ACCIDENTS WILL HAPPEN

Hunters, and other sportsmen as well, have a right to be proud of their safety record. For, much as we'll be hearing about hunting accidents from now through next January, these mishaps will account for relatively few of the 9,600,000 Americans who are killed or injured in accidents of all sorts every year.

But, so long as there are any hunting accidents, we shall have too many of them; and probably the best way to prevent or minimize them is to be prepared for what is always the unexpected. "Emergencies Don't Wait" Week is being observed this year at the outset of the hunting season, October 4th to 10th, with this idea in mind. But you don't need to wait until then to overhaul and restock your first-aid kit or home medicine cabinet. In the field, in the shop or kitchen, accidents won't wait while you get ready for them.

And before going afield, even the most seasoned veteran may well review the famous and comprehensive safety rules for firearms by John Amber, editor of "The Gun Digest" . . . and see to it that the youngsters who are going out this year get a thorough drilling:

- 1. Make sure guns stored away at home are unloaded. 2. Guns should be locked away from children. 3. Keep firearms in good working order. 4. A gun pulled carelessly out of a car may shoot someone, the first morning of the hunting season, or the last. 5. Don't drag your gun through wire fences. 6. Following another hunter under tree limbs and through underbrush is dangerous when carrying loaded guns. 7. Never use your gun to punch or club game out of the brush. 8. Don't carry a cocked gun. 9. Carry the gun with its muzzle pointed to the ground. Never point it at anyone. Don't let the muzzle clog with snow or mud. 10. Don't shoot moving objects until you know what they are. Be certain no one is in the way.

To which we can only add that there are very few drug-stores in the woods, that people have been wounded doing camp chores, and that good intentions won't disinfect a cut, bind up a wound, stave off lock-jaw or blood-poisoning, or even cure snake-bite. Emergencies don't wait. Be prepared. Always have a first-aid kit handy. —U. S. Press Association

GRASS ROOTS OPINION

PORT HURON, MICH., TIMES HERALD: "The people are entitled to know what their servants are doing—and have a right to be represented at meetings of Governmental bodies by newspaper reporters. That's why the Founding Fathers put into our Constitution a provision guaranteeing freedom of the press."

HARMONY, MINN., NEWS: "Those who complain that the hometown newspaper does not print all the news usually find a few times in their lives when they can thank their lucky stars for same."

HOLLYWOOD, FLA., HERALD: "Home from the capital, says Typographic, a Pittsburgh business man looked out the window and saw a big log floating down the river. He pointed it out to a friend. 'See that log,' he said. 'That's just like Washington. If you examined that log closely you'd find 10,000 ants on it—and each one of them think he's steering it.'"

COATESVILLE, PA., RECORD: "The Pennsylvania Newspaper-Publishers Association has announced the appointment of five men to serve with five members of the Pennsylvania Bar Association to make a study of the whole concept of Freedom of the Press and Fair Trial. There is no doubt that there will be some findings which will be critical of some newspapers. But out of it may come a decision that office holders are not always the best judges of what shall be kept from the public."

SHORT STORY

The Pledge

By F. L. Rowley

NO ONE in Hillcrest knew what it was that prompted Red Peepers to divorce himself from that well-worn hip flask. No one, that is, except Sheriff Giles, and he had promised Mrs. Bodkin to keep quiet about the whole embarrassing affair.

He was about to raise the second glass to his lips when his eye caught a flash of white in the meadow.

with that long gown and that thingamajig in your hair—you should win first prize! "Thank you sheriff!" said the good lady, beaming. "You look pretty good yourself in that Indian getup. Why, you even have moccasins and a little hatchet—how cute!"

Giles to the rescue! He leaped the fence and raced after the bull. Then it happened! Mrs. Bodkin, skirting a thicket under full steam, lost her hair! Her precious locks, dangling from a thorny red-haw branch, looked more beautiful than ever in the warm sunlight.

His head stood there shaking the head. About this time Red Peepers began to hear noises. He'd scooped up quite a snootful of the strong stuff and had a good seat for the usual parade of animal friends—but noises bothered him.

Wily Guy

By Ona F. Lathrop

MY FATHER-IN-LAW is a wily guy, but I never thought he'd go to the lengths he did to fix things for me. Sometimes I think he actually hates me, the way he talks about Anabel having to work so hard and the kids needing shoes and things. Then again he's pretty decent to me. You never know. So I always try to keep my big mouth shut and let him think he's a big shot. That's the way it was last Sunday.

3-Minute Fiction

We were cruising along home from visiting Anabel's brother and family in the suburbs of Chicago. C. A. and Grace were in the back seat wrestling with our kids as usual, with Anabel putting in her lick from the right front. "Sit down, Hap, and look out the window for a change."

"I pulled over to the curb, listened to his harangue, admitted everything I'd done for the past ten blocks was wrong."

your day children were seen and not heard." Grace cooed. "Hap, you cannot tie the cat's tail to Grandpa's shoestring," Anabel remonstrated. "One more move and you'll have to come over here."

"And that would be calamity," C. A. remarked dryly. "Your father would probably put us all in the ditch at the rate he's driving."

Now I can stand just so much, but criticism of my driving, especially by C. A., who weaves in and out of city traffic like a snake on a cow-path, gets under my skin. I clenched my jaws shut to keep back the flip answers I could have made and stepped on the gas a little harder. Anything to get this trip over and deposit the in-laws at their door.

"The motorcycle man is trying to pass us, Daddy. The motorcycle man is going around you. Go faster! Go faster!"

But it was too late. I pulled over to the curb, listened to his harangue, admitted everything I'd done for the last ten blocks was wrong—jumping the orange light, passing on the right, stepping too heavy on the gas—and followed him meekly to the nearest station.

"Now just leave everything to me," C. A. boomed. "I know how to handle these guys. Give me the ticket and your driver's license. I'll tell them you're from the country, just visiting here and don't know the law."

Well, I left it to him. I didn't even argue. C. A. marched into the police station, pompous and dignified. I covered under Anabel's scathing remarks, Gracie's caustic silence, and the children's gleeful gibes. I didn't even quibble when C. A. came back waving the little card and chuckling triumphantly.

"Nothing to it. Nothing to it, my boy. You just need to know how to handle these fellows, that's all." With a flourish he tore up the little card and tossed it into the ditch, then climbed in.

At last I opened my repressed mouth. "Well thanks, C. A. I'll take my driver's license back now, please."

"Eh? What? Er—your driver's license? Oh yer. Good grief, that was it I just tore up! They kept the ticket then and handed me back your driver's license. Ha! Guess I got mixed up."

We scrambled out—all six of us—and searched for the tiny scraps of cardboard in the ditch. I never said a word. When we got home Anabel painstakingly pasted them together like a jigsaw on another card which I slipped into my wallet.

"Well anyway, it was big of your dad to fix that for me. I honestly didn't think he had that much pull or that you could talk the police out of a thing like that," I admitted.

Anabel gave a guilty little laugh. "Don't ever tell Dad I told you, but he whispered to me that he had to pony up twenty-seven fifty, only he doesn't want you to know it, darling."

And to this day I can't figure whether the old man really thinks that much of me, or whether it was worth it to impress me because he hates me so. He's a wily guy.

Christian Citizens

Lesson for September 12, 1954

SUPPOSE the dream of some scientists comes true, and there is built a "space platform" buzzing around the earth, some thousand miles away, like a little moon? Suppose this thing is equipped with telescopic sights and atomic weapons? Such a thing—and it is now technically possible—would give its possessors power over the whole earth such as no conqueror has ever had. The question then would be: What kind of people are running the thing? Do they really take an interest in the human race, or suppose they didn't care, and started blasting away some fine morning just for fun? E. B. White's famous story, "The Morning of the Day They Did It," imagines what would happen then.

Learning to Belong
 That may not be true as prophecy, —a continent, a planet, blown out of existence because two men who do not care anything about it, or anything else, take a notion to blast it. But it is quite true as a picture of human attitudes. Neither soldier nor senator nor common citizen will do anything to help a country or people for whom he feels no special attraction; and he may very easily injure or destroy it without much conscience. In war, this is a picture of how each nation looks at the enemy; in "peace," it is a picture of the lack of social responsibility which plagues every country in the world. "Do what you like with it—it isn't mine," may possibly be all right when you are talking about your neighbor's tomato-patch or automobile. But when you are talking about your neighbor's nation, you are talking about something that is just as much yours as his. We all begin life as little egotists, each of us the center of his little high-chair universe. By degrees we learn to say "we" about our family, our gang, maybe our town or high school or lodge. But it takes church members a long time—some of them—to say "we" about the church, and even longer for even Christian citizens to say "we" about their country. Having no special feeling for it, they don't care what happens to it, and may even take part in doing it harm, just because they have never learned to belong to it.

Christian Citizens Needed
 The Apostle Paul was a citizen of a great empire, and he was proud of the fact. He believed that every Christian, whether a citizen or not, had certain duties of obedience, responsibility and support, toward the Roman Empire. If this was true in those days, when the government was non-Christian, corrupt and oppressive, when Christians had for the most part no chance whatever in sharing the responsibilities of government, how much more true it is in a democracy! With professed Christians numbering about half the total population, with the vote in our hands and our representatives no farther away than the nearest mail-box, we have even more reason and opportunity to make our presence and our ideas felt, as Christian citizens, than could have been possible in the time of Paul and Nero. Any Christian who is old enough to vote and educated enough to read and write, might well ask himself a few questions to see if he is much of a Christian.

Quiz for Christian Citizens
 Do you know the names of your senator, your congressman? Did you vote for them? Why? Do you know whether they are Christians by profession? Do you know how they have been voting on important questions? If so, do you find that they have been taking a Christian attitude as reflected in their votes?

Have you ever taken the time and spent the money to write or wire your congressman or senator to let him know how you and your neighbors stand on important matters? Have you felt that international affairs were somehow beyond your scope, or have you realized that bad relationships between nations have always brought death to happy homes? Do you realize that our nation, and others, have developed weapons of such terrible force that to use them can destroy the race of man? Do you have any idea what your congressman and senator, your personal representatives, are thinking and doing?

SHORT STORY
Sweet Tooth
 By Ona F. Lathrop

I HAD noticed him from the very first day he came in as he guided his tray down the chromium slide at the cafeteria. He was a funny little old guy in a too-long coat and pants that didn't match, and he had a queer shuffling gait which was caused by his feet being encased in a pair of rubbers but no shoes or sox. I checked off his items each day with growing curiosity. Always he had two or three kinds of dessert and not much else. "You must have a sweet tooth," I joshed him once.

Dinty walked around picking up all the ones people didn't take or dropped accidentally.

him Dinty because he looked like a comic character. Then he began picking up the tickets. Our cafeteria has a bakery up front and with every purchase they give you an orange ticket. When you get fifty, you can get a free cake. (Dinty walked around picking up all the ones that people didn't take or dropped accidentally.) He even scoured the restrooms and picked up the ones people left on the tables. Al Jordan, the manager, didn't like that.

"Dinty, I'll give you a free cake if you'll let people alone. I don't like you bothering my customers."

Dinty grinned his impish little grin as he thanked Al for the cake and went scurrying out. But the next day he was back again, picking up the tickets. He didn't ask people for theirs any more, so there wasn't much Al could do about it, but he watched like a bright-eye bird of prey and pounced on each ticket anyone dropped. And at last he had the necessary fifty.

"I get me a free cake today," he told me, proudly waving his sheaf of tickets as he came down the line with pie, ice cream, and a french pastry on his tray.

But the next day Dinty didn't show up. Nor the next, nor the next. We began to worry. "Anybody know what Dinty's right name is, or where he lives?" Al asked one day. Nobody did.

And then one day we ran an ad on the new sugar-free desserts we were making in the baked-goods department, using this new sugar substitute. And a little old grey-haired lady came in. She was beautifully dressed and you could tell she had wealth. I was up front that day, helping wait on the rush of customers, and she fell to me.

"Are you sure this wouldn't hurt people not supposed to have real sugar?" she asked. "Because my husband is craving dessert, but he's been very sick and the doctor wouldn't let him have any."

I peered at her, putting two and two together. "Is your husband a little man with—with—" She smiled and finished the sentence for me. "With a funny little shuffle because he always wore only rubbers on his feet? Did he used to come here to get all these desserts which made him sick? So that's where he got them! I wouldn't make another pie or cake after the doctor said he had diabetes, but he sneaked out in old clothes and just his rubbers so I wouldn't hear him, and got them some place until he had to go to the hospital."

I eyed her good mink fur-piece and her well-tailored suit and I wanted to ask another question, but she forestalled it.

"Yes, I know. I only let him have a very small amount of change each day, for fear he would buy sweets with it. But he fooled me. He even got a couple of free cakes some place, he confessed, and ate them all by himself before he came home. He said if they didn't give him a stomach-ache, what else could it hurt? But he found out. And now that he's home again, I'll watch him more closely. We'll be going to Florida next week for the winter. I hope this will satisfy his sweet tooth for a while." And she smiled and hurried out.

"SPICE 'N' EVERYTHING NICE"

brought to mind the dance I used to do with my real Castanets which I still possess. Nothing do I love in life as much as music.
Suddenly, the sweetest little old lady all dressed in black with beautiful hair smiled at me with the kindest eyes I have ever seen, "May I sit next to you," There was hardly room on that foundation of the Eagle. That little lady appeared to be a lonely heart. I moved over quickly and smiled trying to make room. She smiled again as she said, "Thank you!" I then said, "I know you are a real Irish lady!" To this she replied, "Yes, very much Irish for I just came over! I came to visit my son but I'll never go back to ever have the awful experience of that rough sea! Never was I so frightened and I could not go through it again. I am a widow!"
Somehow, I felt there was a real story to this little Irish lady and was most anxious to hear the rest when my niece arrived so we just said "Goodbye!" The console of the great organ in Wanamaker's has a keyboard of 964 controls and all are within reach of the organist. The console's 729 tilting tablets are remotely controlled by the 168 pistons under the manual keys of which there are 46 masters and 46 reversibles. There are also 42 accessories for the feet! There are 10 expression pedals. The organ is electro-pneumatic throughout requiring seven blowers and two generators totaling 200 horse-power.

I noticed all around on the first floor atop of huge showcases photographs of the store standing high on easels showing when the store first started with the dates printed on each one. John Wanamaker was born July 1838 in Philadelphia County. He was employed as an errand boy for the salary of $1.25 weekly. He then made $2.50 weekly from Lippencott on the corner of 4th and Market. He then left for the firm called "The Town Hall Clothing Store" which was the largest business of its kind in Philadelphia. John Wanamaker always bragged as a small boy, "That someday he was going to be a great merchant." He had very little recreation as a boy as he always had to help his father "turning up" bricks in his father's brick yard. He was very tall and thin and this type of work affected his health. He turned to church work and was a big Presbyterian. At the outbreak of the Civil War he was rejected because of his lung condition. He did not worry about his health and in April 1861, he opened a small clothing store at 6th and Market. The business grew until he was the largest retailer of clothing in America. He married the sister of Nathan Brown. His life, indeed, was an interesting one. Betcha in 1961 there will be a big affair right there in that big store in celebration. John Wanamaker died in 1922 at the age of 80.

Leaving the store and walking across Broad Street at Walnut, I met the finest policeman directing traffic right there who took time to hold up all traffic leading me across the street in that busy thoroughfare and as I turned to thank him, he gave me a great big smile. His number, I observed on his hat was 4514. When I remarked to him of his nice and pleasant manner he quickly replied, "Why be a grouch? I really enjoy my job!"

So long, folks. Just be like that policeman 365 days of the year. See you next week. D. V. Drive slowly so you can enjoy living! I am,
Faithfully,

What a comeback!
The "comeback of the year" some would call it—and they wouldn't be far from wrong. I was once a rundown bird, convalescing after disease had struck and feeling mighty low. Then I got Avi-Tab in my feed. What a difference! I perked up, had more vim and vigor. Avi-Tab sharpens the appetite and aids digestion. Avi-Tab is a product of...
