia nor even in Chicago. They lived in Avonia, Illinois. George had a good law practice in Harrison county, but the great cities and the great corporations had never summoned him, and it was becoming clear to George—at fortythree—that they never would. Avonia and the movies and the bridge club and a month's vacation at Mackinac island was about his speed.

He doubted very much if Emily, as regarded her own potential speedgranted a conjugal partner of sufficient horsepower-acquiesced. Emily might well believe she was born for better things. She'd been a good deal of a belle in her day. She was too loyal to lament lost opportunities in his presence, let alone to fling them at him as missiles, but a consciousness that they might be lying ready to her hand made him walk warily. She should make the best of Avonia in her own way, and if there was a faint flavor | them." She pointed out that there | parts they had respectively played in

of absurdity about some of the refinements she insisted upon, and about the seriousness with which she took her committees and her classes and her clubs, it did not behoove her husband to rail, no matter how often they called her from the dinner table to the telephone.

He had had time to think as far as this, his mind slipping rapidly past the familiar landmarks just as his eye slid down the columns of the newspapers, before he perceived that Emily was not, this time, talking to any member of her drama committee, nor to any citizen of Avonia, nor to anyone she'd had the slightest expectation of hearing from. It was a man-George could tell that from the quality of her voice -and he seemed to be throwing her into a good deal of a flutter.

"Why-why, yes," she was saying. "Oh, but we'd love to have you! . Yes. That'll be fine . . . We certainly will. Only I'm afraid you won't find us very exciting. . . . Four o'clock Saturday then.

George, as she returned to the table, fastened his gaze upon the paper. When she was rattled she liked to be allowed to take her time. She sat down a bit heavily in her chair, drew a couple of long breaths, resumed her knife and fork, and then asked, "Did you hear any of that?"

"Not much." he told her. "I thought you sounded sort of surprised."

"I should say I was," she admitted, "when I hadn't heard from him for nineteen years. Calling up on the long-distance to ask if he can come and spend Sunday with us! Surprised!"

"Who?" George wanted to know. "I don't know why he should want to. He certainly won't find any material for a play in us. Still, it'll be nice to see him again. I don't suppose I'll know him." "Look here," George demanded,

"whom are you talking about?"

"Oh," she said, as if she had just heard his questions; but it was another moment before she answered it. "Why, it's Charley Hawkins-Hawthorn Hawkins-George, you know who he is!"

"I know who Hawthorn Hawkins is, but why do you call him Charley? And why does he call us on the long distance and propose to spend Sunday

"Why, he's giving the Sheldon lectures down at the University this year, and he looked up Avonia on the map and saw how near it was-so he phoned to ask if he could come."

"But why Avonia, and why us? If you know him as well as that, why haven't you ever told me anything about him?"

"George," she cried, scandalized, "I told you all about Charley Hawkins when we were first engaged-and you didn't even listen. He wasn't famous then, of course. And I haven't heard from him since the note he wrote with the wedding present he sent us. Now, for goodness' sake, don't ask any more questions, but let me eat."

It was from preoccupation rather than obedience that he let her alone until she rang for the maid. Then, "You haven't been writing to him, have you-telling him he was great and so on?" Her eyes flashed at him, but the entrance of Anna procured him a polite answer. "I couldn't very well write to him when I'd never seen one of his

"Ever read 'em?" he asked. "They are published, I suppose." She shook her head and waited until Anna went out; then she swooped upon him. "I never thought you'd be so silly," she declared, "as to be jealous. And about a man I haven't thought of for twenty years."

"Jealous!" he retorted furiously.

"What are you then?" she asked with an alkaline sort of smile, and he found the question unanswerable. "Well, I hope you will be decent to him anyhow.'

"I don't know whether I will or not," he told her. "That depends." She didn't speak to him again that night.

Two days later, coming home from a rather strenuous bout of shopping. Emily found her husband-home from the office a good hour earlier than usual-reading a small green papercovered volume, which he put down hastily as she came in, and then took up again and held out to her.

"'Three Plays by Hawthorn Hawkins," she read. "Why, where did that come from? I tried to get it at Street's, but they'd never even heard

"Came in the mail," he said. "I found it when I got here."

"Addressed to me?" she asked. "Why-yes. I believe it was. I opened the package without thinking."

"Charley sent them on, of course," she remarked; "so that I'd have something to talk to him about."

"I don't believe he did," George said decidedly. "Not unless he's anunusual ass."

She flushed angrily at that, but he went on before she could speak. "I said I thought he wasn't an ass, not that I thought he was. There'd have been a card or an inscription if it had come from him. Anyhow, I wouldn't thank him for it unless he gives you a lead. Read 'em and say nothing. And don't leave 'em out on the sitting room table where they'll be the first thing he sees, either." Her smile conceded that this advice was both friendly and intelligent. "But where did they come from?" she demanded.

"Search me!" he told her. "They don't postmark this fourth-class stuff. No. I didn't mean anything uncomplimentary. As far as I read in the first one, it seemed pretty good. I thought you might have sent to Chicago for wouldn't have been time. "Oh, well," he concluded, "I don't believe it's much of a mystery. Some old friend, most likely, that he told he was coming, sent it along so that you could surprise him. You'll read 'em tonight, I suppose."

She said she would, unless he wanted to go out somewhere with her; but he said he must go back to the office and work. "I'm going to be pretty busy between now and Monday," he

She looked at him sharply. You're going to be here tomorrow when he comes, aren't you?"

"Oh, yes, I'll be here-you bet." It was so evident, though, that the last brace of words had escaped him involuntarily that she forbore to remon-

They kept rather carefully away from Charles Hawthorn Hawkins as a conversational topic that night. Next morning, however, just before he left for the office, George uneasily broke the ice by saying, "Don't count on him too much, Emily. He may not come, you know—send you a telegram this morning."

She asked hotly why he said that, and added, as the suspicion struck her, "I believe you've been telegraphing him, yourself, not to come." But this injurious charge she at once retracted. "They're supposed to be sort of temperamental and changeable, that's all," he explained, "and I thought he might change his mind about this."

"You wish he would, I suspect," she "Yes," he answered, unhappily, "I suppose I do." She gazed at him a moment in mute exasperation. Then her expression softened and she gave a reluctant laugh. "I think you're the most ridiculous person in the world," she said. "I suppose you think he's coming out here to break up our happy home and get me to run away with him."

He looked so glum over this that she gave him up as hopeless. "Oh, go along," she cried. "But I'm going to kiss you first. And you will be home sharp at four, won't you?"

It was an hour earlier than this that she found him in the dining room unwrapping a package containing two bottles, one of gin and the other of Scotch whisky. "Got 'em from Walter Harbury," he explained sheepishly. "Walter has a regular bootlegger-comes around once a month. Been meaning to lay in something like this for quite a while." Her astonishment over this bit of unabashed mendacity made it possible for him to get on to something else. He put the bottles away in the sideboard, turned his back upon it, and gazed at her so intently that she frowned inquiringly and presently asked, "Well, what is it?" "Nothing," he said, "only I think you're looking great-just as you are." Now this was the unadulterated At forty, after two children and nineteen years of marriage and Avonia, she still looked infinitely desirable to George, and never more so than in the sort of clothes she was wearing now, a small felt hat crammed down upon her small round head (she'd been out doing some last-minute marketing), a sweater, a sport skirt, low-heeled shoes; her face moistly flushed, innocent of powder. It was true and Emily knew it was true. All the same, she saw through him and smiled derisively. "So you want me to look like this when Mr. Hawkins comes?" she asked, "Well, I won't. I'm going up to dress this minute." "I wish you wouldn't, Emily," he pleaded. "I don't want you to dress up for this chump. I don't want you to do anything-special for him. I don't see why you should. You don't care anything about him, do you? Nor about what he thinks?"

Her flush deepened as she met his look. She reached out suddenly and took hold of him by the ears. "Idiot!" she said. "Idiot!" But in the interval between the two words she kissed him, and she did not dress up for Mr. Charles Hawthorn Hawkins.

Perhaps because her husband's performance occupied the first place in her attention, she found it hard to remember what a celebrity Charley Hawkins had become.

He was curiously unchanged, through all his changes. The twenty pounds or so he had put on hadn't made him look older: had served only to accentuate the plump, cherubic look of boyish innocence there'd always been about him. He talked about himself a lot, just as he'd always done. Emily shot an uneasy glance at George now and then; for instance, when Charley spoke offhand of the foremost American actress as Ethel. She wondered whether George was saying to himself, "Ass!" But apparently George was not. He seemed to be enjoying the gossip of the theater as much as the tales of Capri and Tahiti and other wondrous places the playwright had inhabited.

Emily herself didn't talk much. They drifted back occasionally into reminiscence, but since this, of course, excluded George, they didn't go far with it.

George had spoken of being busy, of the amount of time he'd have to spend upon a case that was coming up Monday, but he showed no signs of going off and leaving them to their own devices. She didn't know whether she wished he would or not. Intrinsically she wasn't especially anxious to be left alone with Charley, but if George was staying away from his work in order to watch them, she was furious with him.

Only, it didn't seem like that. The two men got around to the war, at last, and the humble but absorbing it, and after an hour of this, she bade them good-night. This was insincere, so far as it was addressed to George, for she fully intended staying awake until he came to bed, and asking him a few questions, but her modest share of the unwonted alcohol made her sleepy, and she never knew how late the two men-and the bottle of Scotch-sat up.

She got no chance next morning, either, for a private talk with George before they met their guest, and in consequence George's calm announcement of the day's program and his total elimination of himself from it fell upon her like a thunderclap. She caught him alone a few minutes after breakfast and asked him what he meant by it.

"I don't mean anything by it," he protested. "I have got to work all day, just as I told you. Hawkins understands all right. I told him about it last night. He's got to leave this afternoon and there's no good Sunday train from here, so it seemed decent to say that you'd drive him over to Rockport."

"You're simply—throwing me at his head!" she protested.

She detected a touch of bravado in the way he said, "Nonsense! He came to see you, didn't he?" But Charley was already coming downstairs with his bag, so there wasn't time for anything more.

Well, the events of that day were in George's head, then, whatever they turned out to be.

George bade their guest a cordial, almost paternal farewell and, clapping his hat a little too much on one side of his head for a Sabbath morning and an hour when he was certain to meet their neighbors going to church, strolled down the street in the direction of his office.

It was seven o'clock that evening when she stopped their car at the curb after her return, alone, from the fifteen-mile drive to Rockport. George was reclining, very much at his ease, upon the Gloucester swing on the

"Hello!" he called to her. "You back already? Had a good day?"

She chose to regard his second question as of a piece with the first, and she came up the front steps before she spoke at all.

"I suppose you're famished for supper," she remarked, ". . . if you've been working all day." "Oh, I got home about an hour ago and scrambled myself some eggs. How about you?" "I'm not specially hungry," she said.

"I'll get myself a glass of milk by She sat down facing him. "George," she demanded, "why did you send for those three plays of Charley's?" He sat up. "Why did I send . . . ?" "It was either you or Anna who sent for them," she interrupted. "Charley swears he didn't send them and that he didn't say anything to a soul about coming out here." He lay back again. "Oh, all right," he conceded. "I telephoned to Chicago for 'em the morning after I found out he was coming."

"But why?" "Oh, I don't know. How could I know what he was going to be like? I didn't know what he was coming for. So-well, I wanted you to be-ready for him.'

She took a minute or so to digest this reply. "I suppose you mean," she mused, "that you thought he might be coming out here to see how much of a-hick the girl was that he wanted to marry once, after she'd lived twenty years in Avonia. And you wanted to-fix me up so he wouldn't laugh. I suppose that afternoon dress Miss Maitland made for me doesn't look like much."

"Oh, d-n!" he said, and got to his feet. "Look here, Emily! You're all right in any dress. It wasn't you I didn't feel sure about. But he might have been any sort of ass. Of course, I saw he was all right before I'd talked with him ten minutes."

"No," she said, "you needn't have worried about that." She let the voltage accumulate during a longish silence. . Then she added, "He kissed me this afternoon. He'd been rather-sentimental all day, and when I said good-by to him he kissed

"Well," said George, after a silence of his own, "he certainly is a darned nice fellow.

She stared at him, speechless. "Oh, I'm not much surprised," he went on. "You see, he told me about it last night."

"Told you, last night!" she echoed. "He didn't say he was going to kiss you," George exclaimed. "Said he'd always been romantic about you, and all the more after he'd got old enough to realize how kind you'd been to a ridiculous, priggish kid. He said you'd contributed more to his education than anybody else he'd ever met, and he'd always felt grateful to you. Been wanting to come to see you for years, but was afraid to. Scared to death, he said he was, until he saw you were just as you had been; hadn't changed a hair. Actually wrote a telegram to say he wasn't coming and then tore

He perceived now that she was crying. "I don't blame him for that, a bit," he went on. "I think he showed darned good judgment. Because you are a peach, Emily, and that's the

He patted her awkwardly on the shoulder. "Come on in, old lady," he concluded. "What do you say to some scrambled eggs? You're hungry, that's all the matter with you."

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOP-IC—Peter's Failures and Successes.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC
—Peter's Weaknesses and Strength.

I. His Name. (John 1:42).

The name which he bore when introduced to Christ was Simon, which means "hearing." But Jesus gave him a new name-"Peter," which means "rock." This showed what he was to become.

II. His Call. (John 1:41, 42). His brother Andrew brought him to Christ. This brought him into fellowship with the Lord. From ordinary discipleship he was called to special ministry (Luke 5:10). From being a fisherman he was called to catch men.

III. Peter's Character. 1. Sincere. What Peter was at heart could be read on his face. He was free from duplicity. People could understand him. Because of this characteristic they could tell when he was lying. Yet even when people knew he was in error they could believe in him. He seems to have been ignorant of the word "diplomacy."

2. Prompt. He had the ability to decide and act quickly, as the occasion demanded. This made him a real leader. His action at the empty tomb was an example of his promptitude. John outran Peter, but Peter was the first to enter the tomb. When Cornelius sent for him at Joppa he responded without delay.

3. Courageous. While Peter played the coward sometimes, he was for the most part a brave man. No doubt it was through cowardice that he denied the Lord, but it was his courage that brought him to follow the Lord into the palace of the high priest.

4. Intense. He felt keenly and acted with vigor. Whether right or wrong, what he did he did with all his might. When he preached it was with passion. No finer example of burning eloquence can be found than his Pentecostal sermon.

IV. Peter's Confession of Christ (Matt. 16:13-18, 21-23).

The disciples had been with the Lord for several years. They had heard His mighty words and seen His mighty works. Various opinions were extant about Him. It was now necessary for them to have a definite conception of Him. The Master-Teacher new the necessity of having the disciples get the right conception of Himself.

1. What it Was (v. 16). It involved His Messiahship--"The Christ," and deity-"Son of the living God." This is the burning question today. Those who have the right conception of Christ's person and mission have no trouble in the realms of science, philosophy or ethics.

2. Christ's Commendation (v. 17). He pronounced him blessed. Truly he was blessed, for he both possessed and confessed the Christ. The evidence that Peter was blessed was that he was in spiritual touch with the Father in Heaven.

3. Peter's Blessing (v. 18). Christ declared that he should be the foundation stone in His church. Christ is the chief cornerstone on which the church is built. Christ's person and Messiahship was confessed by Peter, and on this rock is laid the foundation of apostles and prophets (Eph. 2:20). All believers are living stones of this house (I Peter 2:5).

V. Peter's Restoration (John 21:15-

Peter grievously sinned in denying the Lord, but he made a confession, shedding bitter tears of penitence over his sin and folly. The Lord tenderly dealt with His erring disciple and restored him. In this restoration He brought to Peter's mind the essential qualification for his ministry. Love is the pre-eminent gift for Christ's serv-To impress this upon him, he three times asked the question, "Lovest thou me?" Three classes of people were to be served: (1) Those beginning the Christian life-"Feed my jambs." (2) The mature Christians-"Shepherd my sheep." The shepherd needs to protect and feed the sheep. Love is the one essential equipment for this service. (3) The aged Christians-"Feed my sheep." Love is needed in dealing with the fathers and mothers in Israel.

Injuries.

Rather wink at small injuries than to be too forward to avenge them. He that to destroy a single bee should throw down the hive, instead of one enemy, would make a thousand.

The Inner and the Outer 2 Corinthians 4:16-18; 1 Samuel 16:6-13

"The Inner and the Outer" indicates two different realms. First, it speaks of the difference between appearance and reality. The outer or outward appearance is that which man sees; the inner reality is that which God sees. In other words, man looks at us while God looks through us. When Samuel looked at Eliab, he saw only the outward apearance— "the height of his stature," but God saw the inner life. In God's estimate it is life, not bulk, that counts. Quality, not quantity. In spiritual quality and capacity David was much better than Eliab. This is the determining factor, for the usefulness of any man is measured by his spiritual pow-

"The Inner and Outer" sometimes indicates the difference between the natural man and the spiritual man. 1 Corinthians 2:14, 14, gives an example of this. The natural man is the one who lives on the plane of the bodily senses and sees and cares only for the present. He walks not by faith but by sight. He endures not "as seeing him who is invisible," but as one to whom only visible things are real. On the other hand the spiritual man lives in the power of the inner life. In the words of 2 Corinthians 4:18, "We look not at the things which are seen but at the things which are not seen; for the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal."

"The Inner and the Outer" some times denote the difference between the old nature and the new, referred to in Scripture as the old and the new Romans 6:6; Ephesians 4:22 and Colossians 3:9 throw light on this. The old man stands for the fallen and corrupt nature with its tendency evil and its expression in outward life. The new man is that holy nature re ferred to in Ephesians 3:16 as "the inner man." This holy nature is imparted to us in the new birth. It is that in which the Holy Spirit dwells and which He renews and energizes so that the Christian believer may strong in grace and victorious in life. Read carefully Ephesians 3:14-21.

WHY=

Disaster Overwhelmed the European Nations Long Ago

The Mediterranean sea was once a string of small lakes. Its bed was several hundred feet below sea level, in the same fashion that the Caspian and Dead sea basins are still below sea level. This region has been an area of excessive evaporation for the last forty or fifty thousand years, and the waters in it have trouble in maintaining themselves. Not enough rain fell then to keep the Mediterranean basin full, nor does enough fall now to fill it, were the Strait of Gibraltar and the Suez canal closed.

Some ten thousand years ago, or perhaps less, when the inhabitants of this region were just emerging into civilization, a disaster overwhelmed whole nations, comparable only to the flood in China when the Yellow river changed its mouth. In those days the land below sea level supported many people. No one dreamed that it was under the level of the ocean's waters, for no one had ever traveled as far as Spain to see the Pillars of Hercules. The Strait of Gibraltar was above water then. A small river flowed there, heading among the hills of which the massive rock of Gibraltar is a remnant. It meandered down to the Atlantic in the usual fashion of rivers. all unconcerned with the fact that the land over the ridge behind it was lower than the slope down which it flowed.

The remains of this river are still there, below the waters between Cadez and Tangier. Soundings on the bottom reveal it:

SCIENTIST ALWAYS AT WORK

Why It is impossible to Place Any Limit on Discoveries That May Be Made.

Every year adds to our scientific knowledge, yet at the end of each year it seems that there are no epoch-making discoveries yet to- be made. A century ago the French mineralogist. Hauy, said electrical discoveries had reached a point where no important steps remained.

Yet electricity was in its infancy and Michael Faraday in his basement room was working out the relationship between electricity and magnetism, which led to the dynamo and the radio.

As late as 1894 a university catalogue contained the statement that future progress in science was to be expected only in working out principles already discovered. In the following year Roentgen discovered the X-rays that led to radium and the electron. It was thought long ago that all the beasts of the jungle had been discovered and named, yet the okapi was not found until 1900. The scientific discoveries of the Twentieth century have been more numerous than in any previous century and they have been

Why Sun Fades Colors.

Some colors fade in sunlight. Why? Sunlight is made up of a band of gerous and arduous work of a switchcolors which we can see, ranging from | man. red to violet, and of certain other rays which are invisible to our eyes. Some of these rays, known as "actinic" rays, are those which so often destroy colors. The chemical pigments in dye stuffs are, of course, liable to chemical action, and this action is exercised by the actinic rays, in the same way as they have a chemical action upon the film of a photographic plate. No dyestuff will withstand all chemical actions; the curtaining that will be "fast" to the. most glaring light may not be able, for instance, to stand salt. It depends upon the chemical nature of the pigments used by the dyer. If stuff is bought containing pigments chemically subject to the actinic rays, then that pigment will be oxidized, or literally burned up by the light.

Why Wood Has Superseded Iron. Demountable wooden bins have been introduced as a successful and economical substitute for the light galvanized iron containers commonly used by the growers of the Northwest. The new bin is made up of 1 by 8-inch boards, from 6 to 8 feet in length, which are placed side by side and fastened together by wires, which are stapled to each unit. By using a greater or less number of boards, bins of any capacity may be built. The fin-Ished product may then be readily set up in any desired location for the reception of grain.

GAVE INSPIRATION TO POET

Thoughtful Kindness of Elderly Couple Responsible for Lines That Have Won World Fame.

Sam Walter Foss, the author of the poem, "The House by the Side of the Road," was an enthusiastic traveler. On one of his trips through New England he came, at the top of a long hill, to a little unpainted house, set almost in the road. At one side was a signpost pointing to a well-worn path and sign, "Come in and have a cool drink." Following the path he found in the side of the bank a spring of icecold water, above which hung an oldfashioned gourd dipper, and on the bench near was a basket of apples with another sign, "Help yourself." He found a childless old couple in straitened circumstances, with the rocky farm as their only source of livelihood. But it was rich in the delicious spring of water and an abundance of fruit, so a sign was placed guiding to the water, and from the time of the ripening of the first purple plum to the harvesting of the last red apple, a basket of whatever fruit might be in season was placed near, that anyone passing might rest upon the long hill and refresh himself. The old gentleman explained that they were too poor to give money, so took this way to add their mite to the world's well-doing.

The beautiful thought so impressed Foss that he immortalized with his pen the ideal life of helpfulness.

IS ANCIENT SECRET ORDER

Odd Fellowship Has Long Flourished, Though Its Foundation Would Be Hard to Trace.

The actual origin of the name is as obscure as the foundation of Odd Fellowship, concerning which all that is known is that the earliest lodge was the Loyal Aristarchus, which met in London in 1745. To this source may be traced the Manchester Unity, established in 1813, and now the largest friendly society in the world.

At the outset the order adopted a rule: "That any brother of the independent order who shall be guilty of assisting any secret society of women or attending their meetings shall be suspended for 12 months for the first offense and for the second shall be expelled from the order forever." The Odd Fellows, like other friendly societies, was illegal prior to 1850, and on many occasions was robbed with impunity. One of its officials applied to his own use about £4,000, which had been subscribed for the relief of sufferers through the Irish famine, and yet the society had no legal redress.

Changed Telephone Numbers

Calls for a telephone number that has been changed or discontinued are referred to a special operator whose duty is to supply the appropriate information.

This special operator asks you: "What number are you calling, please?" This may annoy you because you have just given the number you desire and you cannot understand why you are asked to repeat it. But it is necessary in order to advise you of the circumstances.

THE CHANGING OF NUMBERS BETWEEN THE ISSUING OF DIREC-TORIES IS ONE OF THE PRINCIPAL REASONS CALLS ARE REFERRED TO A SPECIAL OPERATOR. Numbers must always be changed when subscribers move to another central office area and sometimes when they change their class of service.

Seeing Lovely Old Things With New Eyes-

Several folks, upon learning that we were locating in Carroll County, expressed surprise that Californians could find anything attractive in Maryland. We, on our part, were surprised to find how some of you underrate the beauty and attractiveness of these little towns and the countryside. True, the west is marvelous and magnetic but at the same time there is much through this Blue Ridge and Cumberland country that is just a little bit finer than will be found anywhere else between Sandy Hook and the Golden Gate.

Now that is a pretty good sized piece of country as I know, having watched my speedometer click off some five thousand miles since leaving the Coast, but seeing is believing and if you think there is any finer part of America than about here just follow the path of the sun for three weeks and see. Nowhere will you find such loveliness as you can see from the tops of any of these hills around here as you look over this well kept, well cultivated community. Just as an instance; take the architecture of the older houses, churches—yes and barns even. They have a charm all their own. And the people and the hospitality of them, say.....but then I am talking to these same people and I don't want to make them blush.

The finest thing of all though, it seems to me, is that everything is honest-to-goodness American; the given names and the sir names. The names of counties and towns and roads. The people themselves are American and do things in American ways. I suppose this is quite in order though, seeing that this is in the country where Uncle Sam began business.

Once out in the Arroyah Seco grove, which is between Los Angeles and Pasadena, I heard a gathering of people singing "Maryland, My Maryland." It was the Maryland State Association holding its annual picnic. A group of you folks temporarily away from home. And they were singing with feel-

I thought to myself "How do they get that way?" Now I know. I easily understand.
