

THE TELEPHONE IS 50 YEARS OLD.

An Interesting Sketch of a Great Invention.

On March 10, 1876—just fifty years ago—the speaking telephone was born—a feeble infant destined in the beginning to be despised and laughed at by all the world save only its inventor and a few men of imagination and vision.

For many years previous to the invention of the telephone the idea of transmitting speech electrically had been dreamed of by scientists and inventors. But it remained for Alexander Graham Bell, a young and imaginative experimenter, working with apparatus to devise an "harmonic telegraph," to hit upon the invention which was to transform the dream into a reality. Even then, after the young enthusiast had conclusively demonstrated that elementary sounds could be transmitted by wire, his backers urged him to stick to his "harmonic telegraph," which they were sure could be put to some practical use.

The years from 1874 to 1876 were hard and discouraging ones for the young inventor. On a meager salary as a tutor of deaf mutes, he lived from hand to mouth and devoted all of his spare time and energy to his experiments. With Thomas A. Watson, himself a mechanic and electrician of no mean ability, he bent his entire efforts towards running to the ground his will-of-the-wisp of a "speaking telephone." "If," he said to Watson in 1875, "I could make a current of electricity vary in intensity, precisely as the air varies in density during the production of a sound, I should be able to transmit speech telegraphically."

On that memorable tenth of March, fifty years ago, in the little garret workshop in Boston, the first intelligible sentence was transmitted by telephone. Watson, hot and dusty, was in the basement of the house with a rude instrument connected by wire with a similar instrument in the attic. Suddenly the telephone became articulate. It said, clearly and distinctly, "Mr. Watson, come here, I want you." Many and varied were the troubles that beset the young inventor for a number of years following the granting of his patent. He was harassed by gibes and ridicule and his brilliant invention was condescendingly labeled "an ingenious toy" in the public prints. To make a living and to popularize his telephone he was forced to give a series of lectures explaining his invention, in which the talented Mr. Watson sang in a penetrating voice into an instrument some miles away and had the satisfaction of hearing his efforts widely applauded by an unseen audience.

Recognition came at last, however, and ten years later telephones were not only tolerated but depended upon by many business houses, despite the poor and uncertain quality of the service. Since then, the growth of the telephone industry has been nothing short of astounding. Today, the Bell System serves more than 16 million telephones in the United States; it employs an army of 332,000 people to maintain its standards of service to the public.

In the territory of the Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Companies, operating in the District of Columbia and the States of Maryland, Virginia and West Virginia, there are 522,000 telephones. To serve your present and future needs, we expend each year more than eight and a half million dollars for additional plant and equipment.

Home-maker's Club Meets.

The Taneytown Home-maker's Club held a Baby Clinic on Thursday afternoon in the Firemen's Hall. Dr. Stone Miss Mannahan, Miss Baetjer with Dr. Meckley, baby specialist in charge.

Fourteen children were examined and one school age child operated on. Dr. Stone pronounced this the most interesting clinic held for some time.

Down stairs a very interesting demonstration of quick drying paint was held at the same time. Those who do not avail themselves of these opportunities miss quite a bit of interesting and valuable information.

Rev. Dr. Singmaster Dead.

Rev. Dr. J. A. Singmaster, president of Gettysburg Theological Seminary died last Saturday morning from an apoplectic stroke received on Monday night, from which he was unconscious from that time until death. His age was 73 years.

He occupied numerous high positions in the Lutheran Church, and was president of the General Synod at the time of the merger of various Lutheran bodies into the United Lutheran Church in America. He was completing his 25th year at the Seminary as Professor of Theology, and his 20th year as President.

His wife, four sons and a daughter, survive, the most widely known being his daughter, Elsie Singmaster Lewars, the talented writer of short stories for some of the best publications of the country.

Prize-fighting—or something like it—is now part of the athletic games in some colleges. Well, as long as football is allowable, there is not much argument to be made against prize-fighting—or even bull-fighting. Even the Youth's Companion, presented a student fight story, last week.

RADIO BROADCASTING.

The Program, and their Relation to Advertising.

Last week, our newsy neighbor, the Thurmont Clarion, published an excellent article on Radio broadcasting that we take the liberty of reproducing, as it is not marked "copyrighted," and we are sure it will be interesting to the growing population of Radio "listeners in."

"A year or two ago, or back to when general broadcasting began, some of the broadcasting stations rented their equipment for a specific sum to concerns desiring to use it for advertising purposes, and this concern would come on the air and talk you deaf, dumb and blind about a certain safety razor, corn remover, washing powder, etc., and the comparatively few who then owned radio sets thought it great because they were hearing it without the aid of wires. However, in a very short time the American public demanded some entertainment and refused to listen to a long lecture on a commodity, with a little music thrown in. More and more music was added until the programs got to be about three-fourths music which was, sometimes, from a player piano, talking machine, etc. Then the U. S. Government issued licenses and rules for broadcasting, and among other things mechanical music was prohibited.

During this time broadcasting stations were improving, both in machinery and service, and today, while the stations to a certain extent work on the same principal, renting their equipment, the plane has risen so high that there is really no comparison. For instance, station WEAH has become the largest commercial station of the world. It is owned by the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, together with a chain of stations over the country. This chain when hooked together, give daily, at intervals, time signals, news items, shopping news and service, musical programs, church services, etc., from which they probably receive no revenue. But at other hours of the day they have various programs given by some firm for a commercial purpose; and while this firm won't talk for one half hour about its goods as they once did, they pay a handsome price for the use of the station.

The station announcer is the voice you'll hear. He will say "this program is being broadcast through the courtesy of so and so, makers of so and so." The public accepts this bit of advertising as negligible and are willing to hear it repeated occasionally during the program in return for the absolutely first class entertainment to follow. We know who is responsible for that particular program, and because the company knows that we know it, they consider their so-many-thousand-dollars-an-hour rental for the use of the station equivalent to the same amount spent in other forms of advertising.

They also know that if they give an excellent program we'll listen to them next week and in that way keep their name before you.

The WEAH receives from its rental hours sufficient funds to keep a staff of their own and supply entertainment during other hours.

WEAH was simply used as an example—many stations work over the same plan. Many hotels in large places operate stations and these are their own advertisements; but they also rent time, but not as often as a purely commercial station. There are many variations on the above principles.

Now and then a station is found that will not rent to anyone. One of these, WBAL, at Baltimore, is owned by the Gas & Electric Company, of that city, and is their advertisement. KDKA and other stations owned by large corporations are to an extent, semi-commercial and can be rented.

When the commercial station is broadcasting programs of their own they use every means to give us the best possible service and entertainment so that we will "come back" and listen again. Each station wants the largest following possible, for when they are sure of a big audience they stand better chances of receiving large contracts. This "following" can be likened to the circulation of a magazine—the advertiser desires the station with the most listeners for results.

It is claimed that the average firm advertising in this way one night a week, mentioning their firm name at the opening of the program, receives returns at least equal to those received from any other way of advertising.

Most of the broadcasting stations now have slogans which they announce together with the call letters of their stations. Some of these slogans are made up of words starting with the letters of the call, for instance; WIOD, the new municipal station of Miami, has for a slogan, "Wonderful Isle of Dreams." Others have slogans otherwise selected; WBAL's slogan is "The Voice of Baltimore." However, the "BAL" in WBAL stands for Baltimore, as "JAX" in WJAX stands for Jacksonville.

Here are some of the slogans used in conjunction with the call letters; WBBM, Chicago, "World's Best Broadcasting Medium;" WCAU, Philadelphia, "Where Cheer Awaits You;" WLS, Chicago, "World's Largest Station;" WFAA, Dallas, "Working for All Alike;" WGBU, Fulford by the Sea, Florida, "Weather, Golf, Bathing Unsurpassed;" WIP, Philadelphia, "Watch its Progress;" WMBF, Miami, "Wonderful Miami Beach, Fla.;" WRNY, New York, "Wonderful Reception Now Yours."

FARM LEGISLATION IS BEFORE CONGRESS.

Bill Wants the Government to Purchase Surplus.

A big delegation, headed by the Governors of Iowa and South Dakota, appeared before President Coolidge, on Wednesday, and appealed through him to Congress for aid for farmers, mainly through government purchase of the surplus crops of farmers, and other provisions of the Dickinson bill. They demanded:

1.—Creation of a Federal farm board to administer funds for the purchase of surplus crops.

2.—An excise tax, to be collected upon crops "at the most practicable point between the producer and consumer", to raise funds for purchase of the surplus.

3.—Government official recognition of private co-operative associations, which would store, buy and sell the surplus.

This proposition has been informally discussed before, and is not backed by all farmers as being feasible, or right in principle, as the purchase of surplus crops leaves unprovided for the disposition of accumulated surpluses, and might lead to wholesale increasing of the "supply" without at the same time increasing the "demand."

The President is fully sympathetic with the farmers and their problems, but is reported not to be favorable to surplus crop purchases, and secretary of Agriculture, Jardine, is not in full sympathy with the bill as it stands. Hearings will commence, at once, and before long farmer legislation will occupy first place on the floors of Congress.

Prevention of Disease.

It costs less to be well than to be sick and it is a lot more fun" is the way Dr. W. C. Stone, Deputy State Health Officer for Carroll and Howard Counties, sums up a health message he has sent to the parents of children who have had a physical examination in the schools. The physical message is equally applicable to parents in other parts of the State, Dr. John S. Fulton, Director of the State Department of Health, takes this way of bringing it to their attention.

Just as large oaks from little acorns grow, so, Dr. Stone says most of our serious diseases have their beginnings in defects or conditions which at first seem small and unimportant, but that lead to serious consequences if uncorrected.

Among the most treacherous of the trouble makers, he mentions the following: Undernourishment and its side partner, undevelopment.

Defective teeth and their side partners, digestive disorders, and disease.

Diseased tonsils and adenoids resulting in the destruction of the first line of defense against the ever present germ.

So far as undernourishment is concerned, he says that most often it is due not to lack of food, but to over indulgence in the wrong kinds of food—to a diet made up too largely of starchy foods, sweets and meats. "Every child," he continues, "for the first eighteen years of life, at least, needs a quart of milk every day. Eggs, liver, sweetbreads, cabbage, greens, salads, fruits, whole wheat and graham breads should also be eaten regularly."

As to defective teeth, he points out the fact that the kinds of food mentioned are necessary for the formation of strong teeth; that the first cause of defective teeth is defective feeding; and that another cause is lack of care. He says, "if teeth are allowed to decay and their usefulness becomes impaired there is bound to be an extra burden thrown upon the digestive system. The poisons produced by, and in, germ infested teeth and gums get into the blood stream and are carried to every part of the body, causing damage to, or destruction of, any of the vital organs."

Undernourishment, due to the lack of the right sort of foods, lowers the vitality of the system, and makes it less resistant to disease. This is especially true of tonsils and adenoids. "When they have become diseased," Dr. Stone says, "they cease to become a 'first line of defense' against germs. Rather they become a hotbed in which any kind of germ may lodge and grow to its great delight and advantage. Diphtheria, scarlet fever, and rheumatism are diseases that a child with a sound healthy throat has but little cause to fear. These diseases are responsible for a large part of all the deafness, heart and kidney disease of later life."

"Eyes, too, are often permanently damaged by such diseases as scarlet fever and diphtheria. No part of the body is more important than the eyes, so they should be safeguarded."

Should the physical examinations of children in the schools reveal any of the conditions pointed out in the message, parents are urged to lose no time in taking the children to their family physicians and to have the conditions corrected.

COAL PRODUCTION GROWING.

But Will not be 100 percent Normal, for Some Time.

Anthracite coal production in the Pennsylvania fields has reached 65 per cent of normal, with the prospect that the output will be still further increased and approximate 85 or 90 per cent by the end of next week, the U. S. Labor Department has been informed by its agents in the coal fields.

Next Monday will see production materially increased, the Labor Department reports said, because on that day many of the miners who had taken temporary jobs during the lengthy strike will return to their old posts in the mines.

Even though coal production has been steadily increasing for two weeks the Labor Department, on the basis of the advices, could not see 100 per cent production for several weeks to come. The tangled fabric of industry in Pennsylvania must be given time to return to normal and all the miners must have given up their temporary jobs before production will again run up to the normal output.

Beware of "Bootleg."

General Andrews, of the United States Treasury, warns the public not to encourage a menace to life and health by buying liquors from bootleggers. The government, after analyzing 85,000 samples of bootleg wines and liquor, found 99 in every 100 absolutely poisonous in some degree; or so much so as to cause death or blindness in a short time, and all but one in every 100 poisonous enough to shorten life. Does it pay to risk getting the one not poisonous?

SCHOLARSHIP TO FARM BOYS AND GIRLS.

B. & O. Promotes Education in Rural Sections.

Believing that Agricultural Club work is a necessary system of education for our rural youth, which system must continue to grow so that it will become available to much larger numbers of rural boys and girls, the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad announces that it will award a $100. scholarship in this state to the boy or girl who most efficiently completes his or her project in Agricultural Club work.

The Club member may enter any type of Club work recognized and supervised by the University of Maryland Agricultural Extension Service, such as corn clubs, potato clubs, sewing clubs, canning clubs, calf clubs, pig clubs, etc.

The winner of the Baltimore & Ohio Scholarship will have the alternative of using the scholarship for educational purposes at any recognized college or university in the state, or in defraying the expense of an educational trip to the Boys and Girls Fifth Annual Club Congress and International Live Stock Exposition at Chicago, next December.

The Baltimore & Ohio has awarded 50 scholarships to date, 33 of which the winners chose to use for educational purposes at their respective state universities, while 17 chose the educational trip. Of the 33 club members who elected the scholarships for educational purposes, 18 are now in college in the states of Maryland, Virginia, Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois.

Maryland farm boys and girls who have won Baltimore & Ohio scholarships to date are: Katharine Baker, Edgemont, Washington Co.; Norwood C. Thornton, Elkton, Cecil Co.

This scholarship is independent of, and not offered in connection with, the Baltimore & Ohio Poultry Clubs being conducted in certain Maryland counties, the prize winners in which are awarded with high quality breeding pens of poultry. However, both the scholarships and poultry clubs are offered by the railroad through the Agricultural Department, in charge of O. K. Quivey, General Agricultural Agent, and in close co-operation with the University of Maryland Agricultural Extension Service and the Maryland Farm Bureau Federation.

Automobile Accidents.

It is a sad but true commentary on human nature that when road conditions are treacherous, traffic accidents decrease. When the highways are clean and dry motorists grow careless and accidents follow, but when motor travel is made precarious by slipper and drifted roads drivers are made cautious, minimizing traffic accidents, although natural causes for accidents become greater.

Winter roads affording uncertain traction serve for the average motorist, the same purpose as the warning signs erected at approaches to sharp curves and steep hills. They are the "signs" the motorist believes in and which prevent accidents. Another sign, but one that causes accidents, is the long stretch of straight and level highway which invites speed. It is here the going is smoothest and clearest that toes tramp on accelerators and cars test out their speed.

The gambling instinct of the human species is a good enough explanation for the thousands who each year plunge heedlessly across grade crossings and highways intersections to their death or injury. These are occasions when autoists do not believe in "signs."

Every step on the road to national relief from highway accidents is marked by the human element and its varying regard for rules of safety. Comparison of winter and summer accident statistics shows that while all motorists are willing to take a chance, that willingness, in all, has limitations. And then, where are there two auto-mobilists who will agree on just what is meant by a "chance?"—Frederick News.

SALES OF BEDDING.

A Common-sense Deduction from a Reading of the Law.

Several weeks ago The Record published an article with reference to the law covering the sale of mattresses and certain other bed clothing, the law having been passed at the last session of the legislature. The law is the enactment of a previous law, the sub-title of which was "Manufacture of Infected Articles" the new law bearing the sub-title "Manufacture and, or sale of Mattresses and Related articles." The important point, as it interests our readers, being whether the new law covers the sale by individuals of the items covered by the law, at our customary public sales of household goods.

After a reading of the Act, in full, our inexpert opinion, then, as now, is that the law means to cover mainly the manufacture and sale of the articles, as a regular business; that it is the equivalent of the "Pure Food and Drug" acts that are aimed to give publicity to the composition of foods and medicines prepared for popular sale, and to protect against adulterants, narcotics, etc. A like law also covers the manufacture of fertilizers.

The law says, "Any person engaged in the making, remaking or renovating of any mattress, pillow bolster or comfortable in which second-hand material is used, etc., shall submit to the Director of Health for approval a reasonable and effective process, together with duplicate plans of apparatus or auxiliary devices for the sterilization and disinfection of second-hand material, etc., and upon approval of such process of sterilization and disinfection, a numbered permit for its use shall be issued to the applicant by the said Director of Health."

"The Director of Health is hereby authorized to contract for the printing of tags required by the provisions of Section 51."

"The Director of Health shall, upon application to him by any person, furnish tags, with the name and address printed thereon, of the maker, remaker or renovator, of any article covered by this Section 51, in quantities of not less than 1000 tags, for which the applicant shall pay $10.00 for 1000 tags."

"The law also specifically states that 'all places' where the items covered are 'made or renovated' or are 'offered for sale' shall be subject to inspection by the Director of Health to ascertain whether the materials and finished articles herein enumerated conform to the requirements of this Section 51."

The extracts seem to us to make it clear that only those engaged in "manufacture or sale," equipped with "sterilization" devices, and having places easily subject to "inspection," are meant; and that the sale of tags "in quantities of not less than 1000" also indicates manufacturing, or large warehouse or selling establishments, and not private homes and sales made there of used household goods, that could not possibly "submit" processes of "disinfection," nor be expected to do so for small lots of such goods for sale.

No reference is made anywhere to "household" goods, nor to any feature of inspection or sterilization that would naturally apply to private homes, nor to the disposal of small lots of bed clothing. All of this, of course, is purely common-sense deduction, given for only what may be worth, and is not to be taken as representation of how the law might be construed in a test case.

A Big Mountain Slide.

W. M. R. R. crews are working hard and fast to clear the tracks of the road, following on record in the state. The slide is on the Cumberland division, between Thomas and Hendricks, and has halted all train service. The first slide was on Monday, followed by a greater one on Tuesday, when the entire side of the mountain gave way. Nobody was injured.

Aged War Veteran Dead.

Charles W. Gilbert, Gettysburg, a veteran of the Civil War, died on Saturday after an illness of several weeks. During the war he was a member of the 74th Penna. Volunteers. He was a brother of Oscar D. Gilbert, of Westminster, and of Mrs. Sarah Colestock, near East Berlin, Pa. Interment on Wednesday in Gettysburg.

Tax on Cigars Reduced.

Among the items contained in the lowered Federal taxes, is one pertaining to the manufacture of cigars, that carries a reduction of $2.00 per thousand and on grades retailing at 5 cents and less, the former tax having been $4.00 per 100. Other grades were reduced from $1.50 to $2.00 per 100. Cigar makers generally opposed the reduction, as it is likely to mean lower wages.

Iowa Leads in Hogs.

According to a statement of the Department of Commerce, Iowa leads the Union, January 1, with 8,687,001 head of swine of all ages on farms and ranges, and Nebraska follows with 4,863,379, and Illinois next with 4,280,009. The total for the whole country is given as 51,842,428. Some hogs! Nearly one a piece for our entire population.

San Antonio, Texas, this winter, had its first big snow in thirty years, and the people enjoyed two days of a snow festival.

Coolidge, and the Tax Bill.

President Coolidge, in signing the big tax cut Bill, has left it be known that this big reduction in revenue will only work out advantageously, if Congress and the public will help; and mainly Congress, by curtailing public expenditures.

In a word, he has said, "beware" of false congratulations. He evidently does not intend to put his economy axe in a glass case, but will wield it effectively against greatly increased appropriations, and the little game of Congressmen who want to "get something nice" for their districts back home.

The President, directly, has little power to influence appropriations, but always has the veto axe. But the probability is that he has a personal influence with many of the members of the House—if not of the Senate—that will receive first-hand information as to what he wants, need what they may expect.

A Hanging, and a Free Show.

At Georgetown, Delaware, last week, a crowd of 8000 men, women and children viewed the body of a hanging negro, that was left hang for about two hours. He was pronounced dead in twelve minutes after the trap was sprung; but an exhibition was made of the sight. The account of the affair that we read states that 100 witnesses were inside the jail enclosure, on the departure of which, the crowd was permitted to pass the gate and take a look at the hanging body.

Possibly the whole procedure was in accordance with some archaic law, and the state may have so few hanging cases as not to arouse public sentiment to the pitch of demanding that such gruesome sights, in the interests of decency, be dispensed with. But, that 8000 persons were curious enough to want to see it, is not reassuring that such a demand might be made.

Think of it; A "crowd of 8000 men, women and children," who were morbid enough to want to see a negro criminal, hanging by the neck! Well, there is no accounting for the likes and dislikes of our American citizens. For our own part, we would rather see a bull fight—if we had to see one or the other. But, this was a "free" show.

Our Own Job.

The public is largely responsible for the legislation it gets. Good laws, as a rule, do not come voluntarily. Strange as it may seem, it is the fact, that every good movement—every good law—has its opposing force. We do not get much of anything worth having, without working for it, and sometimes actually compelling it to come our way.

Maryland needs better prohibition enforcement laws, stronger laws against automobile recklessness, and more effective laws against the promotion of dishonest investment schemes; and it ought to wipe out the statute books the race-track gambling disgrace. But there are opponents—strong ones—against all of these desirable laws.

And, back even of the needed laws, we need perhaps more urgently a class of law enforcement. Officials who will do their duty regardless of opposing pressure. Good laws do not enforce themselves, after we have them.

Some of these officials the people elect, but many of them are appointed by the Governor, mostly through the influence of party local "organizations." Good laws can be nullified by magistrates, policemen, Grand Juries, and of course by Judges. We need therefore to look to the candidates for Governor, for Attorney General, for State's Attorney and for Sheriff, as well as to the making of laws.

This means that it is "our own job" as voters to insist not only on the passage of laws, but on their enforcement, and this is, first of all, the one big fact that makes individual voting so important. We must not only get what we want, but use it after we get it. So, it is time now, when nominations for the state, legislative and county tickets, are being brought out, to look them over, and if none of them suit, try to get better ones about which there is no doubt.

Voting for the success of our party candidates is not half so important as voting for candidates who will surely try to represent us in what we want. In some instances we can judge from the past record of a candidate, what we may naturally expect if he be re-elected. Past record, in such cases, is stronger evidence than present promises. In other instances, when men are untried, we can look to promises and also past personal—if not official—records.

It is time to begin now, therefore, to act our part in "our own job," for it begins early and ends late—if, in fact, it ever ends.

Senator Bruce Explains.

Senator Bruce (Democrat) of Maryland, has frequently voted with the Republican side on questions not strictly partisan, but with indirect partisan significance, and there has been some criticism concerning his "party regularity." Senator Bruce is not nearly so "irregular" as are Borah, Cousins, Norris and a few more, on the Republican side of the house, but his independence of party in "playing politics" is becoming noticeable, and to some of his associates, somewhat irksome.

The last vote cast with the Republicans, was on a resolution censuring the Department of Justice for alleged procrastination in proceeding against the Aluminum Company of America, in which Secretary of the Treasury Mellon, and his brother, have large holdings. Senators Bruce and Blease, Democrats, voted against the adoption of the resolution, and these two votes were enough to defeat it.

In explaining his course, Senator Bruce says:

"The report as amended, abandoned the proposal for a further investigation by the Senate, and came down merely to the censure of the Attorney General for alleged procrastinations; I think the time was some four months. It also accused the Attorney General of not being familiar with certain matters in his department, including the fact that a fellow Cabinet member had been guilty of disregard of a court decree.

"I intend while in the Senate to vote my convictions. I do not intend to play politics, partisan politics, and I think politics was involved in this report. It is a serious thing when the Senate censures a member of the Cabinet and then proposes to rub it in and take a proceeding away from him and turn it over to another agency, special counsel.

"Possibly there may have been some delay in the Department of Justice, but I do not think it sufficient to justify such a censure of the Attorney-General by the Senate. I am a lawyer myself, and most lawyers are prone at times to procrastination in handling their cases. I do not think the circumstances warranted censure of the Attorney-General and I voted in accordance with my beliefs. I shall continue so to vote, regardless of party politics. That is all there is to it. I voted for all of the investigations proposed in 1924, and on one I came to doubt the propriety of my action. There is no need to say anything further; while I am in the Senate I am going to follow my conscience."

A Solemn Warning.

Maj. A. M. Hall, formerly of this county, now publisher of the Apopka (Florida) Chief, is fighting the race-track evil there, as he did here, and fighting it with hard facts. He has previously pointed out the evil effects of race-track gambling in Maryland, in connection with cases of bank clerks defaulting, and in the following editorial, covers the immoral side as it developed in Mexico.

"When the race track gamblers and all of the criminal tribe that travel with them were driven out of California, they crossed over the Mexican line, not far from San Diego and set up their business at Tia Juana, in Mexico. Here for years they have held high carnivals of crime. What with the race track and the parimutual gambling machines, saloons, dance halls, gambling hells of every form and kind, disreputable houses and the like, this place has become so notorious that it is recognized as a menace to both countries and more than once has been brought to national attention with a view of suppressing it.

Every crime in the calendar, including murder, has been rampant there. The latest disclosure from this hell-hole has aroused the indignation of the nation. A man named Petact, with his wife and two daughters, visited the place recently. With the connivance of the police the two girls were spirited away and repeatedly assaulted by a bestial gang. Overcome with shame, all four committed suicide. The father left a note for the authorities requesting that the ravishers be hunted down and the two girls left statements giving information as to the identity of their assailants. The result has been the arrest of seven of the gang, including the Mexican Chief of Police, charged with being responsible for the four deaths.

Thus the matter stands. The occurrence serves to bring into the limelight the extent to which morality has been commercialized in this race track town. The town lives on the race track and from the immoral agencies that thrive around it. The same forces of evil that have made possible such a carnival of crime as we have described, and repeated attacks on American women who have been lured to the resort, are of the same ilk as those who are now seeking to break down the laws of Florida, set up the pari mutuel gambling machines at the race tracks in this State and offering to go into partnership with counties that will keep their hands off—just as they are in partnership with the State of Maryland, where this sort of gambling is legalized.

There is no difference in these race tracks—no difference in the character of the crowds that attend upon them. The same gamblers that flock to this Mexican town, also attend at Cuba, and Maryland and Florida. The only difference is that here the gamblers and the thugs that trail along with them, keep themselves somewhat under cover. They have not come out in the open yet, because they have not been able to prostitute the law. Once let them get the upper hand and the same things that occur at Tia Juana will take place here. A chain of evils will follow in their wake that will startle the decent people of this State.—Apopka (Fla.) Chief.

A Mistaken Notion.

Pennsylvania's junior Senator, Mr. Reed, has an unfortunate and mistaken notion. He believes the interests of his State may be advanced by blocking the appointment of an Interstate Commerce Commissioner who is not a resident of Pennsylvania. He is opposing the appointment of Commissioner Woodlock on the ground that Pennsylvania has been too long ignored in the matter of Interstate Commerce Commissionerships.

He is affected by the same obsession that demands Shipping Board members from Oregon and "dirt farmers" from Iowa on the Federal Reserve Board. It is the fallacy of "geographical" representation so dear to the heart of the South and the West. Carried to its logical conclusion, every State should have a member on every Government board, agency and commission. Carried one step farther, and every industry, profession, trade, craft and class would demand and get "representation."

Senator Reed should withdraw his objections to the Woodlock appointment. He is giving aid and comfort to the enemies of the Administration, delighting the Democrats, encouraging the South and West in their geographical representation manias, and is not helping either Pennsylvania or the East by his stand.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Derivation of Names of Parts of Church

When you enter a place of worship, you first pass through the porch, and may then proceed to an aisle, or possibly take a seat in the nave, or near the chancel.

Porch, aisle, chancel, and nave are all queer words. Some have been built up just anyhow; others are derived from the Latin, and twisted weirdly in the process.

"Porch," for instance, is the word-child, just recognizable, of the Latin "porta," a gate. Why, "ch" pushed "ta" out of it, one cannot say.

"Aisle"—the schoolboy who called this word a "wicked speller" was quite right—is what our Saxon forebears made of "ala," a wing. An aisle, of course, is a "wing" of a church.

"Chancel" is really the "canceled" or shut-off part of a church, and its word-parent is "cancell," meaning "lattice work."

The connection—or the excuse for the word "chancel"—lies in the fact that carved screens, or lattice work, generally divided the east end of a church from the other parts.

"Nave" is from the Latin "navis," a ship. A church in a religious sense is an ark. So—"nave!"

HARNEY.

Sales in this community are being well attended, and things generally are bringing fair prices.

Our roads generally were in a very bad condition, but some of our farmers have been dragging them, and they are greatly improved.

We are told that the Gettysburg road is in good shape. Of course, that is under State control and they go right after it, whenever it is fit to work; but we are informed that is a rather expensive proposition to keep improved dirt roads up to the high standard required, especially on a road like the Gettysburg and Taneytown road, where the traffic is unusually heavy, and it is thought that the Gettysburg end of this old established thoroughfare will, in the near future, be under construction. Road officials and all tourists and the travelling public now realize that this is the shortest and most popular road from the National Capital to the great historic battlefield (Gettysburg) and should be made a first-class hard road.

Moving has commenced. G. Walter Fream moved from this place to Gettysburg, on Tuesday. Walter is employed as a night workman at the silk mill.

Others who contemplate moving soon, are: Robert Harner, of near Gettysburg, to the Mary J. Thompson property, at this place; Chas. W. Staub from here to the Jos. Harner farm, near Walnut Grove.

Stock Frauds in Mid-west.

It is now developing that in some parts of the west, where the greatest complaint comes from farmers, there the greatest harvest has been reaped by various stock scheme promotions that turned out to be swindles.

This sale of worthless stocks and bonds, in fact, was carried on when the non-partisan League was at its height, and many schemes were promoted and stock sold in them, on the plea that "Wall Street" controlled corporations were money devils that had to be met by competition.

The losses incurred in these investments were tremendous, and this added to the cry that farming "did not pay." In some measure, no doubt, this same cause prevailed throughout the country—capitalizing discontent among farmers, and in turn making victims of them.

Miss Phyllis H. Brown, agricultural expert, who has done extensive work in Near East Relief schools and who is back in the United States, will address the Carroll Pomona Grange, Maryland State Grange, at Westminster, on March 6, and also show slides of the interesting agricultural activities in the Near East as being done under American initiative and teaching.

Miss Brown studied agriculture for the last seven years, has been in the Russian Caucasus working for the Near East Relief and was sent into Armenia by the relief organization as superintendent of agricultural instruction in the districts of Leninakan and Stepahanavan. She is a graduate of Vassar; studied at the Michigan Agricultural College; School of Horticulture for Women at Ambler, Pa.; got her first training at Farmingdale State School of Applied Agriculture, Long Island. She has had practical training as superintendent of agricultural instruction for constructive education, the problem being to interest children in practical methods. Miss Brown taught in grade and high schools in New York State and also did social work there.

Over 4500 runaway marriages are said to take place every year, in Elkton, Cecil County, and the "industry" is estimated to be worth $100,000 a year to parsons, hotels, cab drivers, restaurants, and the County Clerk's Office.

An American tourist bought an unusual belt of oriental design in a Cairo, Egypt bazar, and presented it to a New York friend who manufactures women's belt buckles. The manufacturer glanced at the buckle, and showed his own trade-mark stamp on it.

Some Good Short Ones.

An editor started poor twenty years ago and retired recently with a comfortable fortune of $50,000. This was acquired through industry, economy, conscientious effort, indomitable perseverance, and the death of an uncle who left him $49,990.

Teddy and his friend were out to tea. "Do you like tea?" breathed the sweet little thing. "Yes, I do; but I like the next letter better." And then she blushed.

A storekeeper had for some time displayed in his window a card inscribed "Fishing Tackle."

A customer drew the proprietor's attention to the spelling. "Hasn't any one told you of it before?" he asked.

"Hundreds," replied the dealer, "but whenever they drop in to tell me, they always spend something."

Pat: "Why are you wearing so many coats on such a hot day?" Mike (carrying a paint can). "I'm going to paint me fence, and it says on this can, 'To obtain the best results, put on at least three coats.'"

The codfish lays a million eggs, The helpful hen but one; But the codfish does not cackle To tell what she has done. So we scorn the modest codfish, While the boastful hen we prize, Which only goes to show, my friend It pays to advertise.

Legend Avers Birds Obedy Monk's Behest

In a chapel in the grounds of the Franciscan monastery at Washington is an almost life-sized statue of the founder of the order, St. Francis d'Assisi. The statue reveals St. Francis sitting on the stump of a tree. A falcon perches on a branch beside him.

By every lover of nature the name of St. Francis d'Assisi, says Nature Magazine, must always be revered.

The chronicles of his communing with nature are many. Arriving at a castle where he intended to speak, great flocks of swallows nesting in the battlements and crannies of the building kept up such an incessant chattering that it was impossible for him to be heard. St. Francis turned to his feathered friends and asked that he might have silence in order to deliver a great message with which he was charged. The compliance was instant, we are told, and the impression of their obedience added increased weight to the sermon which followed.

Waterproofing Paper

The most important thing in the making of waterproof paper is the proper choice of the sheet. The toughest papers are now made from jute and also from wood, the kraft or sulphate pulping process being used for the latter. The wood or other raw material must be long fibered and tough to start with. Waterproofing is accomplished by the use of sizing agents, such as resin, water glass or waxes and paraffin. One type of water and grease-proof paper is made by immersing sheets of paper made from sulphite pulp in strong sulphuric acid solutions. The action of the acids tends to harden the fibers and render them transparent as well as resistant to moisture and grease. The strength, however, is not increased by this process.

TANK NUMBER ELEVEN

By FRANK L. POLLOCK

(© by Short Story Pub. Co.)

WITH a great white "11" painted on the side facing the railroad track, the ungainly tank, perched on its trestle, looks out over the most ghastly wilderness in the world—sand and sagebrush and distant formless buttes, with the superheated air trembling over it all. There is no station nor siding there, nor anything living except a few horned toads. The nearest human habitation is more than a hundred miles away. The tank was placed there because it was the only point on the road within a day's run where water could be found. No doubt a prehistoric river once flowed that way, but the engineers had to bore over a thousand feet to find its waters.

The only event at Tank No. 11 is when the pumping engine is set to work to refill the reservoir, for as the trains go by between El Paso and Los Angeles, their transient littleness does not seem to break the thirsty desolation.

The man came to Tank No. 11 from across country, late in the afternoon, staggering blindly through the sand. He wore the usual riding costume of the Southwest, though he was on foot, "chaps," and spurs, with a long six-shooter at his hip. Thirst torture had made his face something almost unhuman. His horse had fallen exhausted nine miles away, but the rider, with desperate energy, had struggled through to reach the railroad. His eyes were almost closed with inflammation, his face was blackened and caked with sand, his lips had cracked like parched earth and his tongue protruded between them, swollen and dry as leather. In spite of the exertion and the terrific heat, not a drop of perspiration appeared upon his skin; it was days since he had touched liquid.

Through the limpid atmosphere, clarified by perennial drought, he had seen for a long time the distant tank, with its little oasis of green which the dripping water had brought forth, and as he tolled nearer and nearer to it, and found that it was not, as he had feared, a mirage, he broke into a weak-kneed run.

There seemed no way of getting at the water, however, as the supporting trestle-work was at least ten feet high, but the man was in no scrupulous mood and, drawing his revolver, he fired into the upper part of the tank. The water splashed out in a long curving jet, and the man stood awkwardly beneath it, holding his sombrero with both hands above his head, filling it and trying to drink from it at the same time. He drank gaspingly till he could drink no more, and then stretched himself luxuriously under the stream and wallowed, clothes and all, in the wet sand. Afterwards he sat on the trestle in the sun and began to steam. He took from his pocket a lump of jerked venison—hard and dry as a bone—soaked it in the spurting water, which now ran with less force, and ate the softened portions. As he returned for another drink he saw something on the ground that made him stare. Where the escaping water soaked into the sand it left a foamy scum, and among its shiny bubbles something even brighter glistened.

The man picked it up; it was a nugget of gold about the size of a pea. He eagerly turned over the wet sand, and yellow specks shone out wherever he looked.

The prehistoric river had left its treasures behind, but, lacking water, they had never been separated from the containing sand. There was water now, however, not much, but enough if used with economy. The prospector half filled the crown of his hat with sand and water and swirled it with a trembling hand, after the manner of a gold pan. As the refuse tilted out a residue of yellow scales glistened in the bottom.

The man, weak and near collapse from the privations of the desert, quietly sat down again with his back to the setting sun, and as he gazed eastward over the treasure-laden hat resting upon his knees, the look in his eyes showed that he saw far beyond the distant line of the horizon.

This golden oasis seemed too good to be true and when the doubt entered his mind he returned to the dwindling stream and worked feverishly, panning out the rich sand. He labored until dark, when the rumbling of the distant overland express train warned him to desist, and he caught up a stray spike and retired a hundred yards into the desert, where in a few minutes he dug a shallow trench for a hiding place. When the train stopped at the tank he stole up, mingled with the passengers who alighted, and in the buffet car bought some canned provisions, and paid a dollar for a ten-cent tin basin in which to wash out his gold. This boarding of the passenger trains for food he repeated cautiously at intervals.

Much of such rest as he snatched he took in the heat of the day, in the shelter of his dugout, enlarged for that purpose, and there he retreated on the approach of trains, lest his secret be discovered.

On the first morning, he found it necessary to puncture the tank lower down, and discovered a way to climb the trestle to plug up his bullet holes, to economize the water and conceal its escape from the trahmen. For days he lived and worked in feverish dread. Two years of toll and disappointment had weakened his courage so much that he hardly dared hope that he had conquered fortune at last. Yet this was the richest pocket he had ever seen, and his store of dust and nuggets grew rapidly. Two weeks more, even, without interruption, would serve his purpose.

But the awful loneliness, the loneliness of the desert, began to tell upon him in spite of the excitement of his work. He found a strange pleasure in watching trains from his place of concealment, and hearing the voices of the crews, although they left him even more lonely.

He grew bolder as he continued to work successfully without detection, and at night when the trains came, retired only across the track, where the sagebrush was now sufficiently thriving to afford shelter for a man lying down. In time he came to sleep there, to be nearer the "chunk, chunk" of the wheels over the rails. Occasionally he would rise when he heard the warning sound to meet the night express. When it slowed down for the tank he would swing up on to the step and walk through the cars, buying cans of food and newspapers from the East. When the engine had taken water and started again, he would drop off in the darkness.

Each day increased his store of gold and brought him nearer release, but it also increased the lonely, homesick feeling that was born of the desert which surrounded his treasure.

Meanwhile, the oasis, which had started with a patch of green directly under the tank, had spread most wonderfully. Wherever the water touched it, the dead sand of the desert had sprung into life. Rank grass followed his bullet holes around the tank and ran in streaks across the glistening sand.

Early one morning, the great engine "Governor," the largest on the western continent, drawing a heavy fruit train of refrigerator cars eastward, roared in the distance and finally stopped opposite Tank No. 11. After taking water the bell rang, and the giant king of locomotives began to start the long train. Suddenly it stopped with a jolt, its forward truck plunged downward, burying the nose of the monster in the sand, where a section of the track had sunk, sapped by the insidious overflow of the man's mining operations.

When the wrecking train, called for by telegraph, arrived ten hours later, and the laborers were clearing away the loose sand to get a foundation for jacking up the big engine, a faded sombrero was discovered. Then with more care the crew uncovered the body of a man who had been crushed beneath the locomotive. From the pocket of the blue flannel shirt the workmen took a letter, which they handed to the gang-boss, who passed it up to the conductor. It was written in pencil, but in a bold hand, both the paper and the envelope—addressed to a lady in an eastern city—having come from the library car of the Overland express, whose embossed heading it bore:

OVERLAND EXPRESS

At Tank No. 11, Arizona Desert. September 17th. Dearest Gertrude:—You know how dismal the prospect was when you last heard from me. I can remember now that you have never been discouraged through it all, not when the Indians drove us away from the Mexican mine, which we had worked so hard to locate, nor when fate played me those nasty tricks in the North. When the end of the first year came and I seemed as far as ever from success, it was to your sublime confidence that I was indebted for encouragement to hold on. Now I am able to justify that confidence.

Death has been too close for comfort since I wrote you last, but now all is gloriously changed. I can hardly trust myself to tell you what has happened. I have put off writing until success seems sure. It is difficult to believe it myself; it is so much like the story books. I have discovered a marvelous garden in the heart of the Arizona desert, and will bring you a dozen cans of my fruit; golden fruit that will make me the happiest man in the world because it will give me you, my sweetheart, and help me to make you happy. I have a dozen cans nearly filled already with gold as pure as your heart, and every grain of it has been washed out with a throb of loneliness and longing for you. The awful solitude of the desert that surrounds my little garden oasis would have driven me mad, had it not been for you and the trains. I sleep near the track that I may hear the glad sound of wheels eastward bound toward you. I shall post this on the first overland mail train eastward bound, and follow it in five days more. If all goes well I will surprise you then with the whole story.

With love and impatience, I am faithfully,

LUCIEN.

When the conductor had finished reading the letter there was a shout from some of the idle train hands, who, wandering to a distance from the track, had discovered the man's dugout: "Somebody has been living here—there's a whole row of tin cans, as heavy as lead!"

Insects Live "Way Up"

In the struggle for existence many creatures are driven to live at immense heights.

The climbers of Everest saw a herd of wild sheep sitting on a glacier surrounded by pinnacles of ice. They found bees, moths, and butterflies at 21,000 feet, and the last traces of permanent animal existence far above the Himalayan snow-line and 4,000 feet above the last vegetable growth. These were small spiders.

They live in islands of broken rock surrounded by snow and ice. There were no signs of vegetation or living creatures near them, and for food they ate one another.

Wingless grasshoppers were found living at a height of 18,000 feet.

MR. "AVERAGE MAN" RISES TO OCCASION

Power to Meet Emergency, Common to All.

The average man, so we are told, is honest. Diogenes, for all the light of his penny lantern, could not find him, and the editors, who have been looking for him ever since, haven't found him either. He may be honest, that average man! he may be strong for family life; he may never look the other way when the plate goes by at church, nor pass Sally in her blue straw on the corner without a dime to match her smile. He may belong to the Kiwanis, and always land on the green in five—they say he does. I don't know. I never saw him.

No; I never saw him, and the man who saw him I never saw either. The truth is either an advertising agent invented him, or else the department stores did. Have you ever tried on the average man's coat at Fittes & Chagitt's as I have? The name on the tag gives it away. It is sure to be a "medium stout" or anything which shows it's not just plain average.

If I were a king in a fairy story, and did not want to lose my daughter, when I advertised for a husband in the regular way, I should simply give notice that the first average man who turned up should marry her—and then I'd keep her to make my green old age very comfortable.

There was a time when I thought otherwise. In the days when we were all slender, and our hair grew very black, it was my job to try to revamp the old Atlantic Monthly. For a time it did not occur to me that our subscribers were average people. How could they be, reading those austere, unillustrated pages? Well, I began printing pieces which happened to interest me and the normal, natural people who were my friends. What happened was surprising. The circulation grew every month a little more, until it was about ten times what it had been. They were all ordinary people reading it. But had not they something which led each in his individual way to want a magazine that made no conscious appeal to the ordinary average man?

Did you ever notice in reading the story of a fire or of a sinking ship, or of an engine tumbled over an embankment, how the "average" man behaves? Was there ever such a story which did not have a hero? And what is a hero but the average man when the call comes to him, and he forgets he can't do things, and does them?

There is a story in tonight's paper of an average cop. He had sworn, it seems, not to use his own revolver, lest some bystander be injured. That was a natural, average thing to do, and when the crook he had just arrested broke away the cop went after him with his bare hands. Once the crook shot, twice, three times; then the fourth bullet landed in the policeman's abdomen, but he went right on, clinched with the thief, turned his own weapon on him, killed him in his tracks, and was carried off to a hospital to die. Not an unusual story but one which gives you a little more confidence that the chap next you will do his bit when the time comes! And perhaps you will, too.

William James wrote a wonderful essay on the energies of men. He tells how the runner will keep his stride while his heart is bursting within him and his backbone knocks against his ribs. He comes to the utter end, and then suddenly, marvelously, comes the new wind. The muscles tauten, his breath ripples easily, and he is off to win the race.

That is the miracle which comes to all of us, which makes every man know in his secret heart that he is just a little better than the next, and that he can win. "I," he whispers to himself, "am a Jones. My father was a Jones, before me. Of course I can win—why, after all, they are only average men."—Ellery Sedgwick in Collier's.

Cornell the Pioneer

At Cornell university, Ithaca, N. Y., the first institution in the country to teach electrical engineering, the first outdoor electric lighting was installed in 1875, according to Prof. Frederick Bedell, four years before Edison made the first practical incandescent light. This was on the original Cornell campus, the illumination being supplied by two arc lights. The current was furnished from a dynamo built by Prof. W. A. Anthony and Prof. G. S. Moler, who is still a member of the faculty. Although it was recently used as a shop motor, this generator, said to be the first ever constructed in the western hemisphere, is still in good condition and is preserved in Rockefeller hall.

ANCIENT EAR LORE FOUND IN HISTORY

Expressions That Go Back to Earliest Times.

It is an old saying that if your ears burn, people are talking about you. This is very old, for Pliny, the Roman philosopher who lost his life in the destruction of Pompeii, A. D. 79, wrote, "When our ears do glow and tingle, some do talk of us in our absence." In his charming comedy, "Much Ado About Nothing," act III, scene I, Shakespeare makes the heroine, Beatrice, say to Ursula and Hero, who had been talking of her, "What fire is in my ears?"

"To set people by the ear," means to create ill-will among them; to set them quarreling, as metal pots slung together rattle against each other.

"Walls have ears," means that what is uttered in secret may get abroad. Nowhere is this idea better expressed than in Ecclesiastes 10:20, which reads: "Curse not the king, no not in thy thought. . . . for a bird of the air shall carry the voice, and that which hath wings shall tell the matter."

Chaucer, the Middle ages poet, and the father of English poetry, expressed the same idea in a somewhat different manner. In one of his Canterbury Tales he writes, "That field hath eye (eyes), and the wood hath ears."

Then there is the expression which takes one back much farther than even the time of Pliny. It is this, "Mine ears hast thou bored," meaning thou has accepted me as thy bond-slave for life. If a Hebrew servant declined to go free after six years of service, the master was to bring him to the doorpost, and bore his ear through with an awl, in token of his voluntary servitude, which continued during the remainder of the servant's life, Exodus 21:1-6.

The French have a saying which may be translated, "To send one away with a flea in his ear," meaning to send one away after giving one a good scolding, giving him through the ears or hearing something serious to think about so that he may correct his ways.

Blue Glass and "Colds"

Lord Clifford of Chudleigh, who for many years has been studying the action of colored light upon the growth of vegetables, thinks that colors may be used to cure diseases. One shade of red, he says, has a pronounced effect on cases of blood poisoning, while ultra-violet produces a fermentation in the body which reduces hardness of tissue. In all his "cures" exposure of the body to the particular ray of colored light is what is supposed to do the trick. A particular shade of violet, he says, causes the growth of veins. Indigo produces hydrocarbonates and body tissues. A shade of blue causes muscular growth. Green induces fat and yellow restores the nerves. But, of course, Lord Clifford makes clear, great care must be taken that only the right shade of each color is used—otherwise opposite results may be obtained. Lord Clifford even went so far as to suggest that "colds" might be cured by the wearing of blue glasses.

Longer Short Circuit

"What's the matter, dear?"

"Can't get this confounded self-starter to work. I think there must be a short circuit somewhere."

"How annoying! Can't you lengthen it?"

Man's a Contrary Critter

"My husband is forever kicking about the cost of women's clothes."

"A lot of men do that, but I notice they always hang around the best dressed women at parties."

Lesson for March 7

JESUS WASHES THE DISCIPLES' FEET

LESSON TEXT—John 12:1-17.
GOLDEN TEXT—"The Son of Man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister and to give His life a ransom for many."—Matt. 20:28.

PRIMARY TOPIC—The Loving Service of Jesus.
JUNIOR TOPIC—The Loyal Service of Jesus.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Jesus Dignifies Loyal Service.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Spirit of Christianity Illustrated.

With this chapter we enter into the very holy of holies of the book, namely, the inner revelation of Christ to His disciples.

I. Jesus' Amazing Love for His Own (vv. 1-3). Jesus was fully conscious of what was upon Him. He knew that the cross with all its anguish was just before Him. He knew that His disciples would shamefully forsake Him within a few hours. He knew that one of that number would be the instrument in the hands of the devil in His betrayal. He knew that all things were in His hands—was fully conscious of His deity. He did not withdraw His love from them because of their weakness and the shameful failure which He knew would soon be made manifest. "He loved them to the end"—to the uttermost. True love does not consider circumstances or the shortcomings of the person loved.

II. Christ Washing His Disciples' Feet (vv. 4-11). This act is symbolic of His amazing love for His disciples. Jesus did not regard His hands too holy to do this menial service.

1. Steps in This Service (vv. 4, 5).
(1) He arose from supper. (2) Laid aside His garments. (3) Took a towel and girded Himself. (4) Poured water into a basin. (5) Washed His disciples' feet. (6) Wiped them with the towel wherewith He was girded.

These steps symbolize Christ's work of redemption. His rising from supper represents His rising from His place of enjoyment in the heavenly glory. His laying aside His garments is putting aside His vesture of majesty (Phil. 2:7, 8). His girding Himself is taking the form of a servant in the incarnation (Phil. 2:7). The water in the basin, His cleansing blood. His washing their feet, their sanctification by actual cleansing men through His Word (John 15:3; Eph. 5:26). His taking His garments again, His return to His place and position of glory (Luke 24:51).

2. Peter's Impetuous Ignorance (vv. 6, 9).
He goes from one extreme to the other. His failure to understand the significance of this service caused him to behave strangely.

3. The Significance of This Service to Those Who Participate in It (vv. 10-12).

(1) It is a Spiritual Cleansing (v. 8). Fellowship with Jesus is only possible as we are continuously cleansed from our sin. "He that is washed needeth not save to wash his feet but is clean every whit" (v. 10). The cleansing here is not the washing of regeneration (Tit. 3:5), but that of sanctification (John 17:17). Even regenerate people need the continual cleansing of Christ's blood in order to have fellowship with Him. He that is regenerated—washed in the blood of Christ (symbolized by baptism) does not need a repetition of the act; he only needs the cleansing of sanctification symbolized by the washing of the feet. After regeneration, as we go through this world we are contaminated by its sin.

(2) A Badge of Brotherly Affection. This act showed His abandonment to the service of His own. This is a lesson that is much needed today. We need more and more the fullness of brotherly love. Only can true love be proved by the service it renders.

(3) A Proof of Humility. This was a lesson much needed by the disciples and much needed by us all. They had just been disputing as to who should be the greatest in the Kingdom. Their selfish motive was expressing itself. Christ's action was a concrete expression of His Spirit.

(4) Equalization. As they would thus stoop to serve each other in the name of Christ, there would be the sure destruction of caste among them. Such service in the spirit of Christ is the great leveler of humanity.

III. An Example for Us (vv. 12-17). The disciples of the Lord are under obligation to do to each other as He did unto them. This obligation rests upon His Lordship (v. 14). All who call Him Lord in sincerity will obey Him.

God works in a mysterious way in grace as well as in nature, concealing His operations under an imperceptible succession of events, and thus keeps us always in the darkness of faith.—Fenelon

Persevere—In What?

Acts 20:17-24; Hebrews 12:1-4

The first of these two Scriptures gives us an example of perseverance in the work of Paul; the second contains an exhortation to persevere in running the Christian race.

Paul's career as a servant of Christ affords a fine illustration of perseverance. What he endured and overcame is presented in summary form in 2 Corinthians 11:24-28. He was beaten, stoned, shipwrecked, surrounded by perils, weary, in pain, hungry, thirsty and cold, yet he could say in the words of verse 24 of our Scripture lesson, "None of these things move me." This is perseverance indeed. In the realm of service and ministry to others Paul had received a commission from the risen Lord (Acts 26:16-18). To fulfill that commission was his great ambition. In its fulfillment perseverance played the chief part. If we search for the underlying secret of his power it will be found in the words of Philippians 4:13.

Exhortations to Christian believers to persevere and press forward are quite frequent in Scripture, and quite necessary, too. The Christian life has its strenuous side as well as its restful side. In our second Scripture it is compared to a race, at the end of which is a prize. This prize must be won, it comes as a reward for attainment. In the Christian race there are the hindrances of weights and sins. These weigh us down or upset us. The weights must all be laid aside and the upsetting sin overcome. If the runner falls he must get up again. This calls for the grace of perseverance in order to continue running and obtain the prize. As an inspiration to this we are reminded of the witnesses in Hebrews 11, men and women who through patience and perseverance achieved the things recorded in verses 33, 34.

Bell Hangers' Services

No Longer in Demand

Modern scientific inventions which have spelled the ash heap for old-fashioned usages have sounded the death knell for another once respected and prosperous vocation—bell hanging.

Like the makers of clipper ships, hoopskirts and the sundry other developments of the past which have come and gone, struck down by the march of progress and fashion, the bell hanger of today—and his class is a handful—is a man virtually without a job.

New York city, which less than 30 years ago required the constant attention of hundreds of bell hangers, now finds use for less than half a score. Electric doorbells are blamed for the passing of bell-hanging artisans.

P. Werner, owner of a tiny West side shop, outside of which hangs the same sign he placed there years ago when he first opened for business, is one of the few surviving members of the rear guard of bell hangers. A few ancient homes, clinging to relics of the past, still claim his services. But electricity, he said, has ruined his business.

When Werner, then a young man, first started hanging door bells the trade was then in its heyday. Father Knickerbocker, tired of thunderous knockers than in vogue, demanded a new method of announcement and bells—operated by the pulling of a lever outside, which set bells in the home a-jingling—came into being.

For a brief few decades, the jangling bells were pre-eminent. Bell hangers were proud of their art. For years their ingenious arrangements, elaborate or simple, according to the householder's taste, announced the visitor. Some even played music.

Then came electricity. The public took up the new wrinkle of science and electric door bells, operated by the mere pushing of a button, rudely ousted their clumsier predecessor.

"What will be next?" soliloquized Werner, "I don't know. Scientists can do anything. Perhaps wireless doorbells or telepathy?"

Our job department turned out for a Baltimore customer, this week, 10,000 Billheads on two colors of paper—5000 each—printed in two colors, that required punching, and padding the two colors alternately. The building of the new High School here will carry with it certain local responsibilities of a financial character, as part of the equipment of the school is expected to be provided by those directly benefitted—Taneytown and district. This will explain why various efforts are being made through which to secure money, and we have no doubt that they will receive proper local patronage, as the end is a necessary one.

They Knew.

The young lady teacher was enthusiastic and she had been studying the wind all week—its power, its effects, and all about it, until the subject was exhausted. At the end of the week's lessons, in order to arouse interest and to test the children's power of attention, she said in her sweetest and most winning way:

"Children, as I came to school today in Mr. Jones' car the door softly opened and something came softly in and kissed me on the cheek. Now what do you think it was?"

And a smiling chorus of children answered, "Mr. Jones."

He Knew What to Save.

Ole Olson had been working as an engine wiper, and his boss, a thrifty man, had been coaching him for promotion to fireman with such advice as: "Now, Ole, don't waste a drop of oil. That costs money. And don't waste the waste, either; that's getting expensive, too."

When Ole went up to be questioned on his eligibility for an engine man he was asked:

"Suppose you are on your engine on a single track. You go around a curve, and you see rushing toward you an express. What would you do?"

Ole replied, "I grab the oil can; I grab the waste—and I yump."—Arkansas Utility News.

LAST PAGE EDITORIAL.

How Do You Feel?

This question applies, variously, for we have "feelings" spiritual, moral, physical, financial—and some others. We also have various feelings under the separate classifications, and we do not always feel as we actually are. Suppose, just briefly, we consider a few of our "financial" feelings, and try to get a straight line on how our feelings line-up with how we are.

The man who gets his pay, regularly, at the end of the week, is apt to feel liberal, if not rich. He always has the money in his pocket, and there is the allurement that "the job" will always continue, so, why should he worry? But, there is danger just ahead; almost anything may happen, and the weekly paid man is very unwise unless he visits the bank every week with all that he can easily save.

The man who gets his pay, by the job, is apt to do his spending the same way, and to appreciate more what he gets. He thinks of the wisdom of the squirrel who lays back in store against the time when nuts are scarce—if he is wise.

Another man buys and sells continuously—is always handling money, incoming and outgoing. He figures on profit, as well as expense and bad deals, but there is more or less of uncertainty as to how he actually stands. He may be cautious, or, he may not be able to stand the temptation of handling much money, and spend money that belongs to the "other fellow." An annual invoice is a necessity to every man of this kind.

Another man has a small, more or less regular, weekly income, which makes him feel "hard up." His earnings—the products of his labor—comes in big lumps. If he is inclined to be "close," he does not spend much of the big lump sums, but banks them at 4 percent, and enters again upon another "hard up" term. Such men are apt to be money-makers.

Still another man never knows how he stands, and needs a financial manager. He just works along, hit or miss, and if he has average brains and is fairly careful and industrious, may feel the happier because he does not make a study, or worry of finances—but some such men have to sell out, or be sold out, to find out how they stand.

The last class that we will mention, is the one that always feels that somebody else is "getting some" of his. He is the kind who imagines that every business man with whom he deals, makes too much profit. All rich men are dishonest, and the laws are always against the poor man—there is always "something wrong, somewhere."

No matter how we may "feel," financially, we ought all try to get at the truth of how we actually "are." Some of our richest folks, actually, are those who do not make the financial problem the main one in life. If all could be fair, honest, unselfish and industrious, they would save themselves a lot of worry, wrong conclusions about how the world is treating them—and they would always feel genial and liberal, and would be, as they feel, pretty well contented.

"Topsy Turvy"

A comedy, will be rendered in the Opera House, this Saturday night, by talent from Littlestown, where the play was rendered to crowded houses on two evenings, recently. The play will be given here, on a division of the receipts, for the benefit of the local Parent-Teacher Association, and liberal patronage is hoped for.

"Topsy Turvy" is a three-act comedy, the story of which is not only intensely interesting but very entertaining, and requires about two hours time. The plot involves two courtships, some plotting, jealousy and troubles, and situations both exciting and humorous.

Doors open at 7:30 P. M. Admission adults 35c, and children 25c. As the use of the auditorium for school purposes reduces the seating capacity very materially, those who come early will secure the best seats.

The stage furniture for the play has been very kindly loaned through the courtesy of C. O. Fuss & Son, furniture dealers.
