A STATEMENT.

The Carroll Record has received several reports this week concerning the operations of an advertising solicitor for whom we agreed to publish advertising write-ups at our regular rate, payable in advance of publication. We have nothing to do with prices charged, do not know what they are, and make no collections.

It is alleged that subscription receipts were used, bearing the name of The Carroll Record in print. No such receipts were supplied or authorized by us, and we had no knowledge on their use. It is also alleged that several advertisements were paid for, to the solicitor, that were not sent to us for publication.

We do not have an advertising solicitor, and never had one. A number of contracts of this kind that we have entered into during the past twelve years, were of the nature of an employee working for an employer. All previous like contracts have mainly been satisfactory to the advertisers, judging from lack of complaints.

It is a very widely practiced system throughout the country, and numerous agencies are at work with papers of the best standing, on this same basis and many come back, every year, and work in the same territory. If the reports received should prove to be well founded, and if in this case The Carroll Record has been misused, it is a matter of great regret to us.

INFORMATION FOR MOTORISTS.

That motorists may realize the danger of breathing carbon monoxide in a closed room, the Keystone Automobile Club of Maryland points out, on the authority of public health officials, that in a two-car garage enough carbon monoxide may be emitted by one car to cause collapse in from five to ten minutes and death in another five to ten minutes.

To get the maximum amount of light, reflectors should be cleaned twice a year. Such cleaning may increase the amount of light as much as 50 per cent, it is stated.

The practice of applying the motor car's brakes suddenly is likely to prove dangerous and costly. Consistent "over use" of the brakes is a bad driving habit, which not only brings excessive wear but likewise is conducive to mishaps.

How many people live on the reputation they might have made?

CARROLL COUNTY'S 100th ANNIVERSARY

Will be Appropriately Celebrated in January.

During the early part of the coming year Carroll County will observe its one hundredth birthday, and various committees have already been appointed to prepare suitable celebration of that important event. The extent and character of that celebration will depend largely upon the means at hand to meet the expense. It is the opinion of those in charge that the people of Carroll County will want a real worth-while celebration and that the funds for that purpose will be made available.

For the purpose of procuring the funds necessary for this celebration a Finance Committee, composed of one member from each of the election districts, with the undersigned as Chairman and Treasurer has been appointed. All persons or organizations desiring to help in this patriotic movement may do so by making their contributions to the member of the committee in the district, or the same may be sent direct to the undersigned. Suitable certificates will be furnished to all contributors.

The names of the committeemen from the various Districts are as follows:

Taneytown, Charles R. Arnold; Uniontown, Oliver Edward Dodder; Myers, Calvin E. Bankard; Woolery's, Carroll G. Raver; Freedom, Arthur C. Brown; Manchester, John B. Baker; Westminster, Denton Gehr; Hampstead, J. William Kelbaugh; Franklin, C. Ray Bam; Middleburg, David E. Reifsnider; New Windsor, Dr. J. Sterling Goaty; Union Bridge, William H. B. Anders; Mt. Airy, Bradley C. Leatherwood; Berrett, John M. Delashmuth.

THEODORE F. BROWN, Chairman and Treasurer.

The coming celebration of the 100th anniversary of the formation of Carroll County, will necessarily bring along with it some information not widely known that should be of interest to the present generation.

We think it will be of special interest at this time to know just who were leaders in the new county movement. It will be impossible to give a complete list, as not all who helped the cause served actively on committees.

To John K. Longwell, perhaps, attaches the greatest measure of actual leadership, especially as he was the Editor of "The Carrolltonian," published at Westminster, that was first published in Taneytown as "The Regulator." In fact Mr. Longwell removed the paper to Westminster in order that he might be more in the centre of opportunities for aiding the new county movement.

The following list of names, largely taken from Scharff's History of Western Maryland, are still after 100 years partly represented in the various districts of the county as they then existed. They represented a special committee appointed to further the formation of the county. Clotworthy Birnie, Sr., William Murray, Edward Dorsey, Joshua C. Gist, Thomas Hook, John McKaleb, Archibald Dorsey, William Shepard, Mordecai G. Cockey, John McKellip, Joseph Steele, John Baumgartner, Nicholas Algre, James C. Atee, Nicholas Shaw, Washington E. Bibber, William Roberts, Frederick Ritter, Samuel Galt, Nicholas Kelly, Evan L. Crawford, Peter Hull, Phillip G. Jones, Peter Erb, Jacob Shriver, William Brown, Evan McKintstry, Basil Stevenson, Philip Enklar, Abraham Bixler, Jacob Landes, William Caples, David Kephart, Sr., Joshua Sellman, William B. Hibbard, John Malehorn, Henry Hoppe, Michael Miller, John Swope, George Warfield, William Jordan, George Crabbs, Sebastian Sulzer, John C. Kelly, David Foutz, Jesse Slingluff, Nathan Gorsuch, Joseph Keefer, Abram Null, Jesse L. Warfield, George Cassell.

The following were a committee appointed to lay off the county into districts: Samuel Galt, James C. Atee, Thomas Hook, Samuel W. Myers, Joshua Smith, Abram Wampler, Daniel Stull, Mordecai G. Cockey, Stephen Gorsuch, Joseph Steele, Geo. W. Warfield, Frederick Ritter and William McIlvain. The result was the formation of Taneytown, Uniontown, Myers, Woolerys, Freedom, Manchester, Westminster and Franklin Districts.

TIME EXTENDED FOR PENSION APPLICATION.

Workers have until midnight Dec. 15 to apply for Federal Old Age Benefits Accounts. The original deadline of Dec. 5th., was extended because registration of the 26 million employees was not proceeding as rapidly as expected.

There was no extension granted employees for Identification numbers however, two weeks ago. All those who did not apply will have to write the Social Security Board for instructions.

CHRISTMAS PROGRAMS.

The Churches of Taneytown and community are requested to give us for next week's issue brief statements only, of the Christmas programs to be held by them. We cannot use programs in minor detail, on account of their length. In case they prove too lengthy, we will be compelled to shorten them. We should say that 100 words each would be a proper limit for the purpose of giving public information.

FARMERS' BUYING POWER

Is Now the Highest Since the World War Period.

The buying power of the net income of farmers as a group is the highest in seventeen years, C. W. Kitchen, Assistant Chief, Bureau of Agricultural Economics, said this week in addressing the annual Fruit Growers and Farmers Convention at Bakersfield, Calif.

There have been years during that time when farm income was higher than now, the speaker said, but he explained that things farmers buy also were higher, so that the buying power of farm income was less than it is now.

Mr. Kitchen pointed out, however, that "all farmers are not equally fortunate. Droughts in 1934 and 1936 seriously reduced the limited resources of many farmers, and in some cases wiped them out completely."

The speaker declared that the cash income from farm marketings and government payments this year will total about $7,800,000,000, which is a gain of about 10 percent over 1935, and a gain of more than 80 per cent since the low point of the depression in 1932.

"There have been marked economic gains in other directions," he said, "a reduction in farm mortgage debt with the lowest interest rates on long-term loans in our history, a rise of about 12 per cent in farm real estate values since the depression low, fewer foreclosures, and more voluntary transfers of farm real estate. The value of all farm land and buildings has risen from less than $1 billion in 1933 to more than $4 billion this year."

Mr. Kitchen described some of the research, service and regulatory activities of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics. He described the crop and livestock estimating service with its 300,000 voluntary reporters, who report regularly on crop conditions in their communities, the bureau's market news, farm products inspection and standardization, and other services.

Discussing the bureau's work in developing consumer grades for farm products, Kitchen said that "no program of standardization will be complete until the consumer has been taken into account to a greater extent than heretofore." The bureau has developed A, B, and C grades of quality for 26 canned fruits and vegetables, and consumer grades for meats, dairy products, and poultry products.

The outlook for agriculture next year "is favorable," the speaker said, "A 10 per cent increase in industrial production is in prospect. Improved industrial conditions are reported from some of the important foreign countries which import farm products from the United States. Improvement here and abroad indicates an increased demand for farm products."

THE FARM UNION BANQUET.

The Taneytown Farm Union held their second annual banquet in their hall, on Tuesday evening. 130 farmers, their wives and families were present. After a sumptuous supper, served as only farmers wives can serve it, the program was turned over to the entertainment committee.

Walter Hiltner-Brick very ably acted as toastmaster. The first number was group singing led by Wilbert Hess, assisted by Mrs. A. D. Alexander at the piano. The next was a number of selections by a male quartet consisting of Messrs Elmer Shildt, Edgar Fink, John Harner and Luther Harner assisted by Miss Thelma Harner at the piano.

Rev. A. W. Longenecker gave a very able address on the problems confronting the farmers today, and suggested ways of meeting them. Miss Ethel Hiltner-Brick and Mrs. Alice Ecker with David Schaum at the piano, then gave a number of selection. Clarence E. Baughman, of Westminster, chairman of the legislative committee of the Carroll Co. Farm Union gave a very interesting and instructive address on the program to be submitted to the legislature this winter, also the road situation in Carroll county. David William Schaum then gave a recital on the piano. A. D. Alexander, Secretary of Taneytown local, gave a review of the work done during the past year, and outlined the plans for the coming year. The evening was brought to a close by group singing and prayer offered by Rev. Longenecker.

All members adjourned promising to make 1937 the banner year in the history of Taneytown Local No. 11.

LEGISLATURE WILL PASS ITS OWN BILL

Will not Act Under Federal Pension Legislation.

The official session of the legislature for the purpose of considering Social Security legislation opened on Tuesday. The bill drawn by a special committee appointed for the task was introduced, and was promptly referred to a joint committee of the Senate and House.

This bill was promptly repudiated by the joint committee. Even before knowing the exact details of the bill members of both Senate and House left it to be known that the bill, as drawn, will be opposed, and that time to consider it thoroughly would be demanded.

Various business interests will be heard at the hearings on the bill, and will oppose heavy burdens placed on employers alone.

Joseph P. McCurdy, president of the Baltimore and Maryland-District of Columbia Federation of Labor, was present as the Legislature convened, and announced that labor would stand for "no compromise" in the fight for adequate Social Security legislation.

He said he favors a State unemployment insurance bill regardless of the ultimate decision as to the legality and constitutionality of the Federal Social Security Act. He also said he stands for no employee contributions to the unemployment insurance fund.

Governor Niece urged the importance of passing a satisfactory bill with all reasonable speed, and announced that he felt that the Special committee had fairly considered all interests. He also called attention to the fact that the regular session will have the opportunity to correct any imperfections in it.

A substitute bill is being prepared that, it is predicted, will be passed in a few hours after presentation. It is said that this will be a law for Maryland alone and have no full connection with Federal enactment.

As a state law it can be carefully gone over, and if necessary, amendments can be made to it at the regular session that begins in January. It is believed that the special session may approve it on Saturday. It is reported that Attorney General O'Connor is preparing the new law which will become effective immediately and will levy on the 1936 pay rolls of all employers of eight or more persons, except in specific callings, the principal exceptions being agriculture, domestic service and governmental employ. The tax will be coincident with the Federal unemployment levy of one per cent of which the State will get nine-tenths.

BLUE RIDGE COLLEGE EVENTS.

The Triangle Players of Blue Ridge College will present at 8 o'clock, on December 18, in the College Auditorium a three-act comedy entitled "Our Children," by Louis K. Anspacher.

"Our Children," is a play for young folks, no matter how long they have lived. It is a play for parents. It is a play for lovers. The lesson is, that lavish love which gives freedom from work tends to enslave just as much as does the affection which eternally hedges and protects. But that isn't all—the feminist will see her argument here presented; so will the student of economics. But, most of all, parents will think the play is written just for them.

Rehearsals are being held with the following cast: Willibald Engel (Willy), William Rank; Theodore, his son, Roger Crum; Hertha, his daughter, Sallydale Whaley; Sophy, the maid, Alice Beard; Anastasius Scheible (Stasi) Richard Radcliffe; Rosie, his niece, Mildred Hamilton; Spencer Hutton, a banker, John Rowe; Harriet, his daughter, Doris Woodie; Vaughan Leland, a broker from Boston, Fred Bower; Rirhard Hellman, foreman in Engel's factory, George Fluharty; Carter, Engel's confidential man, Ray Riley.

The Blue Ridge College Glee Club under the direction of Miss Elizabeth A. Adams, director of music, will present the Christmas Cantata, "The Christ Child," by C. B. Hawley, on Sunday evening, December 13th., at 7:30 P. M., in the College auditorium. The soloists are: Miss Naomi Wolfe, soprano; Miss Ruth Ann Nusbaum, mezzo-soprano; Miss Edythe Bowman, mezzo-soprano; Miss Alice Beard, contralto; Mr. William Rank, baritone. The public is invited.

DECISION AGAINST CUTTING STANDARD PRICES.

The Supreme Court in a late decision has upheld State legislation that which prevents retailers from selling standard articles at prices less than fixed by manufacturers of the articles. The decision was unanimous that laws adopted by certain states—Maryland one of them—are "fair trade" measures connected with goods having trade-marks standard brands, or names.

At this time we are unable to state just how far the Maryland laws cover such cases.

The public does have confidence in advertising. After conducting a survey of more than 5,000 persons a consumer research specialist reported that "85 per cent consider the statements made in newspaper advertisements more reliable than those of men elected to public office."—Wisconsin Press. And here, is a boost, and a knock.

CHILDREN'S AID SOCIETY

Proceedings of Third Quarterly Board Meeting.

The third quarterly Board meeting of the Carroll County Children's Aid Society was held on Monday, Dec. 7, at 2:00 P. M., in the CAS office. The president, Mrs. Frank T. Myers, presided. After the regular order of business Miss Bonnie M. Custenborden, Director, read her account of the work accomplished during the quarter.

Then followed a roll-call of the districts. Due to a state law the Children's Aid is required to have men serve on its Board. During the roll call the chairmen gave the names of men in their districts who had consented to serve. The list, however, has not been entirely completed.

The annual Xmas project was discussed. It was unanimously agreed to continue the project in the usual manner. The director stated that already organizations are asking for the names of families for which they will supply a Xmas dinner and toys. The Xmas list will be completed this week and names of families can be had on request.

Plans were made for the annual meeting which will be held Feb. 8th. The nominating committee was appointed as follows: Mrs. Theodore Brown, Mrs. Edward O. Diffendal and Miss Emma Trump.

A rising vote of thanks was given to Mrs. John L. Bennett for the very splendid volunteer work which she has done for the last two months.

A rising vote of thanks was also given in recognition of the Needlework Guild which very liberally contributed 126 garments to the CAS. Expensive was made concerning the free publicity which the Times Printing Co., has given the organization in the last several issues. Not only the contribution, but the interest was greatly appreciated.

The minutes of the last regular meeting were read and approved.

The paid and unpaid bills presented to the Board were approved and ordered paid.

Superintendent Hyson reported the opening of the following bids on Nov. 19 and the awarding of the order for the cafeteria counter and steam table for the Westminster High School to Lawrence Ellerbrook, Inc. The bidders were—

The portables to be offered for sale are as follows: At Westminster, 2 double metal portables and one double wooden one; at Sykesville, one single wooden portable; at New Windsor, one double wooden portable; at Finksburg, one double wooden portable.

The Board appointed Messrs Alender, Davis and Hyson as a committee to inspect and evaluate the properties for sale.

The appointment of a janitor at New Windsor (Clyde Fisher having resigned) was left in the hands of Dr. Legg and Mr. Hawkins.

The Board approved requesting tuition from non-resident pupils in the county.

The Superintendent reported the receipt of the Wallace deed, which closes the New Windsor land transaction.

The Board adjourned at 11:30 A. M.

Random Thoughts

"I FORGOT IT."

How often we are guilty of making this confession, and treat it rather lightly, as a sort of joke. We over work our "forgetter," and let it become a fixed bad habit, that is far from being a joke all around. There is some excuse for those who are very busy, to forget things, because of a mind full of important matters, but even such should use all possible ways of helping memory to function surely.

The fact is, it is not the busy person who does the most forgetting; just as it is not the busy person who can not "find the time" for doing things. As a rule, the "busy" person makes the best record in doing a little more.

Forgetfulness is largely carelessness—the evidence of a poorly trained mind, and an indication of laziness, mentally and physically. The "I forgot" excuse can often be lessened in occurrence by keeping a daily memorandum of things to be done—a handy book, or pad for putting down coming obligations.

There are sometimes like justifiable cases of forgetfulness, when one is over worked, mentally, with an accumulation of many duties connected with too much to do, but such are likely to be blamed most severely.

PROMINENCE OF LIQUOR ADVERTISING.

Liquor advertising appears to be more assertive than at any time in history; and, it is advertising of the most costly variety—Radio, popular magazines, and daily newspapers. Of course, the liquor business is very much a legitimate one. It has the same right to advertise—through ways and means open to it, as any other business; just as have those opposed to liquors the right to express their disapproval of the business, and its advertising.

The Radio method is especially offensive. Homes have some chance of avoiding such publications as advertise liquors; but the Radio sandwiches beer in with music, news, and other more desirable features, without concern or respect for those opposed to liquors.

No doubt a careful study of this situation by dry organizations might result in the adoption of an effective check to it, as the dries represent a very considerable portion of the public that business is interested in giving proper consideration.

It is a conspicuous fact, that the large majority of local weekly newspapers does not publish either hard liquor or beer advertising.

The following article that came to our office from Los Angeles, California will be found of interest along this general line;

"It looks like red-nosed Santa Claus and old John Barleycorn are headed for a big spree together Christmas Eve, in spite of anything the liquor control boards in the various states can do about it.

A nation-wide campaign to prevent beer and liquor interests from "exploiting the children's patron saint" was launched recently by Miss Ethel Hubler, member of the National Temperance Council. Liquor control boards in many states immediately pledged wholehearted support. Now, wholesalers and retailers in many states are openly defying the action of officials, according to Miss Hubler, who predicts that "a storm of public indignation is sure to result."

In Advertising Age appears the hostile comment: "Those noble souls who insist it's sacrilegious to picture Santa Claus in the act of downing a few beers, seem to have forgotten that Santa Claus is plenty old enough to take care of himself."

The Brewers' Journal, in defiance of the campaign, comments: "We are sure—that even in those states where the liquor commissions have issued the regulations demanded, there will still be many cases of beer entrusted to dear old Santa—"

From the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board in the District of Columbia comes this statement which seems to express the sentiment of a majority of liquor control boards: "The attitude of this board is distinctly against any advertising copy which links liquor to the Bible, or which pictures Santa Claus dealing or carrying alcoholic beverages. We feel exceedingly strongly upon the latter because of the fact that it would be an advertisement which would be attractive to children."

"Newspaper publishers throughout the country will render distinct public service in the interest of good taste if they co-operate in this effort to keep Santa Claus for the children, and not to get him mixed up in the beer and liquor business," Miss Hubler, sponsor of the campaign, said in a plea to newspapers to assist in the effort."

THE CASE OF THE KING OF ENGLAND.

The "romance" or whatever else it may be called, of the King of England is something for the big newspapers to disport themselves with—something ready-made for them, without so much straining over, and magnifying of the doings of just common folks—much like having a holiday unexpectedly. At the time this is being written, we do not know what the outcome may be, but while it lasts it is a feast for the elite—almost as the chance of a life-time.

And, there is the other crowd that upholds the cosmopolitan doctrine that a King is a mere man, and has the right to marry whom he chooses, and it's nobody's business but those intimately concerned. The King, in fact, is something of a hero in standing for his choice, and his following of admirers may be said to have considerably increased.

As a matter of fact the King of England is largely an ornamental figure-head, and has little actual power or authority. On occasions, he is supposed to represent his Empire as an animated symbol to hurrah for, and is an improvement over a "graven image" in these modern times.

In the United States we do things differently—very differently—and our substitute for a King actually does something with power and authority back of him; and when we sufficiently tire of him, we choose another one—whether he has a wife or not, or what her ancestry or record may have been. That is his personal business.

WHAT IS NOW AHEAD IN WASHINGTON?

As a Washington Correspondent through a span of five presidents, Raymond Clapper writes in the Review of Reviews that he always has found Franklin D. Roosevelt the most unpredictable of the lot.

"There was a certain rigidity about Harding and Coolidge, according to Mr. Clapper, and even about Wilson and Hoover. You could plot the future with reasonable accuracy. You knew there would be few deviations. Harding and Coolidge clung to orthodox party dogma, so that there was never much doubt as to what to expect. Wilson and Hoover, while not submerged in party dogma, were men of stubborn consistency, not alone as to objective but as to method. Once they set a goal, you could figure that they would push on toward it defying heaven, hell, and high water. They seldom considered going around an obstacle. They usually tried to go through it.

"When Wilson brought his League of Nations back from Paris he insisted upon its acceptance without the change of a comma. All reservations, no matter how mild, no matter how much easier they would have made ratification, were spurned.

"Hoover stood against any change in the gold standard until the very hour he left the White House. Conditions might change, but Hoover resisted changing with them, although at times they became so severe as to force him belatedly off his course. Eugene Meyer and his associates on the Federal Reserve Board never did succeed in inducing Hoover to close the banks and halt the paralysis which was sweeping over the country."

President Roosevelt, in the opinion of this Washington observer, is tenacious concerning his objectives but slightly flexible regarding his methods.

"He himself has given us the most apt figure—the quarterback. He knows where he wants to go. But each play is determined by the conditions of the instant. This time it is a forward pass, the next time a line plunge or a lateral, depending upon what seems the most promising play at the moment. Add to this inherent method of adapting the play to conditions the pressure for time which existed in the early period of the Roosevelt administration, and you have a totally unpredictable situation."

"You can be certain only of one thing, that he is heading for a goal. But you have not the faintest idea of the steps by which he will progress toward it."

MORTGAGES AND TENANTS.

We can't help getting a bit weary of hearing alleged friends of farmers misuse statistics about farm mortgages and farm tenants. Most of these scribes and orators cite mortgage figures and assume that all farm mortgages represent calamities. They ought to know that in many cases a mortgage is the means whereby a man becomes a farm owner. In all cases where its terms are fair a purchase-money mortgage may be a blessing instead of a calamity, for its end may be the ownership of a farm. Nobody knows just what proportion of farm mortgages are of this nature; but anyone with years of observation or experience knows that many of them are. Farm mortgages or home mortgages may be evidences of thrift and progress, not of insolvency or any other disaster.

No doubt it would be better for agriculture and for the country if there were more farm owners and fewer tenants. We all know that renting a farm is often the first step toward owning a farm. Also, that not all men who want to farm or need to farm are competent to manage a farm enterprise. Many men in agriculture, as in other industries, are better off and happier when working with, or for, somebody who is competent to direct them than they are as owners or operators. In view of these facts, those who wish to discuss fairly these two problems will make allowance for, or discounts from, statistics which do not discriminate, and then there will be less reason to despair of agriculture.—The Pennsylvania Farmer.

TREND OF PUBLIC THOUGHT.

Washington political students are still discussing the apparent paradox of the recent elections. Belated election returns on purely local questions have only added emphasis to the point they are making.

Many Congressional districts, for instance, elected men to the National House of Representatives who openly boasted that they were "radicals," that they thought the government should be supreme, that the government should control everything a man does and says.

But—and here's the rub—district after district voted for self-styled "conservatives" on purely local issues. And some of the most "progressive" states, which elected openly "radical" delegations to Congress, defeated state and local laws of the kind advocated by the successful Congressional candidates.

The analyses, of course, have an answer. They always do. That answer is that to most voters the Federal government and the congressmen are far-off and detached. The voters do not consciously figure that anything the congressmen do will affect them. But when it comes to things in their own back yards, so to speak, their attitude is different. In short, the voters do not see or feel as directly the actions of their congressmen as they do those of their state legislators and sheriff and county attorney and so on.

Furthermore, some of Washington's best forecasters say the coming Congress will not pass any surprisingly "radical" laws. Mark Sullivan, who has been a Washington observer for more than a quarter of a century, puts it this way:

"In the 1937-'38 Congress there will be no sense of hurry or emergency, as there was in the 1933-'34 one, and to some extent in the 1935-'36 one. Beyond this, and to some extent causing this, the spirit of urgency has been lifted from the country and the people by the receding of depression, the progress into recovery."

The new Congress will have many things to do, but it will now have time to spend thinking about what it does.—James Preston, in Industrial Press Service.

A TRUE STORY.

Here's a story—a true one—told by Dr. R. H. Riley, Director of the State Department of Health, of the way in which the Tuberculosis Christmas Seals opened the way for medical attention and sanatorium care for a whole family in one of the counties of Maryland.

The family consists of father, mother and six children ranging in age from 19 years to 19 months. The father has been in ill health and unable to work for the greater part of the year; the nineteen-year-old, who has a job in another part of the county, has been the main source of support. The family was brought to the attention of the County Health Department through the request of the family physician for aid from the Christmas Seal Fund in securing an X-ray examination for one of the children.

When the family was visited it was learned that the mother was examined fifteen years ago when the second child was born, was found to have tuberculosis and was advised to go to a sanatorium. The advice was not followed. This occurred before there was full-time health service in the county in which the family lived and there was no agency to follow-up reported cases of tuberculosis. In the meanwhile the family had moved several times and they were comparative new comers in the community in which they had settled.

Under the circumstances it was decided to have the entire family examined. The father was found to have tuberculosis in an advanced stage. The mother has the disease in the chronic form. The five younger children are all infected with the active type of the disease. The nineteen year old is to be examined later.

After much careful planning the father, mother and five younger children were all sent to a State Sanatorium. In all of these arrangements, the friendly aid of members of local clubs in supplying the necessary clothing, in storing the family belongings and in helping to keep up the family morale of great assistance.

The experiences were described in a recent report of the full-time county health officer of the county in which the family was found. The record could be duplicated, Dr. Riley said, wherever the Christmas Seals help to furnish the funds for tuberculosis work, and it shows only one of the many ways in which the funds derived from the sale of the Tuberculosis Seals are used to relieve suffering, and if possible, to restore health.

The seals will be on sale until the end of December. They are only a penny apiece, and every penny spent for them, counts in the fight against tuberculosis.

NEWSPAPER PRINCIPLES.

The following editorial, that recently appeared in the Hillboro, (Ohio) News Herald, so coincides with the belief and policy of The Carroll Record, that in republishing it we largely reiterate positions that we have from time to time announced.

Once in a while we wonder what's the use in holding on to ethics that the average reading public seems to pay but little respect to—judging by lack of responsiveness—but, like the editor quoted, whenever we can not respect the kind of paper we publish "we will quit the business."

"The other evening we had an argument with one of our friends in regard to whether or not a newspaper should be anything more than just a means of making money for the owner. Our friend contended that publishing a newspaper was just like any other business; that it should be managed in the way that would make the most money. We contended that a newspaper was more than a money making business; that its owner owed a duty to the public; that it was a civic institution and should endeavor to serve its community, its county, its state, and the nation.

Our friend was of the opinion that the editorial policy of the paper should not necessarily reflect the honest opinions and convictions of the owner; that what was said editorially should be determined by whether or not it was good business; that the policy might be decided because it would bring good business to the paper; that it would be all right on public questions to find out what would be popular and profitable and then advocate those things without regard to what might be the opinions of the owner on those questions; that because it would be good business that a publisher might support public policies to which he was strongly opposed.

In our judgment such a newspaper policy is mentally dishonest. An editorial should always express the sincere and honest convictions of the owner of the paper on the matter discussed. Any other policy is hypocritical, is an attempt to deceive the readers of the paper. If the owner of a newspaper thinks it is best for the people that a certain action be taken on a public matter and then urges them to take the opposite action because he thinks it will make him money, he is unfair to his subscribers, misrepresents his position and takes advantage of their confidence in him.

A free press is guaranteed in the constitution because it is believed that honest discussion of public questions promotes the welfare of the country. This is a right which should be cherished by publishers and they should respect that right by expressing only their honest convictions. We would much rather make a financial failure of our paper than not play fair with our subscribers, with the people of our community, and with our country.

Today we can say that in the more than 28 years we have published the News-Herald we have never written an editorial that we did not believe every word in it. To have written something we did not believe for money would have caused us to lose our self-respect. We hope that before we will write an editorial we do not believe, that we will quit the business.

To be true to our principles is much more important than to make a lot of money."

Lights of New York

by L. L. STEVENSON

Meanderings and meditations: A blind chewing gum peddler fishing a newspaper from a Fiftieth street ash can . . . To sit on as she offers her shabby wares to passers-by . . . A full-blooded Indian—he looks it, anyway—who has been meddling with firewater . . . Wobbling along Forty-eighth street singing, "My Buddy." . . . Can't guess his tribe because he's dressed even as you and I . . . Fiftieth street stand sign, "Change your luck." . . . and beneath it a display of rabbits' feet . . . Those bunnies evidently didn't have the luck their paws are supposed to bring . . . Wonder if kids still gather "lucky stones" on Lake Erie beaches? . . . They were white and bore a crude "L." . . . Said to have come from the heads of a fish known as sheephead . . . Broadway, supposedly the wisest street in the world . . . But motorists who drive along it get gray-headed because there are so many jaywalkers.

A hat whisked from a pedestrian's head by a vagrant breeze at Fifth avenue and Forty-second street . . . and crushed by a dozen wheels before he can make a move . . . So he merely stands looking, bewildered . . . Couples still keep dates before the smug library lions . . . Bide Dudley, radio dramatic critic . . . So far as I know, he's the only first-nighter on the air . . . A shriek of brakes as the lights change in Times square . . . Tallulah Bankhead, whose favorite dish is Southern fried chicken and hot biscuits with gravy . . . But she has to deny herself to keep her figure . . . A ringer for Irvin Cobb standing in front of that curate ticket agency . . . Louella Gear, who appeared in a Long Island lawsuit . . . and who found the witness stand harder than staring in "On Your Toes."

Pitchman selling pencil sharpeners bearing Shirley Temple's picture . . . Something I just found out: That it cost $6,300,000 to remove last winter's snow . . . and some of it remained in the streets for weeks . . . Dr. Raymond L. Ditmars who recently returned from Trinidad . . . with one of those 13-inch tadpoles that turn into two-inch frogs . . . Seventh avenue traffic all snarled up . . . Too much of it for the corner cops to keep moving in regular order . . . and too many drivers who think only of themselves . . . A restaurant window full of pumpkins . . . Wish mother could teach some New York chefs how to make pumpkin pies . . . Hers have the real flavor . . . Something I learned from the World-Telegram: Freight ships of an American line each carry $2,000 worth of hand towels . . . Sailors kick if there aren't enough.

A stuttering panhandler on Eighth avenue . . . Only got as far as "S-s-say, mister," before I got away . . . What a handicap! . . . Frank Munn who had never been in a night club . . . Evidently the "lavender and old lace" spirit has entered his blood stream . . . Nelson Eddy won't permit studio audiences . . . Because he likes to open his shirt "and just sing." . . . Stillman's gymnasium where "sharpshooters" hang out . . . In the hope that they can spot a new star . . . and sign him on at whatever percentage the traffic will bear . . . Billy Jones and Ernie Hare who, a few days ago, celebrated their fiftieth anniversary on the air.

Curious congregating about a fallen horse on Ninth avenue . . . A truck chauffeur giving directions as to how to get it back on its feet . . . Kids having a battle with spoiled tomatoes . . . Stained shirts won't cause friendly home receptions . . . Taxi drivers weaving in and out of el pillars . . . Sort of a shoot the chutes effect for passengers . . . The grim bars of the West side jail.

Risks attend the life of a New York taxi driver—John Cuccia can testify to that. He picked up a fare at Seventh avenue and Thirty-eighth street. When 50 cents had been run up on the meter and the fare hadn't decided on a destination, Cuccia got out to argue the matter. So did his passenger. But instead of arguing, he grabbed Cuccia by the coat lapels and bit him through the upper lip. Before the taxi driver could recover sufficiently to give pursuit, the biter had vanished in the crowd. It took two stitches to close the wound.

BURY GOLD HOARDS IN CEMETERY LOTS

Story Revived in Transvaal of Hidden Treasure.

Johannesburg.—The days when the Transvaal farmers, distrustful of banks, kept their savings in coffins, are recalled by the discovery of a hoard of gold and silver coins by natives who were digging in the Carolina district near Lake Christie.

In the early days the Voortrekkers (pioneers) used to have their coffins made to measure in advance, and these coffins were usually kept in the attics. Farmers could find no safer place to hide their wealth than in false bottoms constructed in the coffins. Often the secret was not revealed, and it is believed that many hoards lie buried with their owners.

Highway robbery was frequent in the early days, too, and farmers buried their gold rather than face a perilous journey to deposit it in a bank, even when they trusted the banks. Periods of peace were short, and when native risings occurred men had to leave and many of them did not reveal the secret of the hiding place.

A digger at Vereaning offered the local hospital a guarantee of $5,000 against damage if he were permitted to dig in the grounds for bars of gold which he believed were buried under the site of a concentration camp established in the Boer war.

Fortune hunters still dig in the Transvaal, hoping to turn up one of the numerous hoards that certainly lie buried there.

Native chiefs elsewhere who were slain in the colonial wars with the British and Portuguese are reputed to have left much treasure, which has not been found.

PANG OF PARTING

Although they had known each other only three days, they had to part, Smith's Weekly says.

"Come along," shouted the guard, but the young man still held her hand.

"It'll be terrible without you," he sighed.

"And I'll miss you, too," she said.

"I was never so happy before, and all because we met three days ago."

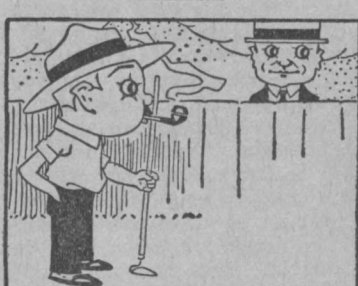

"Stand away there!" shouted the guard.

"You'll write," she shouted from the window.

"Every day." Then suddenly he tore after the train, and as he almost overbalanced on the extreme edge of the platform he made a trumpet of his hands and cried:

"Darling! Darling! What on earth did you say your name was?"

CHICK FEED NEEDS MINERAL BALANCE

Slipped Tendons Prevented by Care of Ration.

By C. S. Platt, Associate Professor Poultry Husbandry, New Jersey College, WNU Service.

Slipped tendons, an abnormal condition frequently found in chickens reared in batteries can be prevented by properly adjusting the mineral balance in the ration.

This difficulty arises from an over-supply of phosphorus along with a lack of calcium in relation to the phosphorus content of the feed. Baby chick feeds containing 10 per cent or more meat scrap, supplemented with bone meal, will have a phosphorus content of at least one per cent, while a phosphorus content of only one-half of one per cent is all that is needed for normal development.

In order to keep the phosphorus at the proper level, it is necessary to restrict the amount of fish scrap, meat scrap, or bone meal to five per cent of the mash mixture. Any protein required in addition to five per cent meat or fish should be supplied by milk in some form.

When chicks are being reared on a floor or are allowed to run outdoors, slipped tendons will not appear, even though the phosphorus content of the ration may be as high as one per cent. Regardless of the actual amount of the phosphorus present or the condition under which the birds are being reared, it is necessary for normal development that the calcium content be kept at a level two or three times greater than that of the phosphorus.

Iron and Copper Needs for the Poultry Flock

Chickens, like mammals, need both iron and copper for building hemoglobin, the content of red blood cells. The question has arisen whether practical laying rations contain enough of these elements to prevent anemia, or whether they could be improved by adding supplements of iron and copper.

Tests at the Wisconsin experiment station indicate that a practical laying ration will supply enough iron and copper to meet the needs of hens without supplementing the ration with extra amounts of these elements. At any rate, feeding additional iron and copper in the tests failed to increase either the hemoglobin content of the blood or egg production.

The pullets in these tests were of the White Leghorn breed and received whole wheat and corn as scratch feed, along with a mash consisting of 100 parts of yellow corn, 50 of oats, 50 of barley, 100 of bran, 100 of middlings, 75 of meat scraps, 25 of dried milk, 25 of alfalfa, 5 of iodized salt and 5 of sardine oil. The pullets also were given free access to oyster shells and water.

When Chickens Sneeze

Infectious bronchitis is one of the most dreaded of poultry diseases for four reasons. It is difficult to cure; it is infectious and it is usually fatal, besides being very distressing to the patient. One of the common signs that the birds have this disease is their coughing and wheezing in trying to get rid of excess mucus and clotted blood in the larynx and trachea. Here are other symptoms: The lining of these organs becomes swollen. There is difficult breathing as in cases of gaps. The neck is extended to facilitate breathing; there is a loud wheezing. Fowls violently shake their heads; there are paroxysms of coughing that terminate in death of the fowl. Laying flocks that become infected always suffer a sharp decline in laying and usually 30 days or more will elapse before they get back to normal.

In the Poultry Yard

Eggs are high in food value, but rather low in fuel value.

Improper temperature causes deterioration in egg quality.

Plan to keep the pullet laying flocks closely housed during the winter season.

Small amounts of salt are desirable in most rations for laying hens. Salt aids in digestion.

During the past ten years a big improvement in quality of eggs has been noted in the Northeast.

R. I. Reds are good producers of both eggs and meat. The roosters make fine capons.

Poultry is a billion-dollar business in the United States and always will be growing in importance.

There are two varieties of the Rhode Island Red which are identical in color and type, but one of which has a single comb and the other a rose comb.

25,000 Mile Telephone "Party Line" Connects Pioneer Groups

President Walter S. Gifford utilizing the 25,000 mile "party line" addresses telephone pioneers throughout North America on their twenty-fifth anniversary.

Telephone Pioneers of America recently celebrated the silver jubilee of their organization with parties in about 170 towns and communities throughout the United States and Canada, connected by a 25,000 mile "party line" extending from St. John, New Brunswick, Canada, to Miami, Florida, and from San Diego, California, to Edmonton, Alberta, and points between.

Pioneering Spirit Praised
Walter S. Gifford, president of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, speaking from New York City, praised the pioneering spirit of the telephone men and women. "New generations of pioneers will live and serve as the years go on," he said, "and they will see changes and contrasts in the material and mechanical things with which the telephone job is done; changes in contrasts so marked that one does not dare to predict what they may be. But this we may predict: in the spirit—the pioneering spirit—of the men and women of the telephone service there will be no change."

Organized November 1911
Telephone pioneers are men and women with twenty-one years or more service in the telephone industry. The Telephone Pioneers of America was organized in Boston, birthplace of the telephone in 1876, November 3, 1911. Chester I. Barnard, president of the

New Jersey Bell Telephone Company at Newark, president of the pioneers, was master of ceremonies. He introduced J. E. MacPherson, senior vice president of the pioneers and vice president of the Bell Telephone Company of Canada, who was at St. John, New Brunswick, Canada, and James L. Kilpatrick, president of the New York Telephone Company and president-elect of the telephone pioneers, who spoke from New York.

Lloyd B. Wilson, president, and John A. Remon, operating vice president of the companies, spoke. James Oliver Martin, president of the Alexander Graham Bell Chapter, presided and introduced the speakers at Washington. This celebration was concluded by the groups throughout the United States and Canada standing and singing "Auld Lang Syne."

Girl, Asleep Since 1932, Shows Signs of Rousing

Chicago.—Patricia Maguire smiled and winked broadly at her mother to assure her that she is rousing—slowly—out of the strange sleep into which she dropped in February, 1932.

The grip of the sleeping sickness is still overpowering, but she is "a whole lot better" now than at any time since she was taken ill, Patricia's mother, Mrs. Peter Mile, said.

"Pat is more alert and seems more interested in what's going on around her. She is more attentive."

Mrs. Mile sat at her daughter's bedside in the room where intimate friends are allowed to visit occasionally. She asked the "sleeping beauty" to raise her hand. Pat raised her hand, wearily.

"Now wink at me," Mrs. Mile said, taking her daughter's head in her hands. Pat shook her head free, smiled and winked.

She appeared interested for a moment when her mother spoke of her illness. Then she yawned, turned aside, and dropped back to sleep.

Patricia's increasing alertness is most evident during her daily baths, feeding, massage and being propped in a chair for exercise.

Her sweetheart visits her weekly.

Freak of Nature Appears to Be Cat-Rabbit Hybrid

Chicago.—Motorists stopping at Ed Wesemann's filling station in Udina, a small hamlet four miles west of Elgin, look at his three-months-old pet and ask in astonishment, "What is it?" Ed shakes his head, admits he's puzzled and then says he guesses it is a cross between a cat and a rabbit.

Ed, Jr., twelve years of age, has adopted the strange animal as a pet. It was found hopping about the prairie by some other children.

The front quarters and head of the animal are those of a tabby cat; the rear those of a rabbit. It has the forepaws of a kitten and the long-jumping hind legs of a rabbit. It walks awkwardly, but hops about like a bunny. Mrs. Wesemann says the pet meows like a cat and drinks milk, but also relishes lettuce and cabbage. It is white with yellow spots and a cotton tail.

San Quentin, Calif.—San Quentin prison authorities announce that the prison is now in the health resort class. Hospital statistics for the past eleven years show that not a single inmate has suffered from gout.

FREED OF MURDER; FACES STARVATION

Released From Prison, Once Wealthy Man Is Broke.

Marseilles, France.—Death—not by the guillotine—but by starvation faces Jean-Baptiste Sarrazin, a penniless old man, who was recently cleared here of a nineteen-year-old conviction of murder.

Sarrazin was sought by police in 1915, accused of the murder and robbery of the wife of a wholesale butcher of Paris; but, before he could be caught, fled to Panama. A sentence of death by default was passed against him.

In Panama Sarrazin built up a thriving perfume business and became wealthy.

Finally, after eighteen years, his identity was established by the French police, an extradition order brought him back to France.

For long months he remained in prison while his case was reopened and refoisted in the courts. At last it was determined he had nothing to do with the murder. He was acquitted by the court and exonerated of all suspicion of guilt.

Since then, as a free man, he has been trying without success to get back the property taken from him at the time he was thrown into prison. As the property of "doubtful origin," it is still being held by the state.

Without home or funds, Sarrazin is up against it—he has neither money enough to get back to Panama, where his perfume business is practically on the rocks, nor the means to continue living where he is.

So—an aged man—the death that once threatened in the form of the guillotine returns again in the guise of slow starvation.

PRESIDENT MISSES HIS GUARD.

Gus. Generick, personal guard of President Roosevelt, died suddenly from a heart attack while on the President's trip to South America. He is missed by the President as an intimate personal friend as well as body guard. He was always brave and alert, and it was he who jumped in front of his chief when an attempt was made to shoot him at Miami, Florida, four years ago.

Generick had been with the Roosevelt's for years, and had been practically one of the family while acting as care-taker and masseur, when Mr. Roosevelt was disabled physically.

Have House Ready as Pullets Begin to Lay

The ideal place for the pullets is out on range—preferably in range shelters. It is possible to keep the pullets on range too long. If over 10 per cent are laying they should be taken to the laying house. This is especially true if the other pullets commence to redder up.

With early-hatched birds, properly fed, there comes a time when they have to lay. In that case prepare for them. The laying house should be cleaned and disinfected. There should be clean litter. Have plenty of feed hoppers and it helps if they are similar to the type the pullets are used to eating from while on range. Be careful to have all the nests, droppings boards and roosts fixed. The windows, ventilators, etc., should be fixed before moving the pullets into their new quarters. Move the pullets as quietly as possible.

Many bloody eggs are caused because of undue excitement and rough handling. If one has considerable room and a large flock of pullets he should place similar pullets together. If all the pullets in one house mature about the same time they can all be handled alike. Pullets should be sorted.—Indiana Farmer's Guide.

Strain on Hens

It takes vigorous birds to stand the strains of high egg production, says Dr. W. A. Hagan of New York State Veterinary college, who states: "A 200-egg hen, for instance, produces at least five times her own weight in eggs in a single year, and this is perhaps ten times as much as she would produce without domestication."

Grain Ration for Poultry

Higher egg production is secured by feeding only a small amount of grain in the morning and the remainder at night. The morning feed should be in clean litter about four to six inches deep. There is a growing tendency among poultrymen to make the afternoon feeding in troughs and this is a good practice, especially where infectious diseases or internal parasites are present. A flock of 100 hens will ordinarily consume 10 to 12 pounds of grain a day.

Cleanliness Important

Regardless of how it is done, removal of droppings and floor litter from the poultry house is the biggest cleaning problem. Yet this operation can be made time-saving, says the Farm Journal. To insure easier cleaning, have the right tools—a regular scraper for droppings and a straight shanked hoe for cleaning and scraping the floor. Droppings boards and floor (wood or concrete) ought to be kept well oiled with oil.

RADIUM IN INDUSTRY.

Gamma rays, the mysterious invisible light given off by radium, have come into a new usefulness in industry. Writing in the current issue of the Review of Reviews, J. F. Springer reports some of the applications of radium and its gas emanation in examining metals.

X-Rays, which have been used for some years in photographing steel castings and forgings, have a penetrating power of about four and one-half inches. The gamma rays, which occur further from the range of visible light than the X-Rays, can penetrate more than ten inches through solid steel.

In use, it has been found that the gas which is constantly given off by radium is quite as effective for photographic purposes as the element itself. Means have been devised for capturing the gas in capsules, and taking it to the objects to be studied internally—at a relatively low cost. The chief difference is in durability; for while the radium itself gives off gamma rays for about fifteen hundred years, the gas loses its power within four weeks.

DEATH AND LIFE.

I am Death, and I will get you in the end!

I ride my steed beside each living thing that on the earth doth dwell;

I travel at his side, am ever near, And when he stumbles, also when he falls

Upon a jagged rock or pricking thorn I force the wound more deep, let Sepsis in,

That deep infection may his being burn with pain.

I do not hasten that foul action, for I know that

I am DEATH, and I shall get him in the end.

You are wrong Grim Rider on your charging steed!

Man is Immortal, and within his being rests

A living Soul that shall your schemes defy.

You may rob him of health, or even of life,

But in him rests a spark that will not die,

For he has sprung from out the Eternal mind

And will live on thruout Eternity. Oh Death, Thou hast no sting! Oh Grave, no victory!

KILLALA OMAGH

By ADELE THANE
© McClure Newspaper Syndicate,
WNU Service.

FROM the moment that he selected a steamer chair next to mine and leisurely lowered his ungainly form into it, I was impressed by the intent look of his blue eyes, the manner in which he scrutinized the faces of those passengers who elected to tramp the leaden decks of the Britannia in preference to sipping lukewarm tea in the stuffy salon. He would scan the features of each promenade with an attentiveness which bordered on the imprudent and, had he been less refined in bearing and dress, might have called down upon his white head the invective of more than one spirited matron who passed his way. The men paid him scant heed; already, in the intimate precincts of the smoking room, where a coddled brier seemed to educe the ungarished opinion of fellow travelers not present, they had marked him as an eccentric and, therefore, disqualified material for further sociable pursuits.

He was not old, as age is computed today; between fifty-five and sixty; but about his stooped shoulders there clung an aura of defeat which added 15 years to his appearance. In direct contrast to this bodily decrepitude, his large, well-cared-for hands, resting passively on each chair arm, in their very inertia, suggested a strength far greater than that of physical fitness. A dozen times a day I suddenly found myself staring at them with a fascination which admitted no satiety, and I would lift cautious lids to see if he had noticed; but always his bright, squinted eyes were fixed on the faces of passersby.

I wondered for whom he was searching and, my ambling gaze coming back to those quiet hands like steel to a lodestone, I speculated to what use he put the tapered fingers which still retained the contour and freshness of youth long since forfeited to the gods of senility.

At Monte Carlo, a woman came on board who seemed to possess for him a singular attraction. She was tall, with cream-tinted skin, and hair like polished mahogany when lamplight shined on it. Whereas he had been formerly satisfied to keep vigil from a stationary position, he now commenced to follow this comely Parisienne about the decks, always at a respectful distance.

Nearing the Sicilian coast, the captain accosted him as he leaned against the rail opposite my chair, calmly straining toward the remote purple thread of land. A brisk Tyrrhenian breeze carried the conversation starboard, and I distinctly understood what passed between them.

The captain said deferentially: "I'm sorry, sir, but I have received a complaint. I'm sure you meant no harm—" He paused.

"Ah . . . it is the young signorina in gray who had object to my espionage?" The voice was cultured, holding a hint of accent.

"I am not at liberty to say," replied the captain tersely, "but you must be more careful."

"Of a certainty, I have committed a breach of good breeding, is it not so? Please inform the signorina that I shall no longer offend." He motioned toward Sicily. "I depart—there."

The captain nodded and walked on, and I returned to my novel, but not to read. So the extraordinary gentleman was leaving at Palermo, too — for that was my point of debarkation. Such knowledge, beforehand, would have served an excellent reason for making his acquaintance; now, so near to port, any innovation would be inordinately obvious.

As if to disprove this mental statement, the elderly stranger spoke.

"How one's actions are misconstrued when the motive underlying is hidden!"

He had left the rail and was standing by my feet, smiling down at me from his unwieldy height.

"Me, I admire the esthetic, the exquisite, the symmetrical," he continued, "and I am considered rude." He shrugged expressively.

"That charming signorina, she reminded me if some one else, more beautiful — yes, but less youthful, perhaps."

"Age mellows beauty and refines it," I said, closing my book that he might be assured of my willingness to talk.

"Yes, it is so," he agreed, "ver" true of the signorina to whom I have refer. You know her maybe? — the Signora Costanza Tibaldi?" He saw my start of recognition. "She is a friend, yes?" he asked eagerly.

I shook my head. "I know her merely by sight," I answered, and the enthusiastic light went out of his eyes.

Those eyes, blue as cornflowers in the sun, puzzled me. They were not Latin.

He must have recognized my questioning inspection of them, for he said, "My name, signorina, is Killala Omagh."

Killala Omagh! A Celt with Italian mannerisms and speech! Indeed, he was an unparalleled old man.

"You think it curious perhaps?—because I am so thoroughly Italiano?" A brooding look darkened his lean features. "I have never seen that Ireland which was my father's and my mother's native land. It is a story of great length . . . and bitterness. Let us converse of pleasanter things, of Signora Tibaldi, yes?"

"The subject appears to be a favorite one," I said.

He folded his hands together tightly. "I am going to paint her . . . with emerald about her creamy throat . . . candlelight warming her mouth, seeking the copper in her lash . . . her hair coil against the fading splendor of a Venetian tapestry . . ."

As he delineated, his voice throbbed with a dynamic emotion which was sensed rather than heard, and I became aware that this putting of the Sicilian's full-blown loveliness upon canvas was to be his supreme gesture toward corporeal perfection. And what a gesture! He would have accomplished that which no other mortal had: the eternalizing of the fair signora's face; for she was intolerably haughty and had stubbornly refused to have even a photograph made of herself.

"You are to be congratulated, signor," I announced heartily. "Signora Tibaldi must be very fond of you."

"I have not yet met her."

"Then she has assented to having her portrait done at least."

"No . . . she has not assent. I will make request and she will grant it."

I gaped. "You have made no arrangements with her whatever?"

"Arrangements? They are unnecessary. I will paint her."

Was it possible that he had not learned of the signora's irrevocable rule?

"Costanza Tibaldi, does not pose for artists," I informed him gently.

He regarded me steadily. "She will pose for me. You shall see . . . I will paint her."

And something in the blue depths of his unflinching eyes hushed the denial which rose to my lips, and I was silent . . .

I saw him again two months later. He was sitting in the garden of a hotel, once tended by friars' hands, in Taormina. Etna waved her exalted plume above the uncovered hoariness of his hair, and the geranium hedge behind him was in full bloom. He did not notice my approach, nor was he conscious of my presence until I called him by name. Then he swung about, frowning in his endeavor to recollect me, and I revealed my identity.

"Ah, signorina," he said. "I know what it is that you are wondering."

He beckoned to a passing waiter and spoke to him briefly in Italian. Within ten minutes, the proud beauty of Costanza Tibaldi confronted me.

The painting was as he had visioned it; it was more; it lived—it had a soul.

"Wonderful—wonderful!" I cried. "But how did you obtain the signora's consent to pose?"

A slow, sad smile lined his gaunt face, and the sweetness of it lay across those unwavering eyes, blue, so blue, like the mountain toward which they had turned as if in strengthening communion. And he said:

"Four month the doctor give me to see. Yesterday, the time expire. But the good doctor, they have err . . . Always, always, I see the signora . . . in the candlelight . . . with emerald at her throat."

Male Pheasant Sets, Lets Mate Do Work

James C. Healey, of Lomita, secretary of the co-operative California Game Breeders' association, has a golden pheasant cock, but he did not know just how good the bird was until a few weeks ago, when breeding season came around.

Unlike most male pheasants, which are polygamous, this prize bird took unto himself one mate, observes a Los Angeles correspondent in the Detroit Free Press.

But after his little helpmate had obligingly laid a quintet of eggs and there was every probability of a full house in sight, he took a queer turn.

He asserted himself noisily, drove her out of the home nest and took over the entire domestic management, plumping himself down on the eggs. Now it is a biologic rarity for even a hen pheasant to set in captivity, but until Healy saw it there just hadn't been any such animal as a setting male pheasant.

Father pheasant kept this sort of thing up for more than a week, driving his anxious mate away every time she approached.

After more than a week, a change came over him. One day he allowed the hen to set beside him. When she had settled herself comfortably, he reached under himself and began to divide the eggs, rolling out three and keeping two for himself.

Things went on so for nearly two weeks more, when one morning Healy went out to have a look at his co-operating pheasants, and he found the mother pheasant parading around triumphantly with three brand-new chicks, while the old man was still setting on his own unhatched pair.

Left-hand automobile turns are responsible for twice as many fatal accidents and three times as many injured persons as those to the right, according to statistics compiled in Europe.

POULTRY FACTS

IODINE IS NEEDED
BY EARLY CHICKS

Common Feeds May Not Have Proper Amount.

Iodine is necessary for chicks, but is needed only in very small amounts, according to a writer in the Wisconsin Agriculturist. Common feeds such as oyster shell, grains, etc., will usually supply all of the iodine that the chicks need but as a precaution it is desirable to add very small amounts to the ration. This can be done easily by using an iodized stock salt. Certain sea weeds and some of the fish meal preparations are quite abundantly supplied with iodine but repeated trials have not shown any advantage for these materials. Ordinary mixtures apparently contain all the iodine that chicks need so it is not necessary to bring in the high priced products that are rich in iodine nor is it necessary to put iodine tablets in the drinking water.

For many years leg weakness, or rickets, has been the most serious difficulty in raising chicks. The addition of mineral feeds such as limestone grit and raw bone grits increases the amount of bone building minerals so that early chicks can be grown for the first few weeks without sunshine or any other source of vitamin D, but no mineral combination has as yet been discovered that makes it possible, to raise normal inside chicks unless vitamin D is added. Three generations of inside chicks were raised without difficulty when vitamin D was added to the ration fortified with mineral in the form of limestone grit and raw bone.

How the Feed Produces Different Meat Quality

Each of the basic cereals—corn, wheat, oats, and barley — if fed alone, produces a different quality in the meat of poultry, says a writer in the Montreal Herald. Such differences are due to the way in which the fat is produced in the different parts of the body. An even distribution of fat throughout the body, flesh and skin, is essential to high quality. The mixed cereals, plus milk, produce a high quality meat on an economical basis.

The character and amount of the rations fed will largely influence the gains in live weight. The amount of protein in the ration does not necessarily indicate the value in possible live weight gains to be made. Neither does the amount of fat in the average fattening ration supply all the fat produced on the bird fed. It is common knowledge that the large deposits of fat which occur in the animal body must owe their formation, in a large part, to other constituents of the feed than the fat content. In many finishing rations the low fat content cannot account for the high percentage of fat in the finished carcass. Recent biochemical work has shown that certain of the decomposition products of carbohydrates may be utilized in this synthesis of fat. The carbohydrate of the ration, in excess of that used for immediate heat and energy, is converted to fat and stored in deposits for later utilization.

Watch Drafts

Rains and cooler nights make it necessary that the farm poultryman take particular precautions to avoid drafts in pullet and laying houses. If the birds come into the house wet and are crowded, drafts are practically sure to result in fall colds and roup. Mature birds should have one foot of roost space per bird and pullets should have proportionate space as they mature. Green feed is essential in preventing colds and it can be used liberally. Removal of low vitality birds will decrease the danger of disease and colds throughout the winter, since the weaker pullets take cold more easily and become a constant source of infection. — Prairie Farmer.

Counting the Chickens

The first national chicken census is now in progress, the Department of Agriculture doing the counting. It is believed that there are 400,000,000 hens on our more than 6,000,000 American farms and that the average hen lays ninety eggs a year. Doubtless there are a lot of lazy hens that bring the average down. Knowing more about our chicken population, before and after they are hatched, will be of value, says the Country Home Magazine.

Guineas Look Alike

Male and hen guineas so nearly resemble each other it is very difficult to tell the sexes apart. In older age, the male has a larger-sized head with a large helmet and wattles, but in the younger birds it is impossible to note the difference. Birds two months old may be identified by their cries. The male gives a one-syllable call, the female call resembles "buckwheat, buckwheat" and is different from the call of the male.

"Lake of Seven Cities"

The Island of St. Michael termed "Lake of Seven Cities," comprises 297 square miles and is 830 miles west of Portugal. Once famous as the first stopping place for Spanish galleons on their return from the West Indies, the harbor city of Ponta Delgada of nearly 250,000 population presents a mixture of descendants from Phoenician and Carthaginian traders to an aristocracy descendant from Portuguese navigators.

African Porcupine Dull,

but He Knows His Tricks
The great African porcupine may be stupid, but he knows a trick or two.

Woe to the unwary beast which stalks him from behind. Instead of running, he charges in reverse, says W. H. Shippen, Jr., in the Washington Star.

The porcupine seems to have a monopoly on this surprise maneuver.

The victims of his trick often die in an unpleasant manner, with a head full of 18-inch quills that work inward because they are covered with fine barbs like fish hooks.

The porcupine, however, cannot throw his quills like spears. Some types drive them home with their tails and others rely upon the impetus of a sudden attack to fix the points in the flesh of an enemy.

Thus equipped for defense, the porcupine has been under no necessity to develop his wits. The big member of the rodent family moves unharmed in his nocturnal search for food through many regions of the New and Old Worlds.

There are at least 10 types of American porcupines, including the tree-climbers of South America, which have prehensile tails.

The Indians for hundreds of years have used porcupine quills for ornamentation, dying them in bright colors and working them into elaborate designs.

Moonless Month Period

Without the Full Moon

Moonless month is the name popularly given to a month in which no full moon occurs. Under our calendar February is the only month that is shorter than the lunar cycle and consequently it is the only month that can have fewer than four moon phases. The absent phase, however, need not necessarily be the full moon, but may be any one of the four. Likewise five phases of the moon occasionally fall in the other months.

The average time from one full moon to another is twenty-nine and one-half days, and the time from one phase to the next varies from less than seven days to more than eight. About every six years February has only three phases. When it is without a full moon, the preceding January and the following March may have two full moons each. This remarkable sequence, astronomers estimate, will not occur again for some 2,500,000 years. February was without a full moon in 1885, 1915 and 1934, and from approximate computations made by the United States naval observatory that month will be without a full moon in 1961.

Februarys without new moons or either of the other two phases occur at about the same intervals, but, of course, in different years.—Indianapolis News.

Growth of Oysters

It requires from four to six years to produce a good oyster, says a writer in Literary Digest. First the oyster clutch is planted every July. Little more than an old shell, this provides a rough surface for spawning. And a single female oyster can spawn from five to fifteen million eggs a year. On their first birthday the fittest youngsters are transplanted to an oyster farm. There, they grow up for a couple of years before being taken to still another home. At least another twelve months, often two years, pass before they are harvested. The oyster season, for fishermen and eaters alike, is from September to April. In the summer they are believed too light of weight to be tasty; therefore their year is only during the "r" months.

The Hound Family

The hound family includes so many varieties that it is often divided into two groups: the coursing dogs and the scented dogs. The Beagle's specialty is rabbits. The large nostrils and deep loose lips serve to great advantage in picking up the trail and the breed is famous for its tenacity in holding to the line. Once catching the scent, pleasure and success are signaled by filling the air with bell-like barks. And this vocal music places him at the top as the best singer in canine circles.—Los Angeles Times.

Yellow Color in Vegetables

The yellow color of vegetables, such as in the carrot, is the color of the provitamin A, which, taken into the system, becomes transformed there into vitamin A itself. There can be little doubt of the good effect of this vitamin on the human system. Its action, according to the best authorities, is to tone up the mucous membranes everywhere in the system, thus rendering and keeping them at the proper state of moisture.

Afterthought

The master of the house was hungry at breakfast, and swallowed a good part of his bacon before he tasted it. Then he began to protest violently to his wife about the flavor of the food.

His wife offered no apology, but rang for the maid.

"Maggie," she inquired, serenely, "what did you do with the bacon we poisoned for the rats?"

A Gentle Hint

He—I suppose I'm only a little pebble on the beach of your life?

She—Yes, you might stand a chance if you were a little boulder.

EASY MONEY

Two young Irishmen in a Canadian regiment were going into the trenches for the first time, and their captain promised $1 for every one of the enemy they killed.

Pat lay down to rest while Mike watched. Pat had not lain long when he was awakened by Mike shouting, "They're coming! They're coming!"

"Who's coming?" shouts Pat.

"The enemy," replies Mike.

"How many are there?" shouts Pat.

"About 50,000," says Mike.

"Begorra," shouts Pat, jumping up and grabbing his rifle, "our fortune's made!"

Sympathy

Herbert Morrison, English Labor M. P., was talking about sympathy. "Most of the sympathy you get," he said, "is like the story. A judge was sentencing a prisoner who looked about seventy.

"I sentence you, prisoner," he said, "to 25 years penal servitude."

"I'll never live long enough to serve that sentence," the prisoner muttered. The judge gave him a kindly look.

"Don't worry," he said. "Serve what you can." —Philadelphia Bulletin.

EASY PICKING

Harry—But you said I had locked your heart and had the key!

Kate—I know, but while you were away another fellow picked the lock.

He Proves It

"What's the difference between dancing and marching?" the girl asked her clumsy dancing partner.

"I don't know," he answered.

"I thought so," she commented, wearily. "Shall we sit down?" —London Tit Bits Magazine.

Attention Guaranteed

Man—Have you ever speculated on why you are so popular in your neighborhood?

Neighbor—No, except that I told my neighbors that I always played the saxophone when I got lonely.

Who Knows

The Judge (to prisoner)—When were you born? (No reply.)

The Judge—Did you hear me? Prisoner (sullenly)—What do you care? You ain't going to give me no present.—Royal American Bulletin.

Her Word Still Good

Mr. Naggyby—You used to say you wouldn't marry the best man in the world.

Mrs. Naggyby—Well, no one can say I didn't keep my word.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Rooster's the Male

Miss Urbane—Why does that hen always want to roost on that mail? Rube Barbe—She's homesick, I guess, she was hatched from a mail order egg that came by parcel post.—Pathfinder Magazine.

And Then Some

Friend—Edmund, how are you getting along at school?

Edmond—Great! I am halfback on the football team, and all the way back in my studies.

FINAL PROOF

"You must be a woman hater."

"Why?"

"You've never married."

Lesson for December 13

JOHN'S VISION ON PATMOS

LESSON TEXT—Revelation 1:4-18.
GOLDEN TEXT—Fear not; I am the first and the last; behold, I am alive for evermore. Revelation 1:17, 18.

PRIMARY TOPIC—When John Saw Jesus Again.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Jerusalem, the Golden.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Listening to the Ever-Living Christ.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Living Christ Among the Churches.

The first chapter of the Revelation, while it is an introduction to the entire book, is worthy of study by itself as a glorious revealing of Jesus Christ, his person and work. Some will wish to use the chapter as a preface to the study of the solemn and instructive messages to the seven churches of Asia which are found in chapters 2 and 3; but for most schools it will be better to concentrate on the messages of the chapter itself.

I. His Person.

While many of the characteristics of the Son of God are here presented, two are particularly emphasized.

1. His eternity (vv. 8, 11, 17).
In a world which understands but little of the meaning of its past, which lives in a badly befuddled present, and admittedly knows nothing of the future, it is a source of the deepest satisfaction and peace of heart to know and serve the One who "is and was and which is to come, the Almighty." He already "was in the beginning," and is to be through all eternity.

2. His glory (vv. 5, 13-16).
Jesus Christ is presented in verse 5 as "the faithful witness and first begotten of the dead," who is the ruler "over all the kings of the earth." The followers of Christ have a glorious captain and leader. The kingdoms of all the earth are his by right. Some day he will rule in fact and in person.

The infinitely beautiful description of our Lord in verses 13 to 16 is almost beyond interpretation. Have you seen him in his majesty and glory? The one who is "in the Spirit" on the Lord's Day" can still see "him who is invisible" (Heb. 11:27).

II. His Work.

1. His victory (v. 18).
He died for our sins but "was raised again for our justification" (Rom. 4:25). We have not a dead, but a living Saviour. He has "the keys of death and hell." The one who follows a human leader parts with him at the grave. But he who follows Christ does not lose him when he passes over into the next world, for he is there, and he has the keys of all authority, not only in this world but also in that which is to come.

2. His love (v. 5).
How deep and rich was his love toward us. It sent him to the cross.
3. His redemption (v. 5).
He "washed us from our sins in his own blood." We read in Hebrews 9:22 that "without the shedding of blood there is no remission." The cults and creeds which deny or ignore the need of cleansing in the blood of Jesus Christ may be religious but they are not Christian.

4. His fellowship (v. 13).
The candlesticks are churches and the stars are God's messengers. They are not alone in the world; he is "in the midst." Do we recognize his presence?

5. His return (v. 7).
"Behold, he cometh with clouds." How can anyone read the New Testament and fail to see, and to teach and to preach the Lord's return?

He is coming again. What is our duty in the light of his coming?
a. To live lives of purity and Christian nobility. (Read I John 3:3, and compare vv. 1 and 2.)
b. To be diligent in sacrificial service. "Occupy till I come" (Luke 19:13) is the command of the one who "went into a far country to receive for himself a kingdom and to return" (Luke 19:11).

Love of Nature
The presence of the love of Nature is an invariable sign of goodness of heart and justness of moral perception, though by no means of moral practice. When it is originally absent from any mind, that mind is in many respects hard, worldly, and degraded.—Ruskin.

A Wife
There is one name which I can never utter without a reverence due to the religion which binds earth to heaven—a name cheered, beautiful, exalted and hallowed—and that is the name of wife.—Bulwer.

Pride and Humility
Pride is not the heritage of man; humility should dwell with frailty, and atone for ignorance, error, and imperfection.—Sydney Smith.

Great Duties
Great trials seem to be a necessary preparation for great duties.—E. Thomson.

Ability and Opportunity
Where there exists honest ability there exists also honest opportunity.—G. C. Golden.

Date of Death, Resting Place of Our Presidents

The homes of the early Presidents of the United States are visited as shrines. Other Presidents are honored by individual memorials, established by the state or the community in which they lived. The list of Presidents, the date of death and place of burial is as follows:

Vernon, although a vault was made for his body under the dome of the Capitol at Washington; John Adams, July 4, 1826, crypt under the First Parish church at Quincy, Mass.; Thomas Jefferson, July 4, 1826, Monticello, Va.; James Madison, June 28, 1836, Montpelier, Va.; James Monroe, July 4, 1831, Marble Cemetery, Second street, New York, N. ## Houses of Prague Center of Mysterious Legends

The castles and houses of old Prague in Czechoslovakia seem to be centers of mysterious legends and beautiful history above the ordinary. In an old palace on Mala Strana behind a nail-studded door in a sculptured portico there is a secret garden of lawns and flowers, which for uncounted years has kept its beauty for the few who find it. Almost every old house in Vysehrad, Hradcany and Mala Strana is connected with some legend, often with the old motif of the devil getting men's souls for some pleasure enjoyed.

On the corner of the Charles square and the Na Skalce street is found a house said to have been inhabited by Faust, where he lived till the devil came for his soul. When in the Ghetto, get someone to tell you the story of the old Rabbi Jehuda Loew ben Bezalel, friend of the astronomer, Tycho de Brahe. He is said to have called up the dead for the emperor to see, and when the emperor laughed, he caused the ceiling to slowly come down on him, till in fear he asked that the catastrophe be avoided.

Noted Captures
Governor Peter Stuyvesant, of Manhattan, captured Forts Trinity and Christiana (Wilmington) in New Sweden (Delaware) in 1655 and ordered that Swedes who did not swear allegiance to Holland should be deported. The Dutch claimed the territory by right of purchase from the Amerindians; but the artful redskins had also sold the land to the Swedes. Governor Peter didn't know it, but while he was running the Swedes out of Delaware, Amerindians were running the Dutch out of Manhattan. The day before his assault on Forts Trinity and Christiana, Amerindians swooped down on his home town, massacred 100 whites and carried off 150 more.

Man Has Immortal Longings
Man is of the earth, but his thoughts are with the stars. Mean and petty his wants and his desires; yet they serve a soul exalted with grand, glorious aims—with immortal longings—with thoughts which sweep the heavens, and wander through eternity. A pigmy standing on the outward crest of this small planet, his far-reaching spirit stretches outward to the infinite, and there alone finds rest.

Seychellois Expert Sailors
A group of islands, rarely touched by ships, are the Seychelles in the Indian ocean between Goa, in India, and Madagascar, with their many races and tropical vegetation. The Seychellois are expert sailors, handling their boats with extraordinary skill. Throughout the country are vanilla plantations and coconut groves.

Colts' Legs Long
Like other new-born animals, the colt or foal has legs that are very long in proportion to the rest of the body, but they are shorter than those of the fully grown horse.

About the Octopus

Greek Fisherman With His Octopus Catch

Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

HERE is a fascination about sea creatures. Some, however, to the average layman, are fascinating only at a distance. Consider the octopus.

With its relatives, the squid, cuttle fishes, the pearly nautilus, and argonaut, the octopus belongs to one of the most remarkable groups in the animal kingdom, the Cephalopoda, meaning the animals that have their heads united with their feet.

Some octopuses are relatively small animals with a centrally located bulb-shaped body about two inches in length, erected above a head with a pair of gleaming eyes, for the creatures actually stand on their heads! The mouths are pointed downward and are surrounded by eight radiating arms, which together correspond to the "feet" familiar in other mollusks.

As one examines 12-inch specimens it is hard to realize that their relatives, the common octopuses of European and West Indian waters, have arms five feet in length, giving their possessors a spread of ten feet or more, while the great Octopus apollyon of the Pacific is known to attain the enormous diameter of twenty-eight feet! Their cousins, the giant squid, practically double these dimensions from the tip of their tail to the end of their great tentacular arms, and are the largest invertebrate animals known to man.

It seems impossible that these huge creatures, the submarine-like giant squid, with its efficient method of propulsion and aggressive habit and the weird, soft-bodied octopus, with its baleful eyes, protean changes of form and color, and repulsive manner of engulfing its prey—both among the most active and intelligent inhabitants of the sea—should belong to the same animal phylum as the lowly snail and clam. Yet science found that such is the case.

Marauder of the Sea
The common octopus is one of the most gruesome marauders of the sea. Hiding in rocky crevices on the bottom, or squatting in the midst of a nestlike lair of boulders, which it has dragged together, the repulsive creature lies in wait for its prey, the eight tapering arms sprawling in all directions, extending, clinging to the rocks with their powerful sucking disks, or undulating through the crevices as they explore everything within reach.

The large, coldly staring eyes are elevated on rounded protuberances, enabling it to see in all directions. Should an unwary fish or crustacean venture within reach, a long tapering tentacle darts forth, the slender tip encircles the prey, which struggles desperately to escape the adherent suckers, but without success, and the hapless creature is dragged down to the cruel jaws to be torn apart by the parrotlike beak.

This species of octopus is equipped with a double row of suckers, arranged alternately, along the underside of its arm, gradually diminishing in size toward the slender, tapering tips. At their base, the arms are united by a membrane forming a flexible funnel, which engulfs the captured victim and presses it against the jaws in the circular mouth-opening at the bottom.

Though the octopus appears sluggish as it creeps over the ocean floor, nevertheless, on occasion, it swims rapidly backward through the water, trailing its tentacles out around its head in a stream-lined bundle. It propels itself like a skyrocket by shooting a stream of water from its siphon in the direction opposite to its motion.

Colorful in Battle
Occasionally two individuals meet in seemingly mortal combat, their tentacles twisted in a tangled mass as they strike at each other with their murderous, curved beaks. When excited, their color patterns, which normally are changing through various shades of brown, yellow, and tan, become more vivid, and the warty prominences of their bodies project rigidly. Waves of red, purple, violet, and blue successively suffuse the body, sometimes standing out in contrasting colors on different areas, at the same time.

A black, inky fluid may be discharged from the siphon, in the murk of which the beast conceals its maneuvers. When the octopus creeps over a sandy stretch, its colors fade to pale tan or grayish white, harmonizing with the surroundings so perfectly that the creature becomes practically invisible.

Various tales are related of octopuses attacking persons who attempted to prevent them from returning to the sea. Occasionally, apparently authenticated cases are reported of encounters between divers and octopuses on the Pacific coast.

Pearl divers in the Pacific islands tell of fights with octopuses, and such incidents have strayed into literature, from Pliny to Victor Hugo. These are often inaccurate or exaggerated. In "Toilers of the Sea" Hugo describes a fight between Gilliat and an octopus which, though thrilling, is erroneous, and even the spirited drawing of Gustave Dore depicts an octopus unlike any that ever existed.

Nevertheless, the 28-foot octopus of the Pacific, or even large examples of the common octopus of Europe and the West Indies, are formidable antagonists at bay.

The common octopus is one of about 200 species belonging to the order Octopoda. Most of them live in comparatively shallow water, about 100 fathoms or less, though deep-sea octopuses are dredged from time to time. One of the weirdest of the deep-sea species is Baird's Octopus (Octopus bairdii), a pale, bluish-gray creature, with gleaming black eyes and elongate, tapering soft "horns" (or cirri) above them, ornamented with knobs on their sides. Its entire body is covered with minute, granular tubercles. As is usual among octopuses, the third tentacle on the left-hand side in the male is modified for sexual purposes. In this species, the tentacle terminates in a spoon-shaped structure with nine transverse ridges across it.

Some Strange Species
The fairylike Dancing Octopus (Octopus bermudensis) of Bermuda may be seen flitting about in the shallow, transparent water among the coral reefs. The brown body, spotted with white, is balanced gracefully upon long, slender tentacles. Some of these wave about like the arms of a tiny spritz; others pirouette upon the sandy bottom, barely touching it with their tips, for all the world like a ballet dancer.

In striking contrast to these species, the Umbrella Octopus (Opisthotentis agassizi) flaps about through the water, alternately opening and closing a parasollike membrane, thus assisting the siphon, which propels the animal through the oceanic depths by shooting a stream of water from the mantle cavity. This peculiar membrane connects the eight arms almost to the tips and, when spread out, is an efficient animal trap, enfolding within its embrace any fish or crustacea with which it may come in contact.

One of the most remarkable of all the cephalopods is the Argonaut, or Paper Nautilus (Argonauta argo). This delicate creature is so fairylike and so beautiful that it seems impossible it should be classed with the Octopoda, yet the eight arms and other structural characters betray close relationship. Its most remarkable feature is the fragile paper "shell," or "boat," of the female argonaut, famed in song and story. In it she was supposed to sail over tropic seas, unfurling the expanded tips of two of her arms as sails, or, as some poets have fondly imagined, using them as oars.

Eggcase of the Argonaut
These theories were long ago proved erroneous, but the truth is even more marvelous. The "shell" is not a true shell, comparable to that of other mollusks, for it is not secreted by the mantle. It is really an eggcase, formed between the oval expansions terminating the first pair of arms. The arms are held together, and gradually a thin gelatinous material appears between them. This is molded on the inner surface of the membranous expansions, and slowly hardens through exposure to the water to a spiral papery substance, sculptured with parallel ridges of most delicate texture. The two halves of the shell are joined on one margin to form a keel decorated by a double row of brown knobs spaced to correspond with the suckers of the arms, by which they are apparently formed, and by which they cling to the shell.

The argonaut inserts herself within the shell, still holding to the outside with her embracing arms, and lays her eggs, suspending them in a grape-like cluster to the interior of the spire. She swims about at the surface of the sea, nearly submerged.

About 80 Varieties of Frogs and Toads in U. S.

Toads and frogs belong to the great group of animals having a backbone (phylum: chordata) and to the class of animals called amphibia, meaning a double manner of living, namely, in the water and on the land. The salamanders and many extinct forms of life belong to the amphibia.

There are about 80 different kinds of toads and frogs in the United States, writes Marie Gaudette in the Girl Scout Leader.

All toads and frogs lay eggs in the water. These eggs are covered with a jelly-like substance which serves as a protection from enemies and as food for the young tadpoles. Toad's eggs are laid in strings of jelly, about 4,000 to 7,000 eggs in all. Tree frogs usually lay the eggs singly or in groups of four to ten. Frogs' eggs are enclosed in a mass of jelly, 1,000 to 7,000 eggs in a mass. All these eggs are round and they vary in size according to the species.

The tadpole, or polliwog, hatches within a few days and lives in the water from two weeks to two years, depending upon the species. The bull frog takes about two years to go from egg to adult frog. There are no legs when the tadpole first hatches. The hind legs are first to appear, then the front legs; sometimes, the left front leg is the first of the front legs to put in an appearance. There are four toes on each front foot and five on each hind foot.

Danger From Lightning Greater in Open Field

Relatively few people are ever struck by lightning, but it is well to try to avoid such a fate by bearing certain facts in mind. Lightning should be regarded as being very eager to get from the cloud to the ground by the path of least electrical resistance. It prefers to travel through metal; animal tissue is its next choice, then plant matter, and it goes through air only when nothing else is available.

The worst place to be during an electrical storm is standing upright in an open field, warns Dr. Thomas M. Beck in the Chicago Tribune. The next worst place is under an isolated tree. It is easier for electricity to pass along the wet branches than through the air, and from there to jump to a man than to pass through a dry trunk. Contrary to our instinctive belief, or horse sense, the vicinity of a well made lightning rod is far safer than that of a tree.

The safest place to be during a storm is either in a deep mine or in a skyscraper with a steel frame. If these are not immediately available, a house, preferably a well rodded one, is safe enough.

Wind Carries Corn Pollen

Nature takes no chances on having corn silks go unfertilized for lack of pollen. An average ear of corn has about 500 or 600 kernels while the plant on which it grows produces about 20 million grains of pollen, or 30 to 40 thousand for each silk to be fertilized. Corn pollen is very light and is easily carried by the wind across a 40-acre field. This is the reason it is so difficult to keep a variety of corn pure when different kinds are grown on neighboring farms.

Weight and Altitude

The weight of a thing is defined as the force with which it is attracted to the earth's center. As the force of gravity varies at different latitudes and elevations, weight is a variable quantity. It is equal to the mass of the object multiplied by the acceleration due to gravitation at the place where the object is situated. While the mass of an object does not change, its weight does increase as it nears the center of the earth.

"Phoney" Money

The term "phoney money" is a slang expression implying counterfeit or fake money. In the past, governments have debased the coinage by adulterating the silver and gold with base metals, or have issued large amounts of paper "flat" money, whose value is fixed by government decree alone, without a treasury reserve of gold, silver or other backing. Both are instances of "phoney" or unsound money.

Rainier Volcano

Mount Rainier, rising to a height of 14,400 feet in the Cascade range to make it the highest peak in the continental United States, is the result of volcanic eruptions. It was discovered in 1793 by the navigator, Vancouver, who disregarded the Indian name of Tacoma and named it after Admiral Rainier of the British navy. It was made part of Mt. Rainier National park by act of congress in 1899.

Tobacco Kills Rattlesnakes

There's another method of killing rattlesnakes and copperhead snakes besides beating them to death—a method discovered by the Ohio pioneers. While one man held the snake firmly with a forked stick, another would pry open its mouth and drop therein a quid of chewing tobacco. Then, released, the snake would crawl about one or two lengths, suffer convulsions and die.

POULTRY

YOUNG TURKEY HEN BEST FOR BREEDER

Birds Under Two Years Are Most Desirable.

By J. C. Taylor, Associate Extension Poultryman, New Jersey State College, WNU Service.

Recent turkey breeding studies conducted by University of California poultrymen indicate that it is not desirable to use turkey hens of more than two years of age as breeders.

This six-year study on the age of turkey breeders and the resulting progeny showed that average egg production decreased from 76.6 eggs the first year to 49.5 eggs the second laying year. Production the third and fourth years was 44 eggs, while only 27.6 eggs were produced the fifth year.

Although production decreased with the age of the turkeys, it was found that the fertility of eggs did not change significantly with age. Hatchability of eggs decreased after the second year.

The eggs laid in the second year were larger than those produced the first year. Poults hatched from the larger eggs were larger at hatching time, but there was little difference in sizes of birds at 16 weeks of age. Mortality was a trifle higher among the progeny of the year-old hens than among those of the two-year-old hens.

Wild Turkeys Nuisance, According to Accounts

Account books of 100 years ago and earlier show that the domestic turkeys were then very small. The average weight of those sold in Boston was seven to eight pounds, according to a writer in the Boston Herald.

There was, as told in Bentley's Dairy, a farmer and innkeeper named William Breed, at Nahant, early in the Nineteenth century, who had domesticated wild turkeys which when dressed weighed 14 to 18 pounds each. These were sold in the holiday season at Salem.

At New London and Norwich, Ct., in the district which includes parts of that state and Rhode Island, the turkeys were commonly 10 to 12 pounds, and some heavier, up to 14 pounds. This is the area long famous for "Rhode Island turkeys," Western in that state being the great shipping point.

Ohio settlers from New England in 1805 and for several years after found the wild turkeys there a nuisance. It is recorded that at the first seeding of wheat the wild turkeys were so bold that some sowers had to stop and drive them from the neighborhood. One woman trapped about two dozen in the corncrib by strewn shelled corn about it and leaving the door open.

Molting and Production

The length of time a bird is out of production can be estimated by the molting of the primary or large wing feathers, according to a writer in the Indiana Farmer's Guide. It requires about six weeks to completely renew the primary feather, next to the axial (small feather in center of wing between primaries and secondaries) feather. The remaining primaries are dropped in order, about two weeks apart and grow in at the same rate. Occasionally a bird sheds several primaries at one time, which in estimating length of time out of production should be treated as a single primary.

Poultry Gleanings

The size, shape and color of a hen does not affect the eggs.

Feather picking usually starts as a vice in closely confined birds.

The yolk of the egg is employed in making the finer kind of tawed leather.

The total number of co-operative poultry and egg marketing associations in the United States is 154.

Oats or barley, when ground, may be substituted advantageously for corn in rations for chicks and laying hens.

If chickens are given clean, wholesome feed the eggs are superior in flavor to those provided with inferior or spoiled feed.

Fowls that have been recently vaccinated can transmit chicken-pox to susceptible birds with which they are associated.

Chicken lice bite the birds rather than suck blood. Mites suck blood.

A clean range is conducive to the production of disease-and-parasite-clean chickens.

The difference in the color of the yolks of chicken eggs is controlled largely by the feed.

Geese, like ducks, will start laying at almost any time of year provided conditions are right.

CHILDREN'S AID SOCIETY.

Bernard B. Schwartzman, local optometrist, spoke on the proper care of eyes, stressing especially the care of children's eyes and the value of pre-school examination.

Miss Custenborder's report follows in full:

"The CAS stands for service as a protective, preventive and corrective agency and character building, rehabilitation and health activities for youth and children have a part in the program. At this time the Social Security Act is being put into effect and the Press and radio are doing an educational piece of work interpreting the Act. Our own local papers have devoted a large amount of space to this subject which has helped to clarify the difference in the function of the public and the private agencies.

The CAS has been requested to investigate several cases where problems such as immorality, non-support, cruelty and other evils exist. 36 children are involved in the families with which the CAS is working at the present time, trying to solve the difficulties and to keep the homes intact. Children are never removed from their own homes for the cause of poverty alone.

A small group of officials and interested citizens met in the CAS office recently to discuss the social questions confronted by the Society. It was decided to form a group for the purpose of studying laws pertaining to social legislation. The need for clinics for the examination of children brought to the attention of the Society, was emphasized and Dr. Lewis Brumbaugh volunteered his services in giving mental examinations. The Health Department and local physicians are very generous in giving their time and advice. Many of the corrections of physical defects are made possible because of the interest of the Kiwanis Club in the under-privileged children.

Many of the churches in the county donated the offering received at the Thanksgiving services, to the CAS. This will help to provide for the children during the winter. A farmer, grateful for his large crop of potatoes, gave six bushels to the CAS. A group of volunteers is rendering excellent service by sewing, taking children to clinics and making visits to the homes.

The CAS has received many appeals from families in need of temporary assistance, and by providing shoes and clothing, the children have been able to attend school regularly. The Red Cross has generously assisted the work by taking care of the shoe expenses.

The Needlework Guild contributed 126 articles to the CAS. This amount represents a large portion of the ingathering of the Guild and the Society is most grateful for the many nice garments.

During the quarter, one girl was accepted by the Rosewood Training School after she had failed to adjust in foster homes because of her low mentality. Another girl was committed to the CAS by the court on a charge of incorrigibility. She had been placed in a bad environment by her mother and is now making a satisfactory adjustment in a good foster home. In another home, a 15-year-old boy was living in miserable conditions, undernourished and poorly clad. He was given an outfit of clothing and placed in a good country home where he is gaining in weight and learning better standards of living. The parents of this boy are most uncooperative and expect the charitable organizations to feed and clothe the children and provide equipment for the home while they do nothing. Several plans are being considered in order to give the younger children a chance to develop. They are above the average intelligence but are handicapped because of their parents' indifference. These cases give some idea of the work done by the CAS for the dependent and neglected children in the county. 194 visits were made to or in behalf of children, 223 office interviews were held and 573 articles of clothing and shoes were given.

On November 30, there were 55 children under the care and protection of the Society and placed as follows—4 in wage homes; 14 with relatives; 15 in free homes and 22 in boarding homes.

And even if the king doesn't marry her, Mrs. Wally Simpson by this time must be eligible for a good, fat vaudeville or movie contract.—Salina (Kan) Journal.

There is no business in this section of the state that is conducted on a more modern basis than The Winger-ton Elevator which has become a veritable headquarters for the lines han-dled.

As regards feeds let it be said right here that this firm is considered au-thorities in these parts on these sub-jects. Just as they have come to look to them for information and advice in regard to feed, so have the farmers of this section learned that they can secure the best feed of the highest nutritive value. This establishment is headquarters in these parts for feeds and is continually the scene of varied activity.

The grocery department is a fea-ture that is very popular with the people and they carry complete lines of fresh vegetables. The prices that prevail here have aided in the lowering of th high cost of living in the surrounding territory.

In addition they feature a very complete stock of grains, general mer-chandise, coal, gasoline and a great many other items.

The farmer is the producer of the nation when it comes to the necessi-ties of the table and these are the prime requisites of existence. There is no question but that the farmer has been charged too much for goods in return for his crops. The Winger-ton Elevator is meeting this problem and adding to the prosperity of the farmers of the country.

In this review we are glad to com-plement The Winger-ton Elevator upon the large stock of groceries, feeds, general merchandise, grain, coal and gasoline and the part they are playing in the rapid development of the farm-ing sections of this part of the state.

The Town Tavern at York is one of the most popular places in this section of the state and enjoys a large patronage.

In traveling over the country you will find nothing in greater profusion than poor eating places. This is why it is indeed refreshing to go to such an up-to-date establishment as this. It is unsurpassed in quality of food or accommodation of service. When this place was established it was with the idea that a good modern tavern would be highly appreciated by the local and traveling public. That this principle was well founded is proven by the success attained. Here you will find everything pure, wholesome and deliciously appetizing. The serv-ice is equally satisfactory whether your order be large or small, and you will be made to feel that your trade is desired and appreciated by the manager. There is not a more attrac-tively furnished tavern in this section of the state than this and there is not one that has attained a greater mea-sure of popularity. There is none in which the service and cuisine are more pleasantly satisfactory.

In addition to food they also serve beer, wines and liquors and serve their patrons with the best and at reasonable prices. No matter whether you call for a whiskey and soda, high-ball, Planters Punch or Manhattan, Martini, Side Car, Jack Rose or any other of the host of popular cocktails you will find it mixed to perfection with the best ingredients used.

Now that the Christmas season is almost here, and the costume or mas-querade play is once again lending a touch of the glamour of make-believe to the hum-drum everyday world, it is time to see your costumer, Mrs. Jeanne Atwood. In the choice of a costume one should always be very particular, for nothing so spoils the evening as a costume that is not "just right" in every particular.

You can always rely on her as she is a profound student of the periods of the past and can fit you out as a Colonial Dame, a Knight of Old, or a Spanish senorita or in any other guise you may choose. If the costime is not in stock it will be made up for you. You can be sure that it will fit correctly, be historically ac-curate in all particulars and in every way satisfactory.

She has brought to Baltimore in the costuming service all the romance and glamour of the past; clad in one of these costumes you may dance away the whole evening thinking of nothing but the witching spell of the mo-ment, and realizing the satisfaction and joy of the perfect costume.

She is very well known throughout this vicinity; she has furnished many of the socially elite with costumes, and has frequently been called upon by fraternal organizations, amateur theatrical troupes, etc. All who have had occasion to use this service pro-claim it the best and we can do no better than recommend it.

In addition to having old fashioned gowns, hats, fans and beaded type gowns, Mrs. Atwood also has the latest style evening gowns and even-ing wraps and has a large stock from which to make selection.

In enlivening the dullness of life by furnishing costumes which breathe the glory and romance of the past, Mrs. Atwood is furnishing a worthy service to the community; in making that service exact and efficient, she merits the patronage of all.

Joseph L. Mathias of Westminster enjoys the distinction of being one of our leading authorities on memorials in this section of the country and is known for many miles around.

The placing of memorials over the graves of the dead is a custom that originated with our early civilization. In Egypt it was the custom for the Pharaohs to erect a pyramid during their lifetime so that when the final summons came a place was prepared for their reception. Notable examples of this were the famous pyramids of Rameses and King Tut. Their thoughtfulness has preserved to use a record of the civilization of the past centuries. In America every man is a king and the head of every family should see that a suitable memorial is placed for the family which he heads so that it will be in place and if financial adversity should come to his descendants the proper provision has been made for the preservation of the name of the family.

They offer in their scope of memorials everything from the very simplest slab to the imposing monument and the complete mausoleum. The workmanship in the setting of the memorials is very permanent as they are all placed on solid foundations.
