School Children and W. C. T. U. Observe Armistice Day.

An immense demonstration for world peace was staged in Westminster on Armistice Day, participated in by the school children of Carroll County, supplemented by many members of the W. C. T. U., bands and members of Co. H. Maryland National Guard. In all about 5000 were in

The schools made an especially colorful and impressive showing, and the whole event was decidedly note-worthy. Expressive floats and slo-gans marked the line, some of them being striking in their originality and message. Several of the schools were costumed, representing different nations, and familiar songs were

A military ceremony followed the Peace parade, by the Reserve Training Corps of W. M. College, consisting of battalion formation, taps, and a 21 gun salute, reviewed by Dr. A. N. Ward, president of the College, and ex-service men present.

A SHORT "INSIDE" OUTSIDE EDITORIAL.

The Carroll Record has been trying hard for the past year to figure out hard for the past year to figure out how its subscription price can be lowered to $1.00 a year, but has not succeeded. In common with most other industries the printing and publishing business has felt the depression of the times. We have cut salaries and other overhead expense to the ies and other overhead expense to the lowest limit; and there is not much to complain of in the way of the amount of job work being done in our office; but a return to the $1.00 price can not

We trust that this will be done for the sake of the value contained in the sake of the The Carroll Record itself; or perhaps only because of a patriotic desire to support a Carroll county industry—one that continually represents the best interests of the people of this county, its taxpayers and home-makers; and especially for everything that pertains to the best interests of Taneytown. PLEASE TAKE NOTICE!

Many leaders in our most excellent of movements make the mistake of asking friendly newspapers for too much space. Their enthusiasm for their work—which is most creditable —leads them into the habit of expanding their pleas. The Record takes real interest in all worthy enterprises and aims and is more than willing to lead its aid; but it must consider the matter of space given. Many a good article is laid aside in

As first a desk was generously given space in the Board of Education of-fices, then the work was quartered in the living room of the Director, Miss Bonnie M. Custenborder at the Klee Apartments, without expense to the Society.

"It is necessary now," Mrs. Myers stated, "to provide more adequate arrangements to take care of the present program of service and meet more than likely, a heavy demand this coming winter." Mrs. Myers then said with much earnestness, "our experience last winter was a trying one but the co-operation of all other existing agencies of relief; churches, clubs and many, many individuals, en-abled us to carry through with the feeling that we were accomplishing

The Board of Directors is made up of a representative from each of the election Districts of the County. "We have always felt," said Mrs. Myers, "that each District wants to have its part and share in the work the organization is trying to do. Schools, churches, clubs, individuals must all feel that caring for one's neighbor in distress of one kind or another is not only an obligation in a Christian community but a privin a Christian community but a privilege, and I am sure everybody feels that way about it."

The new offices will be on the 2nd. floor of 84 East Main Street directly over the Keefer Sanitary Grocery. The telephone number has not been changed and is Westminster 248. ARMISTICE DAY PREPAREDNESS.

President Says "Peace, Can Not Be Had By Resolution Alone."

The three Armistice Day addresses that attracted the greatest attention, were those delivered by President Hoover, General Pershing, and Henry L. Stevens, National Commander of the American Legion, President Hoover said "the world is more heavily armed today than before the great war" but that the strength of our army and navy "is below the minimum consistent with National safety." He said "peace can not be had by resolu tion and injunction alone," and that peace after all is "the product of preparedness for defense," and that our greatest object should be to "re-establish confidence, not along each nation in its own institutions, but among nations" and to "the building of good will by frank, sincere and personal conferences on mutual problems between heads of states throughout the world."

Commander Stevens confined his address largely to "preparedness." He said his organization felt it should have voice in considering peace and defense measures; that there is no group in the world more favorable to peace than those who endured the horrors of the world war. He commented pointedly on the fact that our Navy in 1933 "will be at the lowest ebb of combat efficiency since prewar days," and that if "the present purposes of the administration are carried out, will be reduced to a dangerous point."

The World Disarmament Conference

Thirteen years ago today we felt we were through with war. We were told so. Our youth were told they were fighting "The War to End War" They went in with that high motive. They went in with that high motive. Yet in 1931 the world spent five billions getting ready for the next war. All say they are building for defense only. The Red Cross in their International Convention, through their experts, declare there is no defense from modern warfare. Then why continue to pour 70% of our tax money into this "Bottomless Hole?" The world is threatened with war today as it was in 1913. If you prepare for war, you get war. It is the nations that prepare that go to war. Europe was prepared. Europe was loaded in 1913 and that was why she exploded. Then there were no implements of peace, as today. Now we have the League of Nations, the World Court—the machinery for settling the nations differences—and the Kellogg Peace Pact signed and ratified by all the nations of the earth, save two small republics of South America. In this pact all pledge each other to use this "Machinery for peaceful settle-this pact all pledge each other to use this "Machinery for peaceful settle-ment" no matter what causes the dis-

Therefore, the nations of the earth are going to sit together for at least a half year, beginning February 2, 1932, to try to agree together to quit getting ready for war, and to start to let go of their implements of war, to eventually, with succeeding conferences, to reduce to "police force."

Police force is a small, inexpensive force. A force that deals with the guilty and takes to court. Police forces never fight each other. Armies and navies never touch the guilty—those who make the war—but always fighting each other, each as innocent as the other, and never take to court.

General Pershing declared that "we should not again be guilty of that lack of military foresight which has always been the weakness of our national lawmakers and which had made it well-nigh impossible to train, equip and transport our armies to the battlefront in time to save the Allies" General Pershing said there was no such thing as a "militaristic spirit in America."

"Adeqrate preparation against war does not mean aggresson," he said; "training of our youth promotes discipline, respect for government and for law and order."

Decided

Harold, aged four, was a lonely only child, and begged his father to buy him a dog. But father put him off, and asked if a little brother or sister wouldn't be a nicer playmate.

Harold agreed to wait. A few days later his father took him upstairs to see the new brother who had just arrived. Long and earnestly the child gazed at the red, wrinkled, flannelwrapped mite. Then he lifted sorrowful eyes to his father and said, "Daddy, buy me the dog."

Lights Out

At church little Jane listened to a sermon on "Let your light shine." The only part she remembered was the text but she didn't understand what it meant until her mother said: "It means being good, obedient, and cheerful."

In the afternoon there was trouble in the nursery and Jane excused herself for being naughty by saying: "I've blowed myself out."

RICE BRAN KEEPS FLOCK IN HEALTH

Good Food for Chickens in Confinement.

The substitution of from 10 to 20 per cent of rice bran for other feeding stuffs in the diet of chickens being reared in confinement helped to prevent a disease known as perosis (deforming leg weakness), the United States Department of Agriculture reports as one result of a series of experiments conducted in co-operation with various states.

The investigations showed also that no chickens which were being kept in confinement to study the replaceability of various feedingstuffs were developing perosis. Other experiments planned for the purpose of studying the condition showed that the addition of 6 to 10 per cent of rice bran to the diet caused a marked reduction in the number of afflicted birds.

Perosis usually makes its appearance among actively growing chicks kept in confinement and fed an unsuitable diet. One of the first symptons is a puffiness of the joints of the legs and a tendency on the part of the affected birds to squat for long periods of time. The next stage is characterized by an increase of the puffiness and a bending of the leg bones. In the final form the disease leaves the joints of the legs permanently deformed.

The investigations showed also that an adjustment of the relative quantity of calcium and phosphorus in the diet, as well as tthe addition of rice bran, helped to prevent perosis. When the two changes were made simultaneously no cases of perosis occurred. Perosis is not the same as rickets, the department points out, Chickens with perosis show, normal ash content of their leg bones and the calcium and inorganic phosphorus content of their blood serum is normal, neither of which condition is true of chickens with rickets. The tests indicate that another vitamin besides D is necessary for the development of the bones of chickens.

Gather Eggs When Laid It is appalling to read reports about the number and value of eggs that are lost every year because some people like to hear the roosters crow or because it is too much bother to catch them. The germ in a fertile egg will begin to grow at a temperature of about 68 degrees Fahrenheit. Sometimes we are careless about. leaving the broody hens on the nests, so they have the eggs spoiled by sitting on them all day before we gather them. It doesn't matter whether the heat is furnished by the weather or the sitting hens, as the result is the

While the eggs to all appearances are perfectly fresh, they will be rotten before they reach the final market, because the temperature is high enough to start germ growth, but not steady enough to keep it. This variation in temperature soon kills the germ, then rot begins. An infertile egg under the same conditions will not become rotten, as the germ has no life to develop.

Light Yolks Preferred

Poultry producers find that many buyers in the large cities, especially the New York market, prefer eggs with light-colored yolks, the United States Department of Agriculture says.

Certain materials such as green feed and yellow corn produce dark yolks, but when eggs are candled it is often difficult to tell whether the dark yolk has been caused by feed or because the egg has been exposed to heat. Thus, although buyers prefer light yolks, in order to be on the safe side, dark yolks do not necessarily means that the eggs are inferior in quality. Feeds such as white corn, wheat, buckwheat, and oats result in eggs having light yolks.

To be classed as a quality product, eggs must be uniform in color and size, and light yolks make them more desirable in many markets.

Blackhead Carriers

Blackhead is generally carried into turkeys by very small worms which have been deposited on the soil by chickens. Since these worms live over in the soil from one year to the next, the best means of preventing the disease in turkeys is to have them run on clean ground that has not been contaminated in any way by either chickens or turkeys in the previous two years. A system of ground rotation is the best to use in accomplishing this

Prevent "Picking"

Cannibalism is often due to cases of prolapsus in the flock. Improper nests are apt to start it. Nests are sometimes placed in such position that they are very light, and have no partitions to separate the hens on the nest. This method of nesting makes it very convenient for a hen, while walking up and down in front of the nests to pick the laying hens. This picking causes bleeding and the hen when she leaves the nest is picked to death by the rest of the flock.

Few Places Where One

Can Escape From Noise Not long ago an intellectual Frenchman gave utterance to a cry of alarm in a journal, signalizing that soon it would be impossible to find a corner in all French territory distant enough from the noise and disturbance of a railroad, highway, factory, or amusement resort; any refuge where one may still enjoy the quietude and tranquility of nature.

He demanded the creation of a zone of silence where there may never be any of these discordant and enervating intrusions. In our own country, with its greater density of population, the problem is still more acute. There is only in the forest of Saint Hubert a little space where there is no railroad or tramway track; where the highways are sufficiently far away that the pollution of motor cars does not penetrate. The only sounds that break the silence in this bit of Arcadia are the harmonies of nature: The songs of the birds, the chirping of the crickets, the rustling of the leaves and the murmur of the brooks.

One must walk to get there, of course, and carry one's own provisions, for there is no tavern nor even a cottage, where one may obtain refreshment in this quarter of St. Hubert's wood. Behold a bourne, in all its picturesqueness, which will be the goal of many wearied with the raucous clamor of the crowded haunts of men-but only of those who have not forgotten how to walk. Forward, march-to the zone of silence.-Le Soir, Brussels.

And She Could Not See Why She Was Disliked

The Long Island woman who is so indignant because her neighbors don't like her was telling one of them of the brilliant device whereby she outwitted her nursemaid.

"The cheatingest creature," said the Long Island woman, "that you ever saw. My dear, I can't trust her one second. But I managed to get even a little bit. There's only one train to New York between noon and six o'clock, and I've found that if I turn the clock back a half hour on her day off the dumb thing doesn't notice and gets to the station late. And then, having nothing to do, she comes back and takes care of the baby until the next one." "How clever," said the neighbor, and gave the Long Island woman a look. "It was the most amazing look," said the Long Island woman to her husband that night. "Absolutely, Albert, I'd have taken oath she hated me. I can't imagine what for."-New York Sun.

Age of Alloys

The use of alloys has become so general that it is rare to encounter pure metal in any of the arts or industries. New alloys have made it possible to build engines which have a weight of only two pounds per horse power and have brought the locomotive and automobile to their present state of efficiency. The useful life of such implements as shovels, picks, vs and knives of various kinds, has been greatly prolonged. One of the most valuable discoveries of recent times is that a small amount of copper added to iron and steel, greatly reduced the tendency to corrosion and this has been the means of adding greatly to the serviceability of these metals. Stainless steel is the result of this discovery.

Word of Obscure Origin

The derivation of the word "news" is obscure. A popular theory is that the word is made up of the first letters of the names of the four principal points of the compass-north, east, west and south. Before the era of newspapers events of general interest were posted in public places under the heading N. E. W. S. For example, if a story was from a northern point it was put under the N column, and if from the west, under the W column, Gradually the four letters were used as one word.

Then, too, the word may be the plural of the word "new." During the Middle ages it was written as newes, newis, and newys.

History of Machine Guns

At the Boston navy yard there is a curious multiple-firing gun which was captured in Korea in 1870 and which bears a Chinese inscription giving 1607 as the year of its manufacture. There were repeating guns of early manufacture in Europe also. Samuel Pepys' diary speaks in 1662 of an English gun which would fire seven shots in quick succession. There were numerous inventions along these lines in France, England, America and elsewhere during the next 200 years.

The first practical employment of machine guns in warfare, though, was in the Civil war, and the gun then used was that invented by Dr. R. J. Gatling of Indianapolis in 1851.

Sturgeon Ha: mless Fish

Though powerful in appearance, the sturgeon, the biggest fish in the Great Lakes system, is incapable of harm. Lacking teeth, its only defensive armament consists of its bony tail, with which a good-sized specimen can easily knock a man from his feet. Sturgeons sometimes grow to a weight of 150 pounds. Feeding is a laborious process, for they must swim slowly along the bottom, sucking up worms, molluscs and minute marine life. A small reddish worm, living in mud, is the favorite article of diet.

"Dog Days" Given Name

by Early Astronomers With the ancient Romans the month of July and the first part of August, as with us, were days of extreme heat. The people suffered. For a lack of proper sanitation, many of them fell ill and died during that time. And, as in all countries, those hot days brought extreme discomfort to dogs. They fell ill of rabies, ran maddened through the streets. Looking to the stars for an explanation of these conditions, the astronomers found what the Greeks and the Babylonians before them had found -the star known to them as Canicula, or the Little Dog, rose in the heavens at the same time as the sun. With logic of a sort, they decided that this coincidence of the sun and a major star both beaming down on the earth together generated the extreme heat, which diminished as Canicula's time of rising receded from that of the sun, only to return a year later when they both rose together again. That settled, they called the period dies caniculares, or dog days.

But had they taken their astronomical knowledge and their mythology from the Egyptians, dog days would have been known perhaps by another name; certainly they would have had another significance. — Philadelphia Ledger.

the Rising Generation Owner of some valuable old books, books whose intrinsic value is enhanced to him because they belonged to his great-grandfather or his greatgreat-grandfather, is Ashton G. Stevenson, says a Chicago dispatch. That the generations change little is proved, he believes, by quotations from some of the old almanacs he owns. Back in 1824 the younger generation, it seems, was worrying the older generation and the golden age was in the past.

In 1824 the Western Almanack was sorrowful because "40 years ago literature meant learning and was supported by common sense; the ladies of the first respectability learned music, but it was the humming of the wheel and learned the necessary dance steps in following it; their piano forte was a loom and their novels the Bible; some respect was paid to old age, to pious ministers of the gospel and to Sunday."

Equipment

A great philosopher once said that he could move even the earth, providing he had certain tools. And he spoke the truth. Virtually nothing should be called impossible. No job is too big for anyone, if the proper equipment is at hand .- Grit.

Mythological

In Greek mythology, Daedalus was an artist, sculptor and architect of Crete who lived three generations before the Trojan war. He built the famous labyrinth on that island and to him are attributed the inventions of the ax, the saw, the auger, etc. Being imprisoned with his son Icarus, he invented wings for flying to Sicily. These were fastened on with wax, and according to the legend Icarus flew so high that the sun's heat melted the wax and he fell into the sea. Daedalus himself reached Sicily. Philologists suppose that Daedalus is not really a proper name but is the common appellation of all the first architects, metallurgists and sculptors in Grecian antiquity, being derived from the Greek word meaning "to work with

Altitudinous Birds

When it comes to high flyers some birds really go up in the air. T. H. Harrison of Pembroke college, Cambridge, reports in Nature, the British Journal of Science, a flock of wild geese flying at an altitude of approximately 25,000 feet—nearly five miles up. These high flyers were accidentally "shot" in a photograph of the sun. Mt. Everett climbers, Professor Harrison says, have reported lammergeiers, curlews and choughs (Old world genus of the crow family) flying higher than 20,000 feet. The highest airplanes have encountered birds, however, is 15,000 feet up, while the average migratory birds do their traveling flights below the 3,000-foot level.

Different

Undoubtedly the story about dividing the apple will be with us as long as the mother-in-law gags, but of course, little Elmer Blane of San Bernardino doesn't know this and, being only six, must be exonerated of plagiarism.

But this time the story is bigger and better, for there were two apples instead of one-a big one and a lit-

"And tell me, Elmer," cooed aunty, "if I asked you to give an apple to _your brother, which one would you

"Do you mean to my big brother or my little one," asked Elmer anxiously.

Mills on Wheels Visit Farms

Instead of the farmer going to the mill, as he has since the day when the process of turning grain into flour and feed by machinery was instituted, the gristmill on wheels is now coming to the farmer, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. A portable flour mill on a truck carries its own electric motor and is equipped to grind all kinds of feed.

Domestic Fowl's Ancestor All domestic fowl are supposed to be descended from the red jungle fowl (Gallus Bankiva) which very much resemble the Black Breasted Red Game Bantam. This fowl is found in the jungles of India, Burnak, Philippine islands and Malay peninsula. Besides the red jungle fowl, there are three other species: the gray jungle fowl of India, the Ceylon jungle fowl and the green or fork-tailed jungle fowl of the island of Java. The latter is said to rival the Vulturine Guinea fowl in the beauty of its plumage. The crow of the jungle cock is short and broken but the cackling and clucking of the jungle hen is very similar to that of domestic poultry. The jungle hen will lay from four to eleven eggs before incubating, a far cry to the 300egger produced under the hand of man.

The mariner's compass, which the Chinese call "the south pointing chariot," is of great antiquity. The idea, it is said, was born during the reign of Chong Wang, that is to say, a little before 1079 B. C. But in a few centuries the discovery of the prin-The mariner's compass, which the ciple was forgotten. A philosopher named Chang Hong revived it. He died in 139 B. C. and during the succeeding troublous times his model was neglected. It was in the Third century A. D. that the Chinese interest in the south pointing chariot was revived. Old writings were eagerly studied, trial after trial was perseveringly made, and in writings of the Eleventh century we read of the compass being used by mariners. Before that time it seems to have been used for guidance in traveling by land.

Gospel Truths Brought

to Guatemalan Indians Adding to the long list of over 900 languages and dialects in which the Scriptures appear, the American Bible society has issued a translation of the Gospel of St. John in Mam, the most primitive language of 200,000 Indians in Gautemala. Mam is the most archaic language of the Mayans, and it is the eleventh of the numerous Indian languages spoken in Central America into which any part of the Bible has been translated. To accomplish the almost impossible task of translating the guttural, explosive dialect, the translators, Rev. and Mrs. H. Dudley Peck of the Guatemala mission of the Presbyterian church, had to rely upon human dictionaries and grammars-Indians selected for their general intelligence, linguistic ability and knowledge of Spanish. One of these, Aniceto Velasquez, had three years at the Bible school, during which he walked 940 miles per year, to and from school. In Mam, John 3:16, appears thus: "Kun ictsunju ulakjtanmi Dios quij xjal, tun tsunju tsajtgkon ocxcujun Tkual, tuntsun jiniju intxontanmi tij, mlai cubxitj, tuntsun titen angkbil jumajx." Which being translated into English reads that well loved verse: "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." A translation of the entire 27 books of the New Testament is under way.

French Company Failed

The Company of the Hundred Associates was a trading corporation given a charter by France under which it was to settle 4,000 colonists in America in 15 years. But in the 35 years of its existence it sent out less than a thousand. When the company's charter was annulled in 1663 the European population in New France was scarcely two thousand. All the company did was to send out a few vessels each year to trade with the Indians for furs, and thus ended one of the many unsuccessful colonization efforts to populate French or British

Invocation on Prescription

The science of medicine had its origin in the very depths of ignorance and superstition, and even today it has not entirely shaken off all the hereditary beliefs and symbols which have adhered to it down through the ages. For example, the capital R with the line across its foot, to be found on every prescription, is thought by most physicians to be an abbreviation of the Latin word "Recipe," but Dr. Howard W. Haggard, associate professor of applied physiology at Yale university, has traced it back to an invocation to the god Jupiter, a prayer for his aid to make the treatment effective. In many old medical manuscripts all of the R's occurring in the text are crossed.

Work of Old Sculptors

A marble column bearing the head ermes, similar to the column used to mark the entrances to Athenian streets in ancient times, was discovered by a group of American archeologists excavating in ruins at Athens. At the head of the column was the hand of a woman holding an infant whose head is missing. The body of the woman also missing. The group represents Peace holding the hands of the infant Ploutos, god of riches. Excavations by the British school in Athens near Loutraki revealed remains of the ancient temple of Juno and vases of the proto-Corinthian epoch.

Father Not to Blame The baby was being displayed to admiring callers.

"Dear me," exclaimed one visitor, who seemed to find it difficult to know what to say. "How much he looks like his father."

"Oh, that's only the weather," replied the young mother, crossly. "As a rule he's quite cheerful-looking."

Billy hurried into the house to report a fight. "And why," said his mother, "did Horace slap Bobbie?" "Because," replied Billy, looking at

Centuries Old Custom

Modernized in England When the mayor of King's Lynn, England, proclaimed the mart, or pleasure fair, open recently, he continued a tradition stretching back more than 800 years—but by modern

He broadcast through a microphone to a dense crowd the quaintly worded proclamation authorizing the holding of the mart under the charter granted to the borough by King Henry VIII in 1537. The charter confirmed by royal prescription rights and privileges enjoyed by the burgesses for 400 years previously.

It makes King's Lynn one of the few towns where wandering showmen are not harassed by municipal restrictions.

The mayor, in his scarlet robe and gold-braided cocked hat, came from the old hall of the Trinity guild, accompanied by aldermen, councillors, officials and representatives of the Showmen's guild. The beadle and sword-bearer, carrying the famous sword of King John, led the procession, which passed through winding streets, by houses formerly occupied by merchant princes, to the market place. The town crier clanged his bell and shouts of "Oyez!" were heard.

Shades of Pepper (of "ghost" fame) and of Mrs. Varley seemed to hover round the old market square as the mayor, in welcoming the showmen, recalled the fair-time sensations of his youthful days. The "wild man of Borneo," he said, became even wilder if his takings fell below expectations, so he wished the caterers of popular amusement a prosperous season.

Northcliffe's Idea of Newspaper Shop Window Speaking of sermons, or anything: The late Lord Northcliffe, it is related, one day rang up the editor of one of his weekly papers who was new to the editorial chair, and said to him: "Mr. Jones, will you please go round at once to Mr. Isaacs, the fruiterer, in Convent Garden, and ask him what he does with his best apples?" The editor thought it wise to obey his eccentric chief. When he returned, Lord Northcliffe again rang him up: "What did Mr. Isaacs tell you about where he puts his best apples?" "He told me," answered the editor, dow.' "Yes, my boy," said Northcliffe, "that's what you have to do. You put your best apples in your shop window -put your best news in your shop window: and your shop window is your front page."-Christian Century.

Wonders of Universe

Revealed by Stars Sir James Jeans, the famous astronomer, has told us that if Adam had been a wireless operator and had dispatched an SOS message to the nearest globular cluster of stars, it would still have a long way to travel before it reached them. When you consider that light moves at the speed of 186,-000 miles a second, you may realize to some extent what this means. Even the sun, on whom we rely for heat and light, is so far away that we see him not as he is but as he was rather more than eight minutes

Look up into the sky and you cannot see a single fixed star more recently than four and a half years ago. And there are very few whose light reaches us as quickly as this. For all we know some of the stars we see may have ceased to exist thousands of years ago. There may have been in the dim ages of the past collisions which our remote great-greatgrandchildren will live to see.-Washington Star.

Locksmith's Art Old

The history of the locksmith's art is probably as old as civilization, and references to it are found in the early literature of every nation. Wood was undoubtedly the first material used in the construction of locks, but the Egyptians at an early date employed brass and iron. The Hebrews and Greeks used crooked keys with ivory or wooden handles. The similarity of primitive locks made access to the house easy and led to the improvement of methods, resulting in the socalled Lacedaemonian lock. Among the ancient nations lockmaking made little progress in advance of what had been done by the Egyptians. Even the Romans used very simple locks, The tumblers lock was probably first invented and used by the Chinese.

Natural Currents

The Gulf stream and other ocean currents are not freaks of nature, but result from natural causes. Wind blowing steadily for a considerable time from the same direction is able to start surface currents. This is demonstrated in the currents of the Great lakes, where there are no differences of temperature or saltiness, and also by the currents of the Indian ocean north of the equator, where the currents reverse their direction after changes in the monsoon winds. It has been calculated that the force of the trade winds is sufficient in 100,000 years to set water in motion to the depth of 12,000 feet.

SEREERE EREERE

THE exterior of the Beverly mansion was one of solid and stolid magnificence. It was a double house, red brick, Georgian, with a beautiful example of fan-light over the white doorway and a side garden that was walled in by red brick overgrown with ivy to about the height of a man.

The street on which stood the Beverly mansion was also one of rather solid and stolid magnificence, old families in old homes, whose children and grandchildren, and in one or two instances, great-grandchildren, had been born under the same roof.

It was the sort of street from which the closed carriage and the pair of spanking bay horses had departed reluctantly, as it gave way to the automobile. It was as if the double row of locust trees which shaded it, had attempted to form a barricade, shielding the quiet avenue from the encroaching glare and hurry of the growing city.

The Beverly sisters, Linda and Wanda, had been born in the house they occupied. They were an example of great-grandchildren having been born into the same house that had been occupied by their forebearers. It was a quiet, austere household now, the entire lineage including the girls' parents, having died out. There were only the two of them now, pale-haired, pale-eyed, rather pale-mannered girls, with the slender wrists and ankles that bespoke good stock, and the repressed and careful bearings that bespoke good breeding.

There was a portrait of the two girls, done fifteen years before when they had been fourteen and fifteen, seated on a stone garden bench, a small lap dog between them. It had been painted during the last year of their parents' lives and an effective pair the girls presented. It is true that the bill for that painting still continued to come at regular intervals, even during the fifth year following the death of the paternal Beverly. But then, so many bills continued to arrive at all too close intervals.

What had happened was the not unusual predicament of the heirs to a supposedly large fortune, finding that their inheritance had been a myth.

Except for the elaborate home in which they continued to dwell, by untold scrimping and sacrifice, the Beverly girls were practically penniless. It was a cruel fight to keep up appearances in that top-lofty looking mansion. There were no servants, not even a gardener. It was inevitable, of course, that people should know that the Beverly girls had not inheritpected. But no one in town, and miraculously no one on that pretentious street, knew to what extent these two girls secretly struggled to keep up the pretense of even semi-affluence.

One by one, certain art objects of value had disappeared from the house; paintings, silver, ivories and bronzes, It was said in the neighborhood that the peculiar thing about the Beverly girls was that although they went about socially practically not at all, they seemed to sleep the greater part of the day. That was true, but for a pathetic reason. It was after the shades of night had fallen, that Linda and Wanda ventured to do the house and garden work which there were no other hands to carry on. Under cover of darkness one could wash windows, scrub steps, scour the beautiful fan-light over the entrance, weed and spade and dig in the garden.

The Beverly girls were workers, all right; they beat rugs out of windows, painted cornices, and even, one spring, painted the entire length of pergolas and trellises in the garden without ever being detected in the act of manual labor.

The degree to which they were oldfashioned and pathetically snobbish, never dawned upon these two girls. They had been bred in an atmosphere of artificial gentility. They knew no other standards.

There was one annual ritual, however, which amounted almost to a legend, which the girls performed at any sacrifice. It usually meant long. weary hours of needlework, which they secretly sold to the Woman's exchange, and the sacrifice of more objects of value from the household, but every spring, come what might, regular as clockwork, the girls added a bit to their lovely rock garden, and called in the services of landscape gardeners for the extension.

The Beverly rock garden was known as the finest in the state. On those rare occasions when the Beverly girls had guests, they served them tea in it, as their parents and grandparents and great-grandparents had done before them. It was the one luxury in their lives and it cost them dearly. It may tax the credulities, but it is actually a fact that many a night the Beverly girls, after they had concluded their day's work in the darkness, went to bed hungry. But in all the lean years, the rock garden never suffered. New and precious species of roses climbed its walls each year. Orchidaceous plants especially imported. thrived in its crevices. What an fronical situation it was! The pair of pale, rather pretty girls, going to bed to sleep off hunger, while under their very windows, rare and beautiful plants and flowers were manufacturing perfumes.

One year, however, the rock garden accomplished the miracle of actually bringing into the empty coffers of the Beverly girls a little income. The landscape gardeners, in reality a struggling young farmer and his brother, who had taken up this work as a side line, and whose services came cheap, proud of their results, had succeeded in interesting the editor of a garden magazine. The Beverly girls received the sum of one hundred dollars for permitting photographers to take pictures which were ultimately to be published in a magazine.

It was part of the conservatism in which these girls had been born and bred, that their sensitive natures should shrink from even this vicarious publicity, but the young farmer huskies, local boys with ambition, were eagerly insistent and the prospect of the one hundred dollars so welcome, that finally they gave in.

The beautiful rock garden of the Beverly mansion was published far and wide, guests came to drop in more frequently after that for the privilege of taking tea to the sound of the little waterfalls and for the lovely perfume of roses and magnolias. Indeed, as the girls whispered ruefully to one another in the secret reaches of their room, practically all of the one hundred dollars had gone in meeting social expenditures that had come with the public celebration of their garden.

The Beverly girls, as the years marched on, were growing tired; bonetired, heart-tired, soul-tired. The struggle was too much. It was one thing to walk out every afternoon as they did, down the broad, beautifullyscoured, front-stone-steps and along the quiet lane of their sedate avenue, and out into the city, where they were known and respected as the "Beverly girls." It was quite another matter to creep back into that cold, bleak house of empty larders, servantless servant quarters, fireless fireplaces, climb into scrubbing clothes, scour into midnight and then creep hungrily, as often as not, into beds whose sheets and pillow cases had been washed and ironed by the girls themselves.

One day something really quite thrilling occurred. The mayor of the town approached the sisters, requesting that on the city's birthday, when a great local celebration was to be staged, they throw their beautiful garden open to the public. The city would insure them against damage, and since the old Beverly mansion was really one of the landmarks of the community, it seemed fitting that on this anniversary occasion, its famous gardens should be open to the citizens. It was a tribute both to the social position of the Beverly girls and to the lovely old mansion itself. The sisters were moved and impressed and gladly consented to the undertaking. Consequently, part of the elaborate festivities of the birthday celebration of the city was the free inspection of the Beverly rock gardens. Men, women and children filed through the gardens by the thousands, all during the day. Refreshments, served by the city, were to be had in the beautifully painted pergolas. Sun danced on the flanks of the darting goldfish in the Beverly ponds. The populace applauded the scene of idyllic loveliness.

It was remarked, however, that the Beverly sisters were not among those present on that day. The house stood open, inviting those who would, to enter, but somehow, it was not the sort of interior to beckon. There was something cold, austere and homeless about the inside of the Beverly mansion. It seemed more of a relic, a historic place, than a home.

No, the Beverly girls were not present. This is where they were: They were off in a neighboring town called Andulsia, in the act of being married to the farmer brothers who were their landscape gardeners.

The Beverly girls never returned to the Beverly mansion. They presented it to the city.

No longer do they have to creep back into a cold, bleak house of empty larders and fireless fireplaces; their new home is no relic, no historic place, but a house of cheer and hopes and plans for the future. No more do the sisters walk out in the afternoon along quiet lanes and sedate avenues to be nodded to and pointed out as the strange and respected "Beverly girls." The days of converting precious old art objects into money are gone; the struggle of secretly laboring under cover of darkness, washing windows, scrubbing steps, weeding and spading, is done. The Beverly girls are farmers' wives. They live on a truck farm five miles outside the city limits. Their rock garden now is a truck garden. They still scour and sweep and dust and clean, but out in the open sunlight now, through long, busy days that are happy days.

Decorative Symbols The dove and the star have been used in church decoration and architecture from a very early period, and their symbolism may be variously interpreted, according to the conception of the artists. The dove represents the new principle of Christianity-its two wings the love of man and the love of God, compassion and contemplation, or active and meditative life. It also stands for the Holy Ghost and the soul. The radiation star is the star of Bethlehem and therefore represents Jesus Christ. Stars without the rays are often used to represent

Hostile Spirit Foiled by Use of "Hog Latin"

Perhaps the strangest language in the world is that adopted by natives of Johore, on the Malay peninsula, and used by them only when they are in search of camphor.

The camphor tree grows abundantly in certain parts of the peninsula, but not all of them contain camphor crystals and the product of these trees is of much better quality than that obtained from the camphor laurel of Formosa and Japan. The latter produces the more common commercial cam-

There is a belief among the Malayans that each species of the tree has a spirit or divinity which presides over it, known as Bisan, which means literally, "a woman," and this spirit is supposed to jealously guard the tree from those in search of it. They also believe that Bisan understands the language of both Malay and Jakun, so in order to deceive her they have formulated a sort of "hog Latin," a mixture of reversed native words, and with this jargon, so they think, they are able to completely confuse the spirit.

Incidentally, the Jakuns who hunt camphor are one of the wildest peoples, but are entirely inoffensive. They live together with monkeys, dogs. and innumerable fowl, in perfect harmony. Their only unusual accomplishment is the establishment of the camphor language.-Pathfinder Magazine.

Paper Currency Today Mere Promises to Pay

Paper money may be looked upon as token money carried to its final extreme. A piece of it has no value at all in itself; the value depends wholly on a promise printed on it. But although the idea of paper money might be expected to have developed easily from token money, no one in the West seems to have considered the matter feasible until more than a thousand years after token coins appeared, says a bulletin of the National Geographic society.

Paradoxically, the first "paper" money was a brick, for the germ of the idea seems to have been born in Babylonia more than 2,000 years before the Christian era. Bonds for the repayment of loans were written on clay tablets and baked. These passed from hand to hand as representations of the amounts involved. Similarly deposits were made with individuals, and clay-brick drafts were written against them. Later brick bills of exchange transferred wealth from place to place.

First White Woman in

West Arrived in 1806 The first white woman in the West of whom there is any record, came out from the Orkney islands in 1806 in a Hudson's Bay company's ship, disguised as a young man. She came out to join her sweetheart. In the journal of Alexander Henry, it is recorded without mention of her name, that on December 29, 1807, she gave birth to a child at his trading post at the mouth of the Pembina river. Of the life of the child born that day, the first child born in the West of white parents, nothing is known but that his mother took him with her when she returned to Scotland the summer after his birth. Marie Lagimodiere, who became the grandmother of Louis Riel, was the second white woman to come to the West of whom there is any record. She arrived in 1807. It was 1812 before there were any other white women in the West. In that year, the second party of Selkirk settlers arrived at York Factory, They included 18 women.-Montreal

Old Legend Concerning World-Famous Painting

Raphael's "Madonna of the Chair," says a noted Paris art lecturer, was the realization of a hermit's wish.

"There have been many stories told regarding the painting of Raphael's 'Madonna of the Chair,'" the artist said, "but the one that seems most fitting is as follows:

"An old hermit, widely known and loved for his charity and Christian service, lived in a hut in the valley. Near his humble home stood a giant oak tree, which he called his silent friend, because it gave him shade and sheltered him from the storm. Close by lived a vine dresser's daughter, known to everybody for her kindness to the old hermit, who called her his friend that talked.

"One day a terrible storm arose, which was followed by a disastrous flood. The hermit sought shelter in the branches of the tree and was rescued by the vine dresser's daughter, who took him to her home. The hermit was very happy and prayed that his two good friends might be glorified together. Long afterward the hermit, Bernardo, died, and the oak tree was cut down and made into wine casks. By this time the beautiful girl had married and was the mother of two fine sons.

"One day the young mother sat at the door of her cottage with her two sons at her side. Raphael passed by and noticing the beautiful picture made by the mother and her sons quickly took his crayon and sketched it on the head of a wine cask. From this sketch the artist is said to have painted the popular picture of the 'Madonna of the Chair,' and the wish of the old hermit was realized."

GOLD MINE FABLE RUDELY SHATTERED

Many Lives Lost in Hunt for "Lost Dutchman."

Phoenix, Ariz.-Iconoclasts of Arizona's arid lands have directed their talent against one of the state's choice legends-that of the "Lost Dutchman" gold mine of Superstition mountain.

Arizonans have believed generally for more than fifty years that the rugged hills of Superstition contained a mine of fabulous value which was found and lost years ago by a Dutch-

Adding interest to the story is an Indian legend of wrathy Apache gods, who got those entering the deep and twisting canyons of the mysterious range of central Arizona.

Iconoclastic prospectors, having searched long and hard this summer for a lost amateur prospector, who sought to find the mine, now insist there isn't and never was a "Lost Dutchman" gold mine.

Always Plenty More. According to the most popular version of the "Lost Dutchman" story, a Dutch prospector would come from the hills, back in the pioneer days, with gold-laden bags.

"Plenty more where this came from," the Dutchman would say as he tossed a bag of dust on the bar. It was presumed he referred to a mine. He always had gold, but no one knew where it came from.

Now the doubters are insisting that half of the world's gold seekers would toss their last bag of dust on a bar with the same optimistic remark; that the statement proved nothing.

Came a day when the Dutchman ventured again into the hills, which Apaches say men should not enter, and disappeared forever. That launched the first "Lost Dutchman" mine hunt and it has continued at well-spaced intervals ever since. At least a dozen lives have been lost in seeking the mythical mine.

He Never Came Back. The last victim was A. Ruth, sixtyfive-year-old government employee, of Washington, D. C. From somewhere -probably a confidence man-he had obtained a map of the mine's alleged location and in it he had faith, although possessed of scant prospecting

Into the hills Ruth ventured, and from them, in keeping with Apache tradition, he never returned.

A reward offered by the man's family stimulated search. The best of mountain men led the hunt. Clews they found, but no definite trace of Ruth's body. Apache gods and the "Lost Dutchman" had claimed another victim.

Despite the minute search, no sign of a gold mine was found. Airplanes flew over the ranges and pictures were taken, but nothing was uncovered to indicate that a mine had ever been worked and abandoned.

Pastor Quotes Bible in Battle Over Pajamas

Weymouth, England. - Quotations from Deuteronomy are being used by Rev. F. E. Coryton, vicar of St. John's, in his public protests made against women wearing beach pajamas.

The local church is only a few yards from the beach where pajamas are worn by large numbers of visiting women. The wearing of beach pajamas has been prohibited in Guernsey.

Speaking from the pulpit, Rev. Mr. Coryton declared that immodest apparel meant a contaminated society. He ended his denouncement by quoting Deuteronomy: "The woman shall not wear that which pertaineth unto a man, neither shall a man put on a woman's garment; for all that do so are abomination unto the Lord thy

States Laid Waste by

Grasshoppers in 1874 In 1870, it was noticed in the Middle West that grasshoppers were becoming more numerous. Year by year they kept on increasing, until in 1874 their onslaught amounted to a national catastrophe. In that year an area including the states of Colorado, Nebraska, Kansas, Wyoming, the Dakotas, Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, New Mexico, Indian territory and Texas were overrun by the northern visitors. The loss in crops was estimated at $50,000,000. It is reported that they came in swarms that darkened the sun, that their forms carpeted the fields, that they swarmed over houses and ate shingles and clapboards, and that in many cases, despairing families left their homes and fled as from the guns of an invading army.

Some of the ranchers tried to herd them as they would cattle, strangely enough, with some success where the safety of a pet orchard or field was the object. Men, women and children, armed with leafy branches, would form a line to divert the oncoming swarm. "To drive grasshoppers successfully," stated an agricultural bulletin, "one must make use of every advantage possible. Drive down hill, or on a level, with a gentle wind and only during the heat of the day. With conditions favorable they are easily driven if not hurried too much."

Feet to the East Once

General Burial Custom In the early Christian cemeteries of Great Britain and northern Europe, all grave plots were laid out east and west and burial was with the feet to the east. The custom arose, according to Stimpson's account, from a legend that Christ was placed in the sepulcher with his head to the west. Matthew 24:27—"For the lightning cometh out the east, and shineth even unto the west; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be"-is quoted as authority for the belief that bodies of Christians should be buried with the feet to the east, so that on the morning of the resurrection they will be facing the east and can hurry to meet the Lord. In Wales the east wind is known, for this reason, as "the wind of the dead man's feet." Investigation of graves before the Christian era, however, has shown that among pagan peoples the same custom was observed. In America, some Indian tribes bury their dead with the feet to the east so that when they rise they will face the rising sun.

Chinese Praise of Tea

Authentically it may be said that the first record of tea in China is to be found in the historical narratives of Lo Yu, wrote Edward R. Emerson in "Beverages, Past and Present." Lo Yu was chronicler of the Tang dynasty and his writings are of such a character that there can be no doubt as to their truthfulness.

Lo Yu records that tea was in universal use in the Sixth century and that it had grown so popular in 793 A. D. that Emperor Tih-Tsung put a tax on its consumption.

Referring to the benefit to be derived from the use of tea. Lo Yu says: "It tempers the spirit and harmonizes the mind, dispels lassitude and relieves fatigue, awakens thought and prevents drowsiness, lightens or refreshes the body and clears the perceptive faculties."

Historic Old Fort

Fort McHenry, Md., a former United States military post, was located on Wheatstone point, Patapsco river, about three miles from Baltimore, Md. It was first occupied by the military in 1775, and was made a permanent fortification in 1794. During the War of 1812 when the British attacked Baltimore the approach to the city by water was defended by Fort McHenry. Fifteen thousand shells were thrown into the fort with comparatively little injury, the loss consisting of only four men and 24 wounded. At dawn when Francis Scott Key saw the American flag still floating, he wrote "The Star-Spangled Banner."

New Rule Suited Twain

Mark Twain once went to borrow a book from a neighbor's library. The owner said he would be happy to accommodate him, but he had adopted a rule that any volume taken from his library must be used on the premises.

The next week the neighbor dropped over for the loan of Mark's lawn mower.

"Take it and welcome," chirruped Mark, "only under a recently adopted policy it is only to be used on the premises."-Golden Book Magazine.

IC—Paul Faces His Enemies.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOP-IC—Bearing Testimony in the Holy

I. Paul's Vow (21:17-26).

Upon Paul's arrival at Jerusalem representatives of the church there gave him a cordial reception. In order that the brethren in Jerusalem might graciously receive him, it was proposed to him by the elders that he take a Jewish vow to prove that he was in no way opposed to the law. They recognized that such an act would in no way compromise or involve the Gentile brethren. Nor did it compromise his own principle of action; namely, to the Jews he became a Jew and to the Gentiles a Gentile, all things to all men in order to gain them for Christ.

II. Paul's Arrest (21:27-40). How far this act conciliated the Ohristian Jews we are not told, but it enraged the unbelieving Jews, causing them to resort to mob law. These maddened Jews seized Paul, dragged him from the temple and beat him mercilessly, intending to put him to death. He was rescued from the mob by the Roman guard. In order to protect him from the murderous frenzy of the mob, the soldiers lifted him upon their shoulders and bore him up the stairs. Paul kept himself under control and politely asked permission of the captain to speak to the people. When he addressed him in Greek and mentioned his Roman citizenship, the captain granted his request.

III. Paul's Defense (22:1-27). Paul's chief concern was not his own safety. He used this last opportunity to witness unto them of Christ. 1. His claim for a rightful hearing (vv. 1-3).

a. His birth (v. 3). He was a Jew, born in Tarsus, a city of no mean reputation.

b. His education (v. 3). He was educated under the tutorship of Gamaliel, and instructed according to the perfect manner of the law of the fa-

c. His zeal (v. 3). He was as zealous toward God as the Jews who were trying to destroy him.

2. His former attitude toward Jesus (vv. 4, 5). "I persecuted this way unto the death."

3. How his attitude was changed (vv. 6-16). This change of attitude was brought about by the intervention of the Lord. While on his way to Damascus with authority to bind the Christians at Jerusalem, he was smitten to the ground by a light from said, "Why persecutest thou me?" When Paul inquired as to what he was to do, he was told to go into Damasus where he would receive instructions. Ananias was sent to him by the Lord for this purpose.

4. The Lord commissioned him to go to the Gentiles (vv. 17-21). It was not of his own will that he preached to the Gentiles but by the Lord's direct commission.

IV. Paul before the Sanhedrin

The Roman officer in order to learn why Paul was arrested commanded the chief council to assemble and brought Paul before them. This shows that there was an effort made by the Romans to give justice to Paul.

1. Paul's earnest look at the council (vv. 1, 2). This was a solicitation of their honor to give him a fair hearing, and also a look of conscious integrity and unfaltering courage.

2. Paul's stern rebuke of the head of the council. "God shall smite thee, thou whited wall." Paul shows that he had the highest respect for the office, but the man now occupying it was not worthy of it.

3. Paul's appeal to the Pharisees (vv. 6-10). Seeing that he could not get a fair hearing, and perceiving that the body before him was made up of Pharisees and Sadducees, he appealed to the Pharisees, for his preaching had something in common with their

was right. VI. The Conspiracy to Kill Paul

More than forty men banded together for the purpose of getting Paul out of the way.

The Divine Presence

Of the reality of fellowship with God every religious man is assured. Religion implies such a fellowship of love and grace on the part of God. How such a consciousness brings strength and comfort to a human heart let every one who knows the power of salvation attest.

"Ideal Man" as Seen by

Public Health Service Some men will find comfort in plans and specifications put out by the public health service, the Spokane Spokesman-Review remarks. If a man is between thirty and fifty years old, weighs from 160 to 170, and is not more than 5 feet 8 inches tall, he is a pretty fine fellow. At least, he is likely to have more strength and endurance than men who do not fit the specifications. If he is a little short on strength and endurance, he has only himself to blame, and should at once begin to make the most of his opportunities.

Wives of men whose measurements are correct will, if wise, refuse to ignore the public health service's information. They will point out that a man at the peak of his physical power should not shrink from rowing a boat over the glossy surface of a lake or from propelling a lawn mower up and down a gently rolling terrace. They will sweetly but audibly wonder why a paltry 18 holes of golf should leave a stalwart 170-pounder too exhausted to paint the garage. There remains the problem of keeping at or below 170 pounds. This is a matter that cannot be airily dismissed, especially during the trying period between the ages of thirty-five and fifty. It is during those mystic years that a man keeps warning himself that he must get more exercise. The knowledge that he has great potential strength and endurance will not flatten the waistline. The strength and endurance have to be given an occasional chance to assert themselves.

Nuremberg Powder Horn

Splendid Work of Art Among unusual displays at the Metropolitan Museum of Art is a powder horn made of a stag's antler, elaborately decorated with silver-gilt mountings. It was made in Nuremberg about 1620, at a time when hunting as a sport of noblemen was at its height, and is tinged yellow with age. Its face, worn by constant handling, is carved in relief with the figure of a dismounted knight in full armor, kneeling before a wayside cru-Above the knight are clouds, God the Father with an orb, and the dove of the Holy Ghost. On the back is carved a design of floral scrolls.

Silver-gilt caps cover the three terminals of the horn, the tops of the caps and the spout being engraved with foliate scrolls of unusual elegance, their sides chased in relief with cherubs' heads, scrolls and birds pecking at fruit. A slide, gracefully sculptured, opened and closed the aperture controlling the flow of powder into the spout .- New York Herald

Corsica Worth a Visit

Those who want a short holiday off the beaten track will appreciate a visit to the French island of Corsica in the Mediterranean, says a traveler, Its rugged mountains and superb forests tower up from the sea as do those of Norway. The island is covered with pines, beaches and chestnuts, and, like nearby Italy, has acres and acres of olive yards. The artists who have long favored the island for island," where unbelievable loveliness, not found elsewhere, become true and seen by all. At Ajaccio is to be seen in the Palace Letitia, the birthplace of Napoleon Bonaparte with relics and memories of his career.

Early Silk Spinning

Perhaps the first mention of the silkworm in western literature is that by Aristotle, pupil of Plato and teacher of Alexander the Great, who lived in the Fourth century B. C. He speaks of it as: "A great worm which has horns and so differs from others. At its first metamorphosis it produces a caterpillar, then a bombylius, then a chrysalis-all the three changes taking place within six months. From this animal women separate and reel off the cocoons, and afterwards spin them. It is said that silk was first spun in the Island of Cos, by Pamphile, daughter of Plates."

Soldier's Idea of Action

This is my philosophy of action: Every time you've a task before you examine it carefully, take exact measure of what is expected of you. Then make your plan, and in order to execute it properly create for yourself a method. Never improvise. The fundamental qualities for good execution of a plan are, first, naturally, intelligence; then discernment and judgment which enable one to recognize the best methods to attain it; then singleness of purpose; and, lastly, what is most essential of all, namely, will-stubborn will.-Marshal Foch.

What He Had Feared

Do you know what a malingerer is? No? Maybe that's what you are. In a general sense, a malingerer is a person who feigns sickness in order to avoid having to do any work.

A Kansas City physician was called to the fail the other day to examine a prisoner, who was reported ill. The jailer, a bluff, hearty Irishman, watched the examination with almost professional interest.

"What's the matter with him, Doc?" he asked, when the examination was completed.

"Oh, he looks to me like a malingerer," the physician said. "Just what I was thinking," the jailer ejaculated. "I knew right along that prisoner had some terrible disease!"-Kansas City Star.

How to Write Good Advertising.

A lot of storekeepers have a sort of faith in advertising, because it does seem to pay other stores; but they think they have what some call "inferiority complex"--don't know how---and don't like to admit it. Actually its

to write an adv .-- that is, if you know how to talk sales across the counter to a customer as though you had confidence in your goods and prices. Only four things are required, aside from this.

HERE THEY ARE

1--Understand your goods and recommend them honestly. Don't talk too much. Listen to your customer, and help him to a conclusion, briefly.

2--The right price. It is the money in the pocketbook that often decides the purchase.

3-Do not consider too much the importance of making the one sale. The most value of advertising is not always the first sale made.

4---Write your ad. as you would talk to a customer. Say just enough to state facts, in a simple, pleasant way.

The Carroll Record

will help to prepare ads, and be glad to do 11-13-2t so at any time.

Visit to Holger Danske

Most foreign tourists are attracted to Elsinore in Denmark, because of its literary, if not historic, associations with Hamlet and Ophelia, Kronberg castle having been used as the scene by Shakespeare, of that old tragedy. A better claim for renown, however, should be the huge sitting statue of Holger Danske in the deep, dark Kassematter of that gloomy fortress. You will be given lighted tapers that you may the better view the features of the sleeping giant, whose long beard has grown to the table at which he sits. He is the tutelary genius of Denmark, and when that country is menaced, Holger Danske, so says the legend, will walk forth to protect the little kingdom of the Danes.

Test for the Lungs A good test that is believed to indicate the efficiency of the respiratory system, including the lungs, the nerves which control them and the blood circulation maintained by the heart is to hold the breath for 69 seconds. If the individual has a poor respiratory system or if his heart is not able to circulate the blood properly or if the blood is insufficient, says Dr. E. E. Free, the person thus handicapped will not be able to hold his breath as long as 69 seconds. This test is frequently given in selecting airplane pilots because it is believed to indicate the stability of the nervous system under flying conditions at high altitudes .-Pathfinder Magazine.

Find Ancient Grave Students of the seminary of the University of Marburg have excavated in Hunfield, in the Rhon, a grave dating from the Fifth century B. C. It contained the remains of 25 men, women and children. On one woman's skeleton were found four dozen amber beads, a ring, bronze ornaments and a bronze bracelet.

The grave held also the skeleton of a woman who had been buried 1,000 years before the others. Two earrings, a necklace, large bracelets, a broad metal girdle and an anklet were found on it, all excellently preserved. The finds have been placed in the provincial museum in Kassel.—German Travel Bureau.

Epidemic Less Virulent Than That of 1916.

Washington.—Infantile paralysis is epidemic this year throughout the North and East, and at its height in and around New York city, although the number of cases thus far reported shows that the disease is far less virulent than in 1916, the year of the worst outbreak of the disease in this

The death rate in New York city from the start of the epidemic, about July 1, up to the present time, is about one-third of what it was during the same period in 1916, according to Dr. Hugh S. Cumming, surgeon general of the United States public health service, and Dr. Ralph C. Williams, assistant surgeon general, who are observing the course of the disease.

The principal epidemic area in 1916 comprised northern New Jersey, southeastern New York and most of Connecticut, Massachusetts and Rhode Island with unusual prevalence in New York city.

This year all of New England is affected, especially Massachusetts and the states of Now York New Jersey, Michigan, Wisconsin, Illinois and Minnesota. The extent of unusual prevalence this year is throughout the northern part of the country westward to include Minnesota, with very few cases reported west of Minnesota or south of the Ohio river.

During the first six months of this year a total of 764 cases was reported, and for the month of July 1,015 cases, by the 48 states and the District of Columbia, making a total for the seven months of 1,779.

American Woman Nurses

Village During Epidemic Washington,-The story of an American woman's courage in nursing and feeding an entire Alaska village during an influenza epidemic has been revealed in a letter received by the Agriculture department.

She is the wife of E. C. Cushing, department employee investigating in-sects affecting reindeer in the town of Golovin, Alaska.

The Cushings were assigned there in the winter and were caught in the epidemic that swept the Bering sea coast from Unalakleet to Nome during the first week in April. Writing to his office here, Cushing

"By the tenth of April every one in Golovin, about 140 people, except my wife, the missionary, two native men and a woman, were in bed. Medical aid was not available and for four days Mrs. Cushing took charge of the entire village by herself, besides feeding and looking after the experimental animals. "She has visited most of the homes daily for more than two weeks. The only medicine we had was castor oil and aspirin. The natives were in a sorry plight. "We made soup and distributed it to the more needy families."

Seeks Names for Babies New Cumberland, W. Va.-Selection of names for babies in Hancock county has swerved from the more popular names of John and Mary to the unusual.

The monthly report of the state health department showed that of the 51 babies born, only one was named Mary, two John, two Nicholas and four Betty.

Many parents sought the unusual for their offspring, naming them: Turla, Kostantonas, Damjon, Cosmo, Eral, Osman, Lonnie and Romeo.

Some of the more popular names on the list are: Bobbie Lee, Betty Lou, Dolly Genette, Joyce Ann, Helen Fay and Dolores Jean.

London, England.-The first human "air mail parcel," tagged, stamped and canceled, has arrived at Croydon air-

He is M. G. Lantscheere, a young Belgian, who discovered that while the passenger fare from Brussels to London was $19.70, parcel postage for his weight amounted to only $10.19. Duly stamped and addressed to consignee at Croydon, Lantscheere was bundled into the windowless compartment of a night air-mail plane at Brussels, and a couple of hours later found himself being unloaded at Croydon along with the other mail.

STAGE COACH TALES By E. C. TAYLOR

A President Takes a Tumble 66 WE DO not travel any more; we merely arrive."

Macauley wrote this in commenting on the passing of the old days, when a trip was an adventure, when one lived every moment of his journey, whether it was a few hours' trip of a few miles, or a trek across the conti-

One of the most romantic periods of the history of the United States was that between 1800 and the coming of the railroads prior to 1850. That was the day of the stage coach.

The notes of the coachman's horn, the stamping of four or six horses, and the rattling of the old Concord stages that filled the highways of America in those years are nearly forgotten. Few records have been kept of their era, although for decades the life of the young nation flowed through these great arteries of travel.

The lords of that distant day were the drivers of the stage coaches. They were the boys' heroes, like aviators are today. Their word was law, and they were looked up to and respected by the great and the lesser individuals who comprised the general public.

Of the tales that are left of these romantic figures the most amusing perhaps is the one of how they ventured to express their emphatic disapproval of a President of the United

When Martin Van Buren was occupying the White House, he vetoed a bill appropriating funds for the improvement of the National road in Indiana. That great highway was the backbone of the nation between 1830 and 1848, when the railroads pushed westward over the Allegheny moun-

Everywhere along the road there was great indignation over Van Buren's action. The stage drivers being sort of overlords of their community, and no doubt somewhat tired of the severe joltings they received when they drove their coaches at full speed over a rocky, rough and swampy highway, nursed their revenge.

Their opportunity came when Van Buren was returning to Washington, D. C., from a trip up the Mississippi valley. The President rode in as much peace and state as the highway then provided, until he reached Plainfield,

When his coach left Plainfield, it had an "accident," and the President of the United States was unceremoniously spilled out in the road where the mud was deepest. The identify of the driver of his coach is cloaked in mystery. Everyone denied responsibility for what had happened, although it is probably they all laughed up their sleeves.

Investigation showed that an axle had been sawed nearly in two, and it was brought out that the driver, when he reached a particularly muddy stretch of road, had not avoided any of the numerous bumps. The coach hit a big rock, and the axle broke. As it was going at good speed, the vehicle turned over, of course, and Mr. Van Buren was sent sprawling into the mud puddle. The President returned to the tavern at Plainfield, and after cleaning up, started off again and reached the nation's capital without further mishap. But he had been taught an object lesson on the importance of keeping the country's greatest highway in repair. When the bill came to him again soon after his adventure, he promptly signed it. The position held by the drivers of the old stage coaches was like that of the captain of a steamboat. Some of the drivers stood on as lofty a plane as the commanders of great ocean liners of the present day. Their word was law while on the road.

They came into constant touch with all the prominent political, social and commercial figures of the country, and their attention and favor was eagerly sought. Although they were paid only a standard wage of $12 a month and their board and lodging, they took precedence over even their most distinguished passengers. In the eyes of small boys they were even above the President of the United States. They also thought well of themselves; as one driver remarked: "While I drive this coach I am the whole United States of America." (©. 1931, Western Newspaper Union.)

Hours of Slumber

Most medical authorities think the same amount of undisturbed sleep during the day gives the same benefit as sleep at night. They say that it does not make any difference when you sleep, so long as you get the required amount and so arrange your program of living that you get sufficient outdoor exercise.

LEAVES AND FERTILIZER.

In many cities and towns throughout the country there is a commendable movement on foot to do away with the old method of disposing of the leaves which cover lawns and gardens during the fall.

The customary practice of burning creates a vicious smoke nuisance which is objected to by even the most fair-minded citizen. Often the leaves are raked into the street gutters to be burned. While this is a reasonably safe place from the standpoint of fire hazard, it may be quite destructive to the pavement. Especially is this true if the street is paved with crushed stone bound together with a tar or asphaltic material. The damage is evidenced in later months by a crumbling or disintegration of the street surface.

A useful method of disposal which is meeting with almost universal approval is to compost the leaves. This is easily done by piling alternate layers of leaves and dirt on the ground or in a rough wooden box of suitable size. Before covering each layer of leaves with dirt enread a thin coat. leaves with dirt, spread a thin coating of a mixture composed of 2 parts hydrated lime, 2 parts superphosphate and I part ammonium sulphate on the mass. Continue in this manner until all the leaves and debris are

Early in the spring the pile of material should be forked over and at that time a little more of the limesuperphosphate-ammonium sulphate mixture may be added. These mater-ials, which are procurable at garden supply stores, hasten the rotting pro-cess and add to the fertilizing value of the decomposed mass. During the summer the compost may be used on the lawn, on flower beds, around shrubs, etc., furnishing the soil with the much needed and highly valued
