FOR CHILDREN'S AID Annual Drive will Commence next Monday.

This coming Monday, October 17, will mark the official opening of the 9th. Annual Financial Drive of the Carroll County Children's Aid Society, the goal of which is $3000. District the communication of the carroll country of the carroll carro trict chairmen and campaign workers are putting forth great efforts to make this campaign a success. Last year's campaign proved very successful, which fact was very encouraging to the district chairmen. They hope this year to do just as well, if not better. This can only be done through the united efforts of all campaign workers, solicitors, and con-tributing citizens. Carroll County has never been tardy in an emergency and certainly it will not fail to con-tribute now toward the maintenance of healthier and happier children and future citizens. There is a committee in each district to receive the funds contributed. The solicitors hope to call on every one personally. However, Carroll County is large and populous and some might be missed. Don't wait for the solicitor to come to you. Send your contribution to the Children's Aid Society.

Why not let public relief money take care of these children? Because they are not qualified for public funds And besides, they need more than food and clothing relief. They need a change of environment, care and guidance. Such children have been removed from homes wrecked by the separation of the parents or desertion of one or both parents. In other instances the cause is the incapability of deficient parents to care for and train them. Sometimes children are misfits in their homes and are misun-derstood and abused. Under the watchful eye of the trained worker and in a new environment, they become fine young men and women, who otherwise would be lost to useful

We often fail to realize that in our county there are many children falling in one or more of these classifications. The Society is at present car-ing for 49 of them, which is only a percent of those needing our help. The children are all in good homes, going to school and church regularly, getting nourishing food, good exercise, and good moral training. Once a year they receive a complete mental and physical examination and corrective work is done if necessary. They are being raised as any normal child should be raised, but only through your help. MILTON A. KOONS INJURED IN AUTO ACCIDENT.

Milton A. Koons, Taneytown was injured seriously in an auto mishap on Monday afternoon, on the road between Walkersville and Woodsboro, while hurrying to the funeral of a relative, Mrs. Jane Kuhns, Walkersville as it was being held at Haugh's

It is said that he seemed to have trouble in getting his car started, and it was to make up time that in ting out to pass a car in front of him he sidewiped it, tearing loose its running board on one side.

The Koons car is then said to have crashed into another car, a new Buick traveling toward Walkersville, reported to be badly wrecked.

The first of the two cars was being driven by Mrs. Mary A. Plitt, of Woodsboro, and the second by Mrs. Theo. C. Newlin, of Washington, who sustained injury to her nose. Two children were unhurt.

Koons was removed to a Baltimore Hospital where he is in charge of his son Dr. Earl Koons. As Mr. Koons has the reputation of being a careful driver his car must have developed some sort of internal trouble. The charge against him is reported to be reckless driving, and passing when the way ahead was not clear. The date for the hearing has not been

A PILGRIMAGE TO OLD CAR-ROLL COUNTY HOMES.

The Carroll County Council of Homemakers' Clubs made a pilgrim-age to a number of fine old Carroll County Homes, last Saturday, that included the Shellman home (about 1780) in Westminster, the Gist homestead (1795) the Shriver homestead (1762) Union Mills; "Thorndale" (1762) Union Mills; "Thorndale" (built early in 1800's) by Roger Birnie, near Taneytown. "Trevanion", near Taneytown. "Trevanion", near Taneytown, (Kephart 1805—Dallas 1855—McFadden 1867); "Antrim," Taneytown, Major McCaleb, present Mrs. H. M. Clabaugh home, built by Major Ege (18—) the Walden estate, Middleburg and the Avadon farm (1798) New Windsor.

These are but a few of the many fine old homes and estates still good condition to be found in Carroll and Frederick counties-once, all Frederick county. No doubt some of these will be visited by later pilgrimages of the Homemakers' Club.

POLITICAL CAMPAIGN NOW UNDER WAY.

Public Addresses Represent Debates for big Prizes.

Apparently, the battle for the Governorship of Maryland will not be a pink tea affair, full of pleasant nothings, but is the more likely to be one of campaign hard knocks, with the voters looking on with decided inter-est, trying to decide which candidate tells the most truth.

Attorney O'Conor asks Governor Nice why the state went $20,000,000 in debt during his administration; and the Governor replies that Mr. O'Conor is wrong by $14,000,000, and that he, the Governor, is not responsible for the $6,000,000 debt.

That the last legislature was largely guided by Mr. O'Conor and that it is responsible for a debt of now over $8,000,000, and that when he (Nice) became Governor the state already had a debt of $3,000,000; that was inherited by the present administration. Senator Tydings has commenced his campaign with an address in Calvert County. He says permanent solutions must be arrived at in order that all branches of business may that all branches of business may prosper—agriculture, business, labor. He expressed himself as favoring every honorable means to preserve peace, and is for a big Navy, second to none as the surest guarantee of the country's keeping out of war.

Herbert M. Brune, independent candidate for Governor has entered a charge against O'Conor for violating the corrupt practices act by campaign expenses in excess of the limit prescribed by law. He asserts that the law limits expenses to less than $4250 while expenses were $65,000 in excess of that amunt. The Superior court has been asked to investigate his charges.

Governor Nice and Attorney-General O'Conor appear to be primed for a busy campaign, answering each oth-er back and forth at political gather-ings much like in a debating contest— as it really is—with the Governorship as the big prize and the voters as

Leo Winberg, Republican candidate for Attorney-General, is actively in the field, and other candidates for state office, as well as for the offices in Carroll County in both parties are busy circulating around, handing out cards and otherwise looking for votes to be delivered on Tuesday, Novem-

Judge Dunne of the Superior Court, on Thursday dismissed the Brune petition, the Judge stating that the old law was not intended to cover legitimate campaign expenses, but was meant to cover cases of bribery and purchase of votes.

CUMBERLAND MILL CLOSES BE-CAUSE OF CIO.

The N. & G. Taylor Company, Cumberland, tin mill has closed because of interference of the CIO organization, says Mayor Thomas W. Kuhn. He states that when the employees organized a branch of the American Federation of Labor, all disputes were always satisfactorily adjusted. Later, without any meeting of the employees, a CIO organizer appeared at the gates of the plant and stopped its work. This was a "sympathetic" strike as there were no complaints about wages or hours. The plant has been closed, due to this interference.

SPEAKING OF APPLES, ETC.

Before you bite into that luscious looking apple, wash it off thoroughly to be sure you have gotten rid of all traces of the poisonous spray used to destroy insect pests while the fruit was growing," is the advice of Dr. R. H. Riley, Director of the State Department of Health. Dr. Riley doesn't limit his pregentionery reminder to limit his precautionary reminder to apples, but includes pears, grapes, and other fruits now in the market, and vegetables, also.

"Fruits and vegetables that are in use today," he said, "go through a great deal of handling before they reach you, or me. The custom of spraying growing fruits and vegetables with poisonous chemicals to probles with poisonous chemicals to protect them against pests, has also become very general. Much of the poisonous spray is washed off by the summer rains, but there is always a possibility of some trace of it being left. A thorough washing before the fruit, or vegetables are used, will remove dirt or soil acquired in handling and will get rid of the substances used to protect the growing crops from insect enemies.

"Great care is taken", Dr. Riley continued, "to protect Maryland fruit from damage by the spray used to de-stroy insects. The Bureau of Food and Drugs of the State Department of Health is in touch with farmers and fruit growers throughout the State, and with the Inspection Service of the University of Maryland. "Samples of Maryland-grown fruit are collected from representative or-chards by the Inspection Service be-fore the crop is harvested, and are brought to the chemical laboratories of the State Department of Health to be tested for traces of left-over-spray containing arsenic or some other poisonous substance. If excess spray residue is found the growers or shippers are notified that it must be removed before the fruit may be put on the market. Other States are giving similar service to growers and purchasers in other parts of the country.

'The growers are very co-operative and work very readily with us. But it is always safest to wash both fruits and vegetables before using them."

A NAME CORRECTED.

In the advertising supplement that accompanies this issue the name of the proprietor of the Cross Keys Din-er should be John E. George, and not "Sam," as printed. This supplement should have appeared in last week's issue, but as it did not arrive until 10:30 Friday morning, it could not be handled. The printing of the supplement was not done in our office. It is being sent to only about 800 nearby subscribers.

OUR NATIONAL DUTY.

Notwithstanding our numerous troubles in this country, it is still a good place in which to live, as compared with Europe of today. No people are ever fully contented, whether judged by large or small divisions. If there is too much monotony in life, and how we are "getting along" we can usually find something to squab-

But, as a Nation, we are at least enjoying peace, so far as firearms and killing are concerned, and life and property is safe from war destruction. Thankfulness, if not reigning supreme, is at least present to a greater degree than we give it credit for.

We have political and industrial unrest to perhaps a greater extent than ever before in our history; but it is largely self-made, and can be remade when we choose to do so. And some day, in all probability this choice will be in operation. Truthfully, we think, much of the trouble we have is prevented by our immense foreign population, who have brought with them too many un-American ideas and practices. What we need more than ever, is an united assertion of our own "ism"-a house-clearing, and notice to other "isms" to get out, and stay out. It is a National

"WE THE PEOPLE"

Francis S. Key-Smith, Great-grandson of Francis Scott Key

(The Carroll Record is very glad to have been furnished with this article for publication, through Edward S. Delapiaine, Atorney, of Frederick. We trust that it will be widely read, not only for the timeliness of the subject it covers, but because of the high standing of its author and his thorough familiarity with the history and thought of the illustrious men whom he quotes and epitomizes.—The Editor.)

"Abraham Lincoln, the most representative American commoner and one of those people of whom he aptly said, "God must have loved * * because he made so many of them," possessed in a rare and remarkable degree every attribute of the aristocrat's culture, wisdom and sound judg-

There was nothing of the demagogue about him. Neither was he, in any sense a populist leader. Conservative, thoughtful and honest he countenanced neither the clamorings of the proletariat nor the extreme refinement of the aristocrat. He equally discountenanced arbitrary rule whether by the rabble or the idle profligate rich.

Holding with Jefferson, "that all men are created free and equal," he declared, "the government could not exist half slave and half free." Yet, he never sponsored, or advocated, equal suffrage for the freed slave or for the ignorant, shiftless and irresponsible, the fear of which was the stumbling block with the South in freeing its slaves.

Though of humble origin, born in a log cabin in the back woods of Kentucky Lincoln was, upon his mother's side, through her natural father, of aristocratic birth and "he felt whatever distinction he possessed had come to him from this unacknowledged heritage of aristocracy.

The hardships of a life of poverty in the woods of Kentucky, Indiana and Illinois, to which his nomadic father wandered in search of a livlihood for himself and family, made of Lincoln one of the common people and he championed their cause with wise and just moderation and policy and not with unequal demands for socialistic equality enforced and established by law. His viewpoint was the viewpoint of the founders, equal opportunity for all under law. In his first message to Congress as President he insisted that the true purpose of all government was, "to clear the paths of laudable pursuit for all; to afford all an unfettered start and a fair chance in the race of life."

Of the government of the United States he said it "formed a strictly Federal community; that the States were as essential to its welfare as was the central government." That he was fighting not "to centralize the Union through the overthrow of the States", or "to enable the North to dominate the South."

Such views clearly show Lincoln opposed to all arbitrary equality sought to be imposed upon any by law. He won his way up by a firm belief and conviction in the merit system and gained through the hardest kind of productive individual effort and labor, a place for himself in the foremost ranks of men through self mastery and the mastery of an education, faithfully described by another as from within and not a revolution "an evolution from without." The training which Pope says," from the common mind". This opportunity to advance oneself, for which Lincoln stood, and succeeded through, is the great value of the Constitutional government of America and none appreciated it more than this rugged child of the American forest, Abraham Lincoln, the man of the plain people.

The honest heart and soul of "old or supported anything else. Modern day socialistic and communistic trends would have been for him as heartrenddom never would have permitted him the States.

to countenance the arbitrary rule and dictatorship of any form of government, by the people or by few. His to all chicanery and distortion of principle.

The celebrated utterance in his Gettysburg speech, "Government of citizens, citizens under the law and through protection of the honestly the people, by the people and for the people," embraced only the people wise and worthy enough to support and govern themselves and provide and suitably maintain their homes and families. If they could not do this he knew they could not be trusted to govern others.

He also knew Government of the people did not contemplate the riffraff, the worthless, the loafer and the criminally inclined, willing and anxious to rob and live upon the hard earned gains of others who succeeded, as he had succeeded, through their own efforts under laws affording an equal opportunity for all.

The dishonest frenzied theories and threatened violence of the lawless striker was never Mr. Lincoln's coneption of the people or the people's right to so govern. His own personal efforts and consistent labors to make himself a worthy citizen and to succeed through his own individual initiative and merit were far removed from any idea of an established or enforced equality for all under law.

When as a member of Congress he introduced a bill for the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia he frankly stated that it ought not to pass except upon the request of the people of the District and the bill, therefore, provided for "emancipation with the consent of the voters," who at that time did not include the loafer, the worthless, the criminal, the slave or women. It is quite evident, therefore, that Mr. Lincoln's conception of I the people was some other idea than that which included the bad and indifferent along with the worthy and the desirable. So with him, as with the founders, "We the people" and "Government of the people, etc.," included only the worthy, whether rich or poor, who with an equal opportunity under law could advance themselves with such assistance as all have the right to expect from his neighbors living together amid civilization and freedom.

Had the then conception been that all alike were entitled to equality, man, woman, slave and free, America would never have advanced or the people, any of them, prospered and been free. "We the people," and "Government of the People" has, like all things human and earthly, their natural and proper limitations and this was as greatly appreciated by the great commoner as it was by Washington, Jefferson and all the founders and truly great American statesmen.

Lincoln, though professedly and exceptionably a man of the people, was never what may in this day be defined as a stream-line Democrat. A Whig unlike they were, from opposite ex- to establish and preserve. before he was a Republican, he was always constructively conservative and he ran and was elected to no public office upon the platform of any radical principles. From the first, while opposing the extension of slavery in the northwest territories, he declared himself against Federal interference with slavery in the independent slave-holding states, maintaining that the Federal government had not the Constitutional right or power to abolish slavery in these states.

Ever sympathetic for the worthy and deserving poor he extended a helping hand to all who wished to rise by their own labors and merit as he had risen, but he as quickly turned his back upon all others and a deaf ear to their appeals. The faker, the fraud, the schemer, solely out for self at the expense of others, whether of the poor or the rich, he did not recognize as of the people but the enemy of the people as well as of themselves and the country.

Lincoln would as quickly have gone to war to save the independence of the judiciary as to preserve the Union knowing the destruction of the one was the sure annihilation of the other. He knew that a triumvirate government of three separate and distinct Departments, Executive, Legislative and Judicial, could not exist under the dictatorship of any one of them, but that liberty and Union must so per-

Lincoln's struggle to educate and fit himself for recognition and advancement proves him to have been of like mind with Jefferson.

All the founders were well versea in a knowledge of the history of governments and of mankind and they knew the evils and dangers, which history taught of the unbridled rule of an ignorant people and populace.

The checks and balances which they established in the government they created were purposely designed to safeguard against oppression both from the ignorant and cultured dictatorial rule. The system was intended as a safeguard against each for history taught that the danger was as great from the one as from the other and that only through intelligent control of both could the people, rich and poor, worthy and unworthy, survive and prosper and not lose all freedom and liberty in folly and license.

The system was adopted in the main from the best and wisest English concepts of liberty, starting with Magna Carta in the reign of the English tyrant, King John. It is not the heartless scheme of continental European governments or the concept of their policy, literature and morals, which has driven so many from their shores to America to find surcease from woe and liberty under law.

Under it England has expanded her dominions and commerce throughout the world until with truth it has for years been said, "The Sun never sets upon the English flag."

Under it Americanized, the American people have enjoyed the greatest ington spurning at the close of the freedom of action and prosperity of any people upon Earth.

Under it Washington was born and reared amidst affluence and influence but Lincoln, whatever his antecedents may have been, was essentially a worthy type of the poor but deserving the hope of either promised reward or people. Snoring— Cause and Cure

DR. JAMES W. BARTON @ Bell Syndicate.—WNU Service.

WHEN we think of disturb-ing noises it is the automobile horn, the locomotive whistle, the siren of the ambus lance or the fire truck that we have in mind. Noise is so harmful to the body and brain that all over the world-London, New York, Paris, Berlin, and in smaller cities—laws are now in force to lessen all noises.

Noise keeps the nerves tense, the nerves keep the muscles tense, so is not outdoors and one of the most disturbing noises—to others—is snoring. Snoring has been measured by the audiometer in sound units, the decibel, which is the smallest sound that can be heard by the normal ear. This machine shows that the sound of the snore is 40 decibels which is equal to the sound of a noisy office or automobile.

In Hygeia, Margaret McEachern stated that, according to careful estimates, one out of every eight persons snores more or less regularly, and no doubt every person snores occasionally.

How It May Be Cured.

What is the cause of snoring and what can be done about it?

There are many causes of snoring but most cases are due to some obstruction to the breathing-enlarged turbinate bones, bending to one side of the septum (the bone and cartilage partition between the nostrils), adenoids in children. Many cases are due simply to lying on the back and letting the mouth

The "noise" from snoring is due to vibrations while breathing in and out of the soft palate and the uvula (the little portion of flesh hanging between the tonsils or the place where the tonsils have been).

Lying on the left side when the left side of the nose is "blocked" and the right side when the right side of the nose is blocked, prevents snoring because it allows the wing or side of the nose to drop down, leaving more air space because nostril becomes more widely

However, as Margaret McEachern points out, the best plan to cure the "snerer" is to have him visit the family physician or the nose and throat specialist and have obstruction corrected.

Water and Reducing.

It is often pointed out to over-weights that as fat tissue holds so much water, if they would cut down on their water or liquid intake for three or four weeks, or until the body, by means of the water in all foods, has taken a definite amount of water from the foods, they would lose weight more rapidly. This is a point known to boxers, wrestlers, jockeys, and others whose weight must be kept within certain limits but seems to be unknown to a great many overweights.

Overweights state that they always thought water was "good" for them because it washed out wastes, cleared out the kidneys, and added no weight. Water is "good" for everybody; every body needs it in order to work properly. But the body needs only so much water or liguids daily, and in fat individuals much of what is not used is stored away in the fat, just as the fat itself is stored away in overweights because it is not used or needed.

What most overweights forget is that all the water taken into the system must be considered or accounted for; this means not only the water taken in as a drinkwater, tea, coffee, milk, soft and hard drinks-but also the water in food. For instance, semi-solid foods contain a great amount of water and even the driest most solid food contains some water. Nuts, dry cereals and crackers may contain as much as 5 to 10 per cent of water; fruits and vegetables contain a great amount of water, some as high as 85 to 95 per cent.

Burning of Jewels

The chief of the pyrometry section of the bureau of standards, says that diamonds heated in a stream of oxygen become incandescent (rapid oxidation or burning, but no flame) at 800 degrees C. (1470 F.). Emerald is a gem variety of beryl, which melts at 1410 degrees C. (2570 F.). Sapphire, Oriental ruby and Oriental emerald are gem varieties of corundum. Corundum melts at 2050 degrees C., or 3700 degrees F. Although the usual variety of ruby is the Oriental ruby, the ruby is sometimes of the spinel variety, such as almandine, balas and spinel rubies, which forms are not definite minerals.

Costa Rica's First Flag

Was of Spanish Country The flag of Costa Rica is closely associated with the history of that nation. Costa Ricans take pride in recalling that the first flag ever flown over their lands was that of the mother country, Spain. In 1505, the city of Cartago was granted a scutcheon on which appeared several castles and lions (the emblem of Castile) and six black eagles on a silver field. "Fide et Pace" was the motto on this scutcheon.

When Costa Rica became independent it joined Iturbide's shortlived empire and, therefore, its first flag as an independent nation was that of Mexico. However, history tells us that this flag was never raised over Costa Rican territory, says the Washington Post.

When the Central American federation was formed, Costa Rica, being one of its components, adopted its colors: Two horizontal blue stripes separated by a white stripe.

Later on, the national flag was modified in several respects and finally, when complete independence was achieved, the present flag was adopted. This flag and the national coat of arms were adopted by means of a decree dated September 28, 1848.

The national Costa Rican flag has five horizontal stripes, of which the uppermost and lowermost are blue, the next two white and the center one red and of twice the width of the others. The national coat of arms appears in the center of the white stripe.

The Costa Rican flag brings to the mind the ties that bind the sis-ter republics of Central America, and pays homage to those who spent their lives in the service of the nation. And the rays of the rising sun symbolize the brilliant future that the people believe awaits their coun-

Art of Glassmaking Has Long Survived in Venice

Glassmaking has been associated with the Venetians for more than 700 years. In the city of Venice since about the year 1000 glassmakers have expressed in their designs something of the splendor of the city, its gayety and sparkling color.

The guild of glassmakers was established on the Island of Murano in the Adriatic during the 1200s. The furnaces have never been transferred from that little hidden spot and the industry has had a continuous history that is full of interest both on the artistic and human side. Glassmaking reached a high development in Venice during the Crusades and continued all through the days of Venetian power and glory. Through days of misfortune in the history of this city, notes Alice R. Rollins in the Los Angeles Times, the furnaces at one time were almost extinguished, but in the Nineteenth century the craft was revived and many of the early traditions which had been preserved were followed.

More than any other of the arts that were brought to such high development in Venice, glassmaking seems to have been a peculiar product of her environment. It is characterized by gracefulness in form and an especial ethereal quality in color and texture. It seems to take on something of the charm of the sea and the softly sparkling atmos-

The President's Flag

The President's flag consists of the President's seal in bronze, upon blue background with a large white star in each corner. The seal consists of an eagle, holding arrows, symbolic of war, in one claw and an olive branch, symbolic of peace, in the other. The design of this seal is in the floor of the entrance corridor of the White House. When the President visits a vessel of the United States, the President's flag is broken at the main the moment he reaches the deck and is kept flying as long as he is on board. When the President is embarked on a boat he usually directs that his flag be displayed from the staff in the bow of his barge. When he passes in a boat flying his flag, vessels of the navy parade the full guard, four ruffles are given on the drum, four flourishes are sounded on the bugle, the national anthem is played by the band, and officers and men salute.

Termites Use Caterpillars

A naturalist describes the occurrence of the larvae of a Tincid moth in the nests of a New Zealand termite. The larvae depend upon the material of the nest for their food, and they may be seen moving along in file, at regular intervals, as if in a procession, each escorted by a few soldier and worker termites. It appears that the larvae exude a strong odor which is attractive to the termites. Just as one may have flowers in his room for the sake of their perfume, so the termites have caterpillars.

The pilot fish, a handsome little fellow of blue and gold, swims in perfect safety in front of the shark's terrible snout and guides the killer to its prey. As a reward he obtains scraps of food and is said to feed also on parasites which infest the shark's

Fisherman Finds Glasses In Belly of Big Codfish

AUGUSTA.—From the insides of cod Maine fishermen report they get a more varied lot of objects than from anything else that swims the Atlantic waters. A Vinalhaven fisherman reports having found a pair of horn-rimmed glasses in the belly of a big cod. "Bet I've taken enough things out of a codfish, in my life, to start a small variety shop," he said. They even say that a fish surgeon, opening a 25-pound cod, found inside of it a jack-knife with a big blade open, half a dozen starfish and two glass marbles. The cod grabs anything in its way.

"Well, you see, sir," replied the foreman, "it was this way: Jake went into the mixing room, probably thinking of something else, and struck a match in mistake. "Struck a match!" interrupted the proprietor in dismay. "I should have thought that would have been the last thing on earth he would

Age-Old Mistake Traced

To Loose Use of a Word That the whole of Homer's "Iliad" was once written so fine on parchment that it could be enclosed in a nut was believed by ancient writers. This extraordinary statement quoted from Cicero by Pliny, has puzzled many modern students, writes Dr. Henry A. Sanders in the Michigan Alumnus Quarterly Review.

"If one wished to write the 15,693 verses of the 'Iliad' on the thinnest paper and with all modern instruments, including our powerful magnifying glasses, so as to enclose it in a nutshell," Dr. Sanders says, "he would have to use a coconut and not any of the nuts known to ancient Italy." Pliny's error, he continues, lies in the fact that he accepted Cicero's statement without investigating it and that, in his opinion, the remarkable thing is the extreme smallness of the book, and not the mere fact that it was bound into a book, itself a remarkable feat in those early days of literature.

The whole misunderstanding, Dr. Sanders explains, hinges on the use of the Latin word "nux," which means both the tree and the nut, as we would say "of walnut" or "of chestnut." Pliny, he points out, takes the phrase, "bound in nut," to mean the actual nut, whereas Cicero meant the board covers of the volume, used to keep the parchment leaves from curling. Thus, he says, the remarkable thing to Cicero was not the size of the volume at all, but the fact that this was one of the first literary works to be bound in book form.

Wycliffe's Bible Had No

Division of the Verses

In the first Bibles there was no division into verses. Wycliffe's Bible was of course all done by hand, as there were still no printing presses in his time, observes a writer in the Montreal Herald. Matthew, the third chapter, and verses one to six will serve as an illustration of his work. It is in the Old English script.

"In thilke dayes came Joon Baptist prechynge in the desert of Jude, saying, Do ye penaunce: for the kyngdom of heuens shall neigh. Forsothe this is he of whom it is said by Isaye the prophete, A voice of a cryinge in desert, Make ye redy the wayes of the Lord, make ye rightful the pathes of hym. For-sothe that ilke Joon hadde cloth of the heeris of cameylis and a girdil of skyn about his leendis; sothely his mete weren locustis and hony of the wode. Thanne Jerusalem wente out to hym, and al Jude, and al the cuntre aboute Jordan, and thei weren crystened of hum in Jordan, knowlechynge there synnes."

There were many copies made of Wycliffe's Bible. One is believed to have belonged to the historic figure, John of Gaunt.

In spite of the fact that a bill was brought into parliament forbidding the circulation of the Scriptures in England this same John of Gaunt fought for the right of the people, saying that the Word of God was their birthright. The Wycliffe Bible existed only script until 1850.

Use of 'Doggy' Expressions

Most of us don't realize how often we use "doggy" expressions in our everyday speech. Jenny Teeter, writing in Dog News magazine, lists these expressions in an interesting way. "He dogged my footsteps" indicates too much attention from an acquaintance, but probably originated from the habit of devoted dogs of following their masters. "Being hounded" is not quite the same thing, because it connotes nagging and probably sprang from the traits of hounds which follow their quarry until their job is completed. Other expressions which have their origin in the habits of dogs include "barking up the wrong tree," "his bark is worse than his bite," "baying the moon," "crooked as a dog's hind leg," "dog tired," "working like a dog," "leading a dog's life," and "let every dog have his day."

'Oz' for Ounces, a Symbol The "oz" for ounce is a symbol rather than a true abbreviation. The word is derived from the French "once," which in turn comes from the Latin "uncia," meaning twelfth part. According to the Oxford dictionary it is a Fifteenth century abbreviation of "Fonza," Italian for "ounce," the abbreviation being retained in English. Other authorities, however, state that the "z" was used by early printers for the arbitrary mark of terminal contraction. During the middle ages a character similar to "z" was used at the ends of abbreviated words, and the early printers not having type for the symbol used the "z," which was which was the nearest to it in the printer's case.

The Laurentian Mountains

The Laurentian mountains constitute a crescent-shaped plateau-like height of land in British North America, extending for over 3,000 miles from Labrador to the Arctic ocean, surrounding Hudson bay, forming the watershed between Hudson bay, the St. Lawrence and the Great Lakes, and dividing the same bay from the sources of the Mackenzie river. The average elevation of this range is about 1,500 feet, although some of the peaks attain an altitude of 3,000 feet.

ADVENTURERS' CLUB

HEADLINES FROM THE LIVES OF PEOPLE LIKE YOURSELF!

> "The Furred Terror" By FLOYD GIBBONS Famous Headline Hunter

TELLO EVERYBODY:

Orville E. Gibbs of Jackson Heights, N. Y., is today's Distinguished Adventurer, and the tale he tells is one that will make the hair creep up the back of your neck. It's a yarn that reminds me of the gladiatorial arenas of Rome where they used to throw Christians to the wolves and pit men in deadly combat against Numidian lions and bears from the German forests.

But it was neither a lion nor a wolf, nor a bear that brought this package of thrills to Orville Gibbs, and instead of a Roman arena, he fought it out in the living room of his own house.

I don't know how it was in Roman times, but nowadays adventures, like Charity, almost always begin at home.

All his life, Orville Gibbs has been thrown into intimate contact with wild animals. He ran away as a boy to join a circus, started as a water carrier for the elephants and worked his way up until he was a fullfledged trainer handling all sorts and species of wild beasts. From the circus he drifted to Hollywood and helped direct animal films. While he was there he was given several monkeys which he kept in cages in back of his house. He trained these monkeys, and they're still there, taken care of by his father. None of them ever gave any trouble.

Jack Was a Bright Monkey.

But there's always an exception. Orville moved East, then went to South America, bought another bunch of monkeys and shipped them to his home in New Rochelle, N. Y. He and his wife started to train the whole bunch, but one of them-Jack-was brighter than the others. Orville concentrated on him. He would bring him into the house and have all sorts of fun with him. But Orville's wife kept away from that monk. He had bitten at her arm several times.

One evening Orville brought Jack into the house. He had him on his lap, playing with him in the usual manner when suddenly, without warning, Jack emitted a ferocious screech and leaped for Orville's throat. And that was the beginning of as horrible a battle as any Roman arena ever saw.

"As he came for me," says Orville, "I threw my right arm to ward him off. Jack's teeth snapped shut, and he broke practically every bone in my hand. The hand started bleeding as if an artery had been severed. I was so stunned that I could do little but shove him away, and at that he made another screech and leaped again.

It Looked Bad for Orville.

"I threw up my left arm. He crunched it at the wrist, piercing the skin and breaking several bones. Then I leaped to my feet, just as he jumped at me again. I was dressed in riding clothes, and the heavy boots stood me in good stead. I kicked at him savagely and it stopped him for a moment, but he bit clear through the boots several

That was just the start of a terrible fracas—and a mighty bad start for Orville. "There I was," he says, "cornered by a wild monkey, weighing thirty-two pounds—screeching horribly—and leaping from chair to chair to table trying to get at me. Whenever he thought he had me he leaped at my throat, and here I was, my hands useless, bleeding like a stuck pig, and growing weaker every minute."

Orville's wife had run from the room. He shouted to her to pass him his rifle and cautiously she broke a pane from one of the French doors and pushed the weapon through. "To my horror," says Orville, "I could not even pull the trigger. I passed the gun back through the broken pane to my wife telling her to cock it—all this time dodging several savage rushes and leaps. Finally the gun came through, cocked. don't know to this day how I ever succeeded in aiming it and pulling the trigger, but if I had placed the gun to his head and fired I couldn't have made a more perfect shot—right between his eyes!'

He Shot the Maddened Beast.

Blood began to pour from the gaping hole in the monkey's head. But still, to Orville's horror, THE BEAST CAME ON AGAIN AND AGAIN! Frozen with terror he passed the gun out again for his wife to cock. And again Orville doesn't know how he ever managed to fire it. This time the bullet caught the animal right through the eye and down he went. "And," says Orville, "down I went, too!"

"Orville's wife called the hospital. The ambulance came, and the orderlies found him lying on the floor covered with blood. Orville's own doctor rushed to the hospital. "And," says Orville, "he didn't have his glasses with him. While I lay groaning and bleeding, they sent back for the glasses. They gave me morphine and more morphine. By the time the glasses did come the doc told me that I was so well doped up that I might as well go on the operating table without an anaesthetic.'

Orville told him to go ahead. It took them exactly one hour and a half and forty-eight stitches to sew up the holes that animal had made After that came Pasteur injections. His hands were reopened and the bones reset. "And now," he says, "I'm back to work with a stiff right thumb and a pair of hands and wrists that-will be weak for some time

And nowadays, Orville has a motto. No more monkeys!

Dental Cabinet Modernized

A dental cabinet with photoelectric control of the drawer compartments has recently been designed which permits the dentist to open the drawers without actually touching the cabinet. The drawers can be operated individually by passing a finger over beams of light directed at a photo-electric cell. Its use eliminates the possibility of transferring disease from the mouth of one patient to another through the handling of cabinet drawers.-Electronics.

Ancient Dwarfs

A runted and twisted tree patriarch, said to be more than 400 years old, is one of the sights in the famous tree nursery of Kintaro Kibe in Tokyo in which hundreds of strange dwarf trees are exhibited.

an airfield near Karachi they saw seven stationary planes sink in the earth. Investigation disclosed that thousands of rats had tunneled under the ground. Poison was spread to kill the rodents, but with little effect. Gassing, firing, trapping and all other modern devices were employed against them, but without success. At last, says the London Daily Express, the authorities, exasperated, gave in. Now the rats are in full charge of the airfield.

Selfish Man Is Conscious

Of Little Else but Self The truly wise man will measure himself by the universe, rather than the universe by himself—if he must devote any considerable time or thought to the business of measuring, which may be very decidedly overdone. One of the greatest of virtues is found in the lack of selfconsciousness, and it is a virtue that it is not easy to acquire. Nor can it exist in association with selfishness, for the selfish man is conscious of little else but self. So the question is at bottom moral, spiritual and religious. Taking the broader, and also the kindlier and more tolerant view, it ought to be possible for a man to see that it does not greatly matter what happens to him, as long as he keeps his soul clean and his honor unstained. By referring everything to self, and judging everything by its effect on self, one finds it very easy-indeed, one can not help doing it-to condemn the world and the general life of man and other men as wholly evil. The trouble is with the point of view, which is far too narrow and altogether wrong. No men have preached the truth more eloquently and powerfully than those who failed in the most pitiful way to apply it to their own lives.

It was the lure of precious metals then that drew explorers and generals to foreign shores. Spain, rich in silver and gold, was to the ancients what Peru and Mexico in the New World later became to the Conquistadores. Phoenicians, Carthaginians and Romans, in turn, swarmed to this peninsula, stripping it of fortunes in metal. One of the dramatic scenes of history was that triumphant procession in Rome when Scipio, home from victorious campaigns on the Iberian peninsula, paraded the streets with chariots heaped with silver from ravaged Spain.

The treasure chest of them all, of course, is the Almaden district, in Ciudad Real, with nearly half of the world's supply of mercury.

More than 20 of Spain's 50 provinces contain among other deposits copper, lead, zinc, iron, coal and

The Homely Octopus

Of all the ugly creatures found in the sea, the octopus must surely take first prize. Its appearance strikes terror into the minds of bathers, but it is only in looks that it is so offensive. It is harmless, and never has been capable of killing and devouring men, a feat described by Victor Hugo. It belongs to that class of animals known as the mollusca in which we find snails, oysters and other shellfish. Its food consists entirely of members of its own class, for, although some writers have stated that it feeds on fish, those who have made a study of this strange creature find that it feeds only on crabs, lobsters, oysters and other shellfish.

The Useful Bat

Bats frequently invade attics of houses. Although undesirable in houses, these creatures are really beneficial as they eat many destructive insects. They are nocturnal in habit, hiding during the day in secluded places. The first thing to control them is to find any opening by which they may be entering the house; and to close this up with either boards or wire netting. Recent experiments have indicated that bats do not like the fumes of naphtholene. It is suggested therefore that from 2 to 5 pounds of naptholene flakes be scattered in the attic. If this remedy is tried, it should be carried out before the openings are closed up.

Threads of Life

It's odd. A man thinks his own will guides his own life. But the world is full of human lives; a man is bound to blunder into some of them, weave his own with them indissolubly, or touch and drift away and touch again, or narrowly miss touching and maybe never know. The pattern is on the loom. And sometimes, looking back, you see a part of it. A thread weaves in and out and disappears; it is not broken but still weaving somewhere. Is it incidence when it appears again? Unknown or unconscious forces.

Rose-Colored Shades

THEY were lovely things to look upon, Delia Merrow's lampshades. She made them herself with her own hands. It was her busi-

SHORT making lampshades, and she made them lovely because when SHORT the light glowed through their sheer STORY and perfect workmanship, even she

ness, her livelihood, looked lovely.

Delia Merrow could not be counted even among the world's pretty women. Her complexion was as sallow as bleached saffron, her nose much too thin for the broadness of her face, her eyes a lustreless gray, her hair dead brown like grass seared by a scorching sun, and yet, if one would but look further, Delia

Merrow had a heart of gold.

Because her lampshades made her look lovely, Delia made them of a soft rose - colored silk with fringes of rose and gold.

In all her thirty years she had never cared to look lovely until she met Wilbur Dixon. He had come one night to call for a lamp ordered by his mother, and somehow he had kept on coming. Delia had been careful never to appear before Wilbur except under the kindly glow of her lamps. She wanted nothing more of life than to have Wilbur Dixon think her lovely. And he did. She knew it by the light in his eyes when they met hers. She felt the quickening of his pulses the minute he came into the room. Some day he would ask her to marry him. Delia knew that. She prayed that the day would never come. She wanted to keep on dreaming with him, indefinitely, in the rosy glow of her silken shades, and a proposal of marriage from him would spoil it all.

One evening shortly after he arrived, a customer came to talk with Delia about a shade. She was a little thing, pathetically pretty, and seemed much disturbed. Wilbur tactfully withdrew into the next room, but he could not help overhearing the conversation.

"I can't take the shade, Miss Merrow," said the woman. "I hated to come and tell you, after me ordering it and everything, and you working so hard on it."

"Don't you want it?" asked Delia, a bit brusquely.

The woman's breath caught in a half-sob. "Want it?" she asked. "Me want it? Seems like I never wanted anything more. My boy made me a lamp at school, but seems like we never could afford a shade. We been savin' our money for near six months, me an' my boy. Last week he was run over, and, 'course, the money had to go for him."

Delia thrust a large paper bundle into the woman's arms.

"Here," she said, impulsively, "you take it. I made it for you. made it as lovely as I could. It'll make your place kind of cheerfullike for him. If you want, you can pay me later, but I'm not looking Wilbur came in the minute the woman had gone. He hurried to Delia's side.

"Delia," he said, "there never was a woman like you. Will you marry me?"

Without a word, she ripped the shade from the floor lamp by the piano, and stood revealed before him in the honest white glare of the electric lights.

"Look at me!" she flamed. "Look at what I am. You've never seen me as I really am before. I've been careful of that. That is why I've never wanted to go anywhere with you, why I've been careful to meet you only when the light of the lamps would hide what I really am." He dropped his head.

"Delia," he said, humbly. "Look at me! My face isn't even my own. Part of it was shot away by shrapnel in the war. Plastered over, skin grafted, everything done to it by army surgeons, I've been glad for your rose-colored shades, glad as long as you didn't have to look at me in the cruel glare of a bright light. That is why I never insisted on your going out with me. You, Delia! You are the most beautiful being God has ever created."

Then for the first time she looked at him, and saw that which the roseate glow from her silken shades had mercifully concealed—a face. the left side of which was seamed with great livid scars on a deadwhiteness like wax. A one-sided face that could only half smile, half weep, half feel. "Wilbur," she whispered, against the comforting roughness of his shoulder, "I adore you."

Calumet, Name for Peace Pipe

The name calumet was customarily used by the French in Canada for the peace pipe of the North American Indians. It was smoked on all ceremonial occasions, before warring expeditions, in concluding peace treaties, and as a preliminary to religious rituals. The calumet is usually 2½ feet long. The stem is decorated in a highly symbolical manner, usually with eagles' feathers, porcupine quills, and women's hair. Native tobacco, mixed with willow bark or sumac leaves, is

REVERENCE FOR GOD

LESSON TEXT-Exodus 20:7; Matthew :33-37; 12:33-37. GOLDEN TEXT—Our Father which art in leaven, Hallowed be thy name.—Matthew

Character reveals itself through the words and deeds of a man. He may try to conceal his real spiritual condition and may assume an outward appearance of piety but he need not say many words, nor meet many of life's problems, before his true condition is revealed.

Our lesson for today touches primarily on the matter of the words of men, presenting first God's command that in speaking we are to show reverence for His name, and then leading up to the expression of that reverence in abstinence from swearing and from idle talk.

I. Reverence Commanded (Exod.

The forbidden thing is the taking of the name of the Lord "in vain." Our use of the word "vain" carries the meaning of "useless, without purpose or meaning." This is part of what is in mind in this commandment, for the name of Jehovah is sacred and is to be reverenced as standing for the eternal God. It is never to be used carelessly, or for a frivolous purpose. All too often we tell jokes or stories which have no real purpose or meaning except to elicit a laugh and in them we use the name of God. We all need to exercise care at that point.

The Hebrew word translated "vain" has the additional meaning of "evil" and "falsehood." Men are so bold that they may even use the name of God to support themselves in a lie. God hears and will in no wise hold them guiltless.

II. Swearing Forbidden (Matt. 5: 33-37).

The Sermon on the Mount (socalled), from which this portion of Scripture is taken, is difficult to interpret to the satisfaction of all. Some disregard its evident application to the kingdom and, attempting to apply it in the midst of an ungodly generation, fall into such inconsistency that they abandon the effort and regard the teaching of the passage as impossible idealism. Others, who rightly interpret the passage as presenting the laws and principles of life in the kingdom of God when it shall be fully set up on earth with Jesus as King, fail to make any application of those principles to the life of those who are now living in this world-though not of it-but rather have their citizenship in heaven. This is also an unfortunate error.

We who follow the Lord Jesus are not to swear by either things sacred | doughty soldier. lar. Perhaps He has in mind that our lives should be so true that men will not need to have any kind of an oath to be assured of our sincerity and honesty. Some believe that all oaths even in court are forbidden, while others, with due respect for the feelings of those who hold this view, regard the taking of oaths in official matters as not being in mind. All would agree that the careless and almost sacrilegious use of God's name in administering oaths would be taking His name in vain.

Swearing is also entirely beyond the pale with Christian men and women. It is all too common with both men and women. A great church has organized a "Holy Name Society" to keep its members from using the name of the Lord in profanity. What a telling comment on the times in which we live!

III Judgment Assured (Matt. 12: 33-37).

Jesus had cast out a demon who had possessed a man and made him blind and dumb. The Pharisees could not deny the miracle but attributed it to the power of Beelzebub, prince of the demons. Jesus closed their mouths by pointing out that Satan did not work against himself, and went on to speak solemn words regarding their and our responsibility for what we say.

A day of judgment is coming, when we shall answer for the idle and wicked words which we speak. While we would not bring condemnation upon those who indulge in the innocent pleasantries of life by making too severe an application of these words, neither should we destroy their evident import by failing to apply them to our daily conversation. One need but listen to the casual small talk of men and women in public places to realize that we need to give attention to the matter of elevating not only the conversation of others but our own as well to a nobler and more helpful level. Surely Christians should speak for the glory of God on every occasion and in each circumstance of life.

The way to accomplish this worthy purpose, and the only way, is to have the heart and life filled with the good treasure of God's Word, for verily out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh. What do your words and mine indicate to others regarding what is in our

Reindeers Are Guided by

Cord Attached to Horns Reindeer are trained to be driven at 3 to 5 years of age. They are guided by a leather cord drawn tightly at the base of the horns. The harness consists of a collar and a single trace leading from the collar downward between the animal's legs to the pulka, so far back that it is out of reach of kicks. Bulls are worked until they are 15 or 16 years old, and they are probably at their best at 10 years, writes Mason Warner in the Chicago Trib-

A native family can live comfortably with a herd of 200 reindeer. Some have more; some have less. Reindeer culture is limited to Lapps in Sweden; no Swedes can invest in it. The state is against any ownership except that of the Lapps, and the law prevents anybody except a Lapp from grazing deer on public lands. The mountaineers refuse to tend the herds for anybody not of their race, but it was four Lapps from the Torne Trask region who took the first reindeer into Alaska and taught the Yukon Indians how to care for them.

Name Priscilla Derived

From Latin Clan Title The name Priscilla has the curious meaning "the ancient." It is said to be derived from the title of a Latin clan, so called because of its great antiquity, and indicates long life for its bearer, writes Florence A. Cowles in the Cleveland Plain Dealer.

In the eighteenth chapter of Acts we read that Paul, while in Corinth, made his home with Aquila, a Jew, and his wife Priscilla, who were tentmakers. In II Tim. 4:19 Paul writes "Salute Prisca and Aquila." My Bible says that the two were the same woman and that Priscilla is a diminutive of Prisca, "ancient." If this is the fact, then Priscilla would mean "little old lady." But from the fact of Paul's using Prisca in this way it would seem that that might be the apostle's affectionately familiar nickname for Priscilla, the true form of the name.

St. Priscilla, wife of a Roman senator, used her wealth to relieve the poor and in the first century caused to be excavated the famous cemetery which bears her name and is on what was once her property.

To us, Priscilla means primarily Priscilla Mullens, Puritan maiden and heroine of Longfellow's "Court-ship of Miles Standish," who mar-ried John Alden instead of the Constitution and By-Laws

A constitution is defined as the organic law of any organized body or association of persons. A by-law is defined as a rule or law adopted by an association, corporation or the like, for its government in the conduct of its own affairs, subordinate to its constitution or charter. Robert's Rules of Order says that an incorporated society frequently has no constitution, the charter taking its place, and many others prefer to combine under one head the rules that are more commonly placed under the separate heads of constitution and by-laws. The same authority says that the rules of a society, in a majority of cases, may be conveniently divided into the four classes of constitution, by-laws, rules of order, and standing rules, though in some societies all the rules are found under one of these heads, being called either the constitution, or the by-laws, or the standing rules.

Site of Mexico City Mexico City owes its site to the Aztecs. Like ancient Troy, it was built one city on top of another, and historians believe that Indian temples exist in the subsoil there, having sunk gradually into the earth because of their great weight. The old time city was a watery kingdom. Its valley was made up of a series of large lakes, and the city itself was founded on an island in the lake of Texcoco. It had an elaborate system of canals and dikes. Some of its houses were built on stilts in the water, and waterways connected it with various parts of the valley. When Spaniards conquered Mexico City, they demolished most of the relics of the Aztec civilization.

Reconstructing Skeletons

Every museum has a staff of scientists who specialize in reconstructing animal skeletons. Many work only on ancient remains, but all had to learn with bones of modern animals. Often they work for years on a single dinosaur or prehistoric elephant. However, by reconstructing a whole group of plants and animals, says the Washington Post, they can show what kind of land the animals lived in, whether it contained any forests, swamps, hills or oceans.

Typhoid Fever Ceases

To Be an Army Plague SAN FRANCISCO.—The army has defeated typhoid fever, according to the annual report of the surgeon general of the army, made public at the Presidio here.

During the fiscal year ended June 30, 1937, only one case of tyhpoid developed in the army, and that was in the Philippines. Not a case has been contracted on native soil in two years, the report says. Formerly it was one of the biggest problems of the army.

At present the leading causes for admission to army hospitals are accidents during athletic exercises and such ailments as bronchitis, influenza and tonsilitis.

Just as the navy is finding motor vehicles the most deadly enemy of the sailor, the army is finding the automobile one of its principal causes of death. During the fiscal year, of 664 deaths in the army, half were due to injuries, and of these 105 were suffered in automobile accidents.

They share the same bed, one never turning in without the other. In the morning they arise at the same time, do their setting up exercises in unison, take a walk together in the park, cook and eat breakfast together.

Then they leave for work together-both are foremen, and if they are late it is quite possible that in their haste they have dressed in each other's clothing-not that it makes any difference.

She flipped the fish to the barge on which she was sitting, then baited her hook for another try.

Monument Near Montreal

Pays Tribute to Heroine No episode in Canadian history is more stirring than that of the valiant defense of a fort in the picturesque Canadian village of Vercheres against a marauding band of Iroquois Indians about 250 years ago by a fourteen-year-old girl, recalls a writer in the Boston Herald.

Madeleine de Vercheres is the heroine's name and her epic feat is commemorated by a monument to her honor. It stands, only a short distance from the ruins of the fort she defended, at the edge of the St. Lawrence river, 10 miles below Montreal on the south shore The fort and blockhouse at Ver-cheres were besieged in the summer of 1690 by a band of Iroquois who massacred the "habitants" working in the fields. The Seigneur of Vercheres and his lady were away but their fourteen-year-old daughter, Madeleine, determined to hold the fort. This she did for a week until the fort was relieved, being aided in her courageous stand by a "garrison" consisting of an old man of eighty years, her two brothers, aged twelve and ten, and two cowardly soldiers. The Indians supposed that the fort was held by a strong garrison and dared not make a direct attack. They prowled about until a force from Montreal drove them

The following account of the defense of Vercheres given by Madeleine herself appears in standard Canadian history books: "I placed my brothers on two of the bastions, the old man on the third, and I took the fort. All night in spite of wind, snow and hail, the cries of 'All's well' were kept up. One could have thought the place was full of soldiers . . . I may say with truth that I did not eat or sleep for twice 24 hours but kept always on the bastions. I kept a cheerful and smiling face to encourage my little com-pany with hope of speedy succor."

'Penalty Oaths' Are of Several Different Kinds

The saucer wouldn't break, so a Chinese witness in a Cambridge (England) court had a hard time promising to tell the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth. Breaking the dish was his way of saying his soul also would break if he lied.

Such oaths, when a person swears to tell the truth under pain of punishment if he lies, are called "penalty oaths," and take many different forms, observes a writer in the Washington Post. For instance, in Assam province, India, witnesses grasp a dog or chicken cut in half with one blow. This implies the same fate will strike them if they testify falsely. Another Indian region has the speaker stand within a circle of rope. He'll rot like rope, it's believed, if he commits perjury. Sometimes the head of a tiger, bear or other fierce animal is brought to "court" in Siberia and Africa. Those involved in a suit call upon the animal to kill them if they lie.

William the Conqueror swore "by the splendor of God," and King John "by God's teeth."

Daddy of the Holidays

It is to King Edgar that we owe the holidays which fall at Easter, Whitsun, and Christmas, as well as our half-holidays, such as Saturdays, observes a writer in London Tit-Bits magazine. King Edgar lived in the Tenth century and was responsible for many sane laws and reforms. In his day noon was about three in the afternoon, at which hour Nones were recited. Later Nones were moved to midday and periodically the people were given a half-holiday for the purpose of praying. Unfortunately in time religious observance gave way to boisterous revelry, and the authorities stopped the weekly half-holiday. It was not until the Nineteenth century that half-holidays and certain festivals were observed.

Mustard Grows Everywhere No spice or condiment has a longer history than the mustard seed. Probably in ancient days next to salt it was used more than any other seasoning. The reason for this lies in the fact that it is a cosmopolitan plant and grows in many places. The tiny seeds, which may be brown or yellow, are used in their own form for spicing pickles and fruits and for a few other purposes. The ground mustard flour which we know as dry mustard is one of our staple condiments. Then we have a large variety of mixed mustards which vary in flavor, both on account of the kind of mustard which is their base and because of the liquids which are used to blend This is often vinegar and sometimes wine.

Slandering the Pig
We often say someone is "a dirty pig," but little do we realize that we are slandering the poor pig. This little animal is naturally clean and will not wallow or sleep in filth unless nothing better is available. Pigs are among the cleanest of all farm animals if allowed to be so, asserts a writer in Pearson's London Weekly. Most pigs are "pigs" because their owners force them to 'ive and bathe in dirty places. Neither is the pig more lazy than other animals, if allowed his freedom.

Ma like a sugar, will you? I won't be a whiff getting ready. Atta boy!"
The voice trailed off behind a banging door, leaving Ma and the uncomfortable Jimmie in a vacuum.

The boy broke the silence abruptly; tensely: "I want to marry Hope, Mrs. Dale."

"You will need hope . . . and faith, and courage to undertake such a contract, boy.

"You do not understand Hope, Mrs. Dale. She is sensitive, im-pressionable, spirited . . ."

"You may marry Hope, James, with my blessing. I really like you, boy, and wish you happiness. Perhaps I can help you if life gets too confusing."

A few mornings later Hope read the answer to her letter in the beauty column conducted by the famous Maybelle Lejeune, and drew a pained sigh. No suffering was too great in the cause of beauty, so she took the broom and duster in her hand with the same spirit that Joan of Arc showed when she led her army on to victory, and began making a clean sweep.

When Jimmie called that evening Hope was sweetly reminiscent of her day's labor, seeming all that was housewifely and desirable. Her arms and back ached but her cheeks were flushed with a natural rose bloom.

Hope was a glutton for punishment. The broom and the duster were her masters, and she blossomed under the strict training. Maybelle Lejeune had accomplished in one paragraph for Mrs. Dale what a lifetime of pleading could not have done. She was often to be seen those days with her hands folded quietly in her lap and a Mona Lisa smile playing about her lips. She had time to visit old friends, a pleasure she had denied herself for years.

One afternoon Hope decided to clean the attic. She had not been up those narrow, steep stairs since early childhood.

A locked door! Hope peeked through the slits in the unmatched board door. Typewriter! Curiosity had to be gratified at the expense of honor. Standing on an upturned chest, she wriggled over the top of the door where the partition did not meet the slanting roof. On a small table was scattered a ream of typewritten sheets, some carbon copy, and many filled with rough notes. One neatly piled bundle was signed in her mother's own handwriting:

Hope crept shamefacedly down the stairs, and when her mother returned the table was arranged for dinner and the savoring aroma of roasting beef assailed her nostrils. As Mrs. Dale innocently kissed her daughter, a happy, contented smile lay deep in her mysterious, quiet

Girls Given Title of "Mrs." In olden times all women in this country over twenty-one years of age, and sometimes even young girls, were given the title of "Mrs." says London Answers Magazine. In the register of burials for the parish St. Margaret's, Westminster, the burial of Milton's second wife and his infant daughter, aged five months, are both registered as 'Mrs. Katherin Milton," the only mark of distinction being the letter "C" for "child" after the second

SURVIVOR RECALLS FIRST BOAT TRIP IN GRAND CANYON

Thrilling Tale of Hardship And Adventure Related By Old-Timer.

PHOENIX.-Last surviving member of the first expedition into the Grand canyon by boat is James Fennemore, a spruce old fellow of some 90 years, who sits every day at the Arizona club here to spin his tales of adventure.

The spare, lean-faced Fennemore has had more than his share of adventure in one way or another, but tops the tales he tells by his arduous inland voyage on the Colorado river with Maj. John Wesley Powell.

"It wasn't fun," he said, speaking of the trip through the canyon. "Our clothes were wet for days. We slept beside mud puddles that bred mosquitoes big enough to bite through a Navajo blanket, and we stood in water up to our necks for hours dragging our boats around some of the rapids."

Drives Wagon Train.

Born in London, Fennemore came to America in 1864, and although he didn't remain long, he came again in 1866 to stay. Like most young men of the day, he saw opportunity in the West.

A photographer by trade, Fenne-more came West by working as a driver on a wagon train taking sup-plies to Fort Bridger, Utah. The wagons were pulled across the plains by oxen.

"Texas longhorns are what they were," said Fennemore, "and wild ones at that,

When the going was good the train made seven or eight miles a day. It took four days to get the wagons across the Platte river, using 36 cattle to each wagon.

Finally arriving at Fort Bridger, Fennemore pushed on ahead 90 miles to Salt Lake City, where he got a job in a photograph gallery.

To him one day came an army officer, Maj. John Wesley Powell, who wanted some pictures printed. Fennemore did the job and Major Powell took the prints back to Washington. With the aid of the pictures the officer succeeded in getting enough money from congress to outfit an expedition to the Grand can-

"Of course I went," said Fennemore. Fennemore remained with the expedition seven months, going from Lee's Ferry up the Colorado river and into the mouth of the Grand

"Every day was an adventure," e said. "We started on February 28 from Salt Lake City and took the stage as far as Toquerville. We outfitted in Johnson's canyon east of Kanab and set out overland for the

The expedition ran out of supplies in what Fennemore terms the "Henry mountains."

They then made their way over the range by digging steps for the horse and men in a loamy cliff. Once inside the Grand canyon, Fennemore decided to return to Salt Lake City. He operated a photography store for a time, and retired in the late nineties.

Blind Man Hears Autoist Kill His 'Seeing Eye' Dog

BOSTON. - Patrick Folan, 43 years old, is sightless again because Elaine, his "seeing-eye" dog, is dead-victim of a hit-run driver. Standing in his back yard awaiting the return of his pet from an exercise run, he heard brakes screech and then a series of animal cries. Folan shouted for help. His wife and three children ran to the street and found the dog lying helpless, its back broken.

With the blind man faltering behind them, they carried Elaine into the house. A veterinary took her to the Angell Memorial hospital, where she died.

Folan, a machinist, lost his job during the depression. Scorning relief, he bought a portable saw and went from door to door cutting wood. Three years ago he was blinded by a piece of wood which flew from the saw. He continued to work, however, making bird houses and small household articles. The Norwood Knights of Columbus bought him Elaine for $600 and sent him to Morristown, N. J., where he learned how to use her as his "seeing eye.'

They're Beautiful, but

Slightly Dumb, Says Profs BERKELEY, CALIF.-A test of 600 co-eds at the University of California has indicated that there is a tendency toward lesser intelligence when pulchritude is outstanding. That is the finding of Dr. Samuel J. Holmes, outstanding authority in the realm of racial behavior, and S.

E. Hatch, his associate. The two scientists refuse to admit that the result of their tests justifies the expression of "beautiful but dumb," but find rather that too much pulchritude has a tendency to draw the beautiful co-ed into too many other lines of distractions to enable her to make the most of her academic career.
