ROBERT BURNS.

BY HENRY W. LONGFELLOW.

I see Amid the fields of Ayr
A plowman, who in foul or fair,
Sings at his task,
So clear we know not if it is
The laverock's song we hear, or his,
Nor care to ask.

For him the plowing of those fields
A more ethereal harvest yields
Than sheaves of grain;
Songs flush with purple bloom the rye;
The plover's call, the curlew's cry,
Sing in his brain.

Touched by his hand, the way-side weed
Becomes a flower; the lowliest reed
Beside the stream
Is clothed with beauty; horse and grass
And leather, where his footsteps pass,
The brighter seem.

He sings of love, whose flame illumines
The darkness of lone cottage rooms;
He feels the force,
The treacherous under-tow and stress,
Of wayward passions, and no less
The keen remorse.

At moments, wrestling with his fate,
His voice is harsh, but not with hate;
The brush-wood hung
Above the tavern door lets fall
Its bitter leaf, its drop of gall,
Upon his tongue.

But still the burden of his song
Is love of right, disdain of wrong:
Its master-chorus
Are Manhood, Freedom, Brotherhood;
Its discord but an interlude
Between the words.

And then to die so young, and leave
Unfinished what he might achieve!
Yet better sure
Is this than wandering up and down,
An old man in a country town,
Infirm and poor.

For now he haunts his native land
As an immortal youth; his hand
Guides every plow;
He sits beside each ingle nook;
His voice is in each rushing brook,
Each rustling bough

His presence haunts this room to night,
A form of mingled mist and light,
From that far coast.
Welcome beneath this roof of mine!
Welcome! this vacant chair is thine,
Dear guest and ghost.

FOLLOWED BY A CHEETAH.

ADVENTURES IN THE JUNGLES OF INDIA—A HUNTER'S NARROW ESCAPE.

"Out of India," an old jungle sportsman said, "very little was known about the cheetah. Some years ago they had one of these animals in the Central Park manage-rie, but, being pressed for room, they put him into the cage with a Bengal tiger. Now, the cheetah is a fierce brute enough, and a hard and vicious fighting at times, but he is not safe in a tiger's cage. In the morning a dead cheetah lay within the bars, and one of the chief curiosities of the not very extensive collection of beasts in the garden was lost.

"The appearance of the cheetah is remarkable. He is as tall as the tiger, or taller, but, though very sinewy and strong, he seems to lack muscular development, and his body is so thin that he always looks half starved. The old writers called him the "hunting leopard," and it may be that he was once trained to assist in the chase. But, so far as my experience goes, he has a marked preference for two-legged game. He is cruel, cowardly and horribly treacherous. He will patiently and silently follow a traveler for miles through the jungle, keeping all the time within eighty or a hundred yards of him, drawing nearer when the man's back is turned toward him, and falling again to the rear the moment his intended victim faces him. In such emergencies safety rests only in unceasing vigilance.

"The cheetah never springs upon a man whose eyes are fixed upon him but let the traveler remain for many minutes with his back to his pursuer, and his life is pretty sure to pay the forfeit for his carelessness. Quickly the brute creeps within springing distance, and, like a flash, is on his victim. His long claws end sharp, cat-like teeth soon do the work of destruction, and another is added to the appallingly long list of persons who are annually destroyed by wild beasts in India.

"I have heard curious stories from Indian travellers about the horror of journeying through the jungle at night with one of these creatures on the track. A native hunter once told me his experience on such an occasion. He started at sundown to cross a track of entirely uncultivated and uninhabited country, extending over a space of about eighty miles. He was armed with the long and not very effective musket used by men of his profession, and, as usual, it was loaded, not with ball, but with an immense charge of powder and a handful of slugs such as would kill a deer at close quarters, but which would not be trusted to dispose of a tiger or a cheetah, unless at very short range. It was the hunter's intention to travel on foot until midnight, and then light a fire to keep off wild beasts, and sleep until daylight.

"But when the time for rest came, the hunter made an unpleasant discovery. He had forgotten his matches, and could not kindle a fire.—While still engaged in searching the canvas bag in which he thought he had placed them, his attention was attracted by two bright objects that seemed to flash upon him from a distance of nearly a hundred yards away, and he knew that a cheetah was watching him. Though he could see nothing of the animal except its eyes, the brute evidently saw him plainly enough, for no sooner did he look in its direction than it slunk off and disappeared.

"But to sleep in the darkness when those eyes had once fallen upon him was, he knew, certain death. There was nothing to do but to walk on, and he started at a brisk pace. Every two minutes or so for the next hour he turned and looked around, and each time that he did so he found that the cheetah had crept softly up to within forty or fifty yards of him. It drew off the instant he turned his face to it.—This mode of pursuing his journey was, to say the least of it, irksome, and the Hindoo determined to end it if possible. He decided to walk on for a period long enough to give the cheetah an opportunity to approach within twenty yards of him, and then, turning quickly, give the brute a charge of slugs. His scheme was very nearly successful in bringing the chase to an end, but not exactly in the way he had hoped.

"The cheetah's progress, in some measure, resembled that of a stone dropping to the earth. The nearer it approached its destination the faster it moved, and when the hunter wheeled it was not ten yards from him, and in another second its fatal spring would have been made; but even with so short a distance separating it from the object of its pursuit, it fell back so quickly into the darkness when the hunter's face was towards it that he could not get a shot at it. At about three o'clock in the morning the hunter began to feel very drowsy, and, sitting down with his back against a tree, he determined to watch and think until morning.

"He watched cautiously and thought intently for perhaps ten minutes, with his musket across his knee. Then his meditations led him into an imaginary 'paddy' field, and he was shooting a very delicate and appetizing species of game known as the 'paddy bird.' He brought down a hundred of them, and he had clutched his gun with a deliberate intention of murdering the hundred and first, when the revengeful bird darted at him, tore him terribly on the face, breast, and arms, and almost flattened him against the tree.

"In a moment the Hindoo was on his feet and in the same space of time the 'paddy bird' had changed into a cheetah. The brute had crawled up and sprung upon him, but, in its ravenous thirst for blood, it had actually overlooked the tree against which the man was sleeping. Its claws had lacerated the hunter severely, but encountering the unexpected shock from the tree in the rear, it bounded aside a few yards without completing its work. Seeing its expected prey facing it, the cowardly brute tried even then to sneak away, but it was too close this time, and the heavy charge of slugs that was intended for the 'paddy bird' of dreamland tore its throat open, and stretched it lifeless upon the ground.

"My own personal experience of the cheetah is confined to a single adventure, possibly more amusing than dangerous; and I should hardly care to have it happen often. I was an inmate of what was called a boarding house, but what was really a hotel, at Jubbulpore. It was scorching hot weather, and at night all the guests had their beds carried out into the open space before the house, and slept under the stars until morning. The proprietor of the hotel, who was a widower, and his little four-year-old daughter, followed this habit also. The proprietor was, I think, the fattest man I ever saw. He was so large and ungainly that as he walked he was compelled, as it were, to hold up his superfluous flesh with his arm, so that he was, so to speak, a constant burden to himself.

"We heard that a cheetah had been seen in the neighborhood, but we never considered this animal especially dangerous, except under such conditions as I have already mentioned, and on the night of which I am speaking we went to bed in the open air as usual. Our company on that occasion numbered, I think, about eighteen persons, including our host and his little daughter. I had been asleep a couple of hours or thereabouts when I was awakened by noises that seemed to comprise every key of the human voice.

"The child was shrieking with terror, her father seemed to be praying, although an occasional curse interlarded his petition for mercy, the native servants, who had been aroused first, were yelling incomprehensible directions from a distance, a dozen men were swearing vigorously, and a wealthy halfcast merchant was fruitlessly essaying to crawl under his low bed. In the midst of the bewildered party stood a tall, thin animal, lashing his sides with his tail, and glaring around him.

"To the inexperienced eye he seemed to be a tiger, though he was, really, a large cheetah. He had bounded over the high hedge that separated our compound, as the ground around a house is called, from the road, and, not having the slightest idea where he was going, he had landed among the beds.—Anything like our host's appearance at that minute I never saw. His eyes were fixed despairingly upon the cheetah, his little daughter was tucked under his left arm, her head down, and her feet waving gracefully in the air, and his right arm was occupied in attending to his own inconveniently large preportions.—He was, of course, attired in the pyjamas and sleeping shirt of the East, and as he struggled over the ground in the direction of the house he presented a spectacle that must have confounded the cheetah.

"At last he fell, and then his faithful daughter attempted to pull him out of danger by the feet. But a team of horses could hardly have moved him then. He lay where he had dropped, and awaited the end. It was not long coming. Of all the living creatures in that compound the one most thoroughly terrified was the cheetah himself. For about fifteen seconds he gazed at the scene of disturbance around him, and then, turning, bounded back to the road and disappeared, leaving behind him as startled a company of guests as are often seen in a hotel."

The Monkey and the Hawk.

The cook of a French nobleman, whose chateau was in southern France had a monkey which was allowed free range of the kitchen, and which was so intelligent that by severe training its natural propensity to mischief had been subdued, and it was even taught to perform certain useful services, such as plucking fowls, for instance, at which it was uncommonly expert. One morning a pair of partridges was given it to pluck. The monkey took them to an open window which looked directly upon the park and went to work with great diligence. He soon finished one, which he laid on the outer ledge of the window, and then went quietly to work on the other. A hawk, which had been watching his proceedings from a neighboring tree, darted down upon the partridge and in a minute was in the tree again, greedily devouring his prey. The consternation of the monkey at this untoward adventure may be easily imagined. He knew he would be severely whipped for losing it. He hopped about in great distress for several minutes, when suddenly a bright thought struck him. Seizing the remaining partridge, he went to work with energy and stripped off the feathers. He then placed it on the window sill, and closing one of the shutters concealed himself behind it. The hawk, which by this time had finished his meal, very soon swooped down upon the partridge; but hardly had his claws touched the bird when the monkey sprang upon him from behind the shutter. The hawk's head was instantly wrung, and the monkey, with a triumphant chuckle, proceeded to strip off the feathers. This done, he carried the two picked fowls to his master, with a confident and self-satisfied air, which seemed to say, "Here are two birds, sir, just what you gave me." What the cook said on finding one of the partridges converted into a hawk, is more than we are able to tell.

Made Blind by Use Arsenic.

A case of unusual interest to women, bearing on the use of arsenic to improve the complexion, has recently come to light in the western part of the city. A young lady, handsome and intelligent, has been for a long while using arsenic for her complexion, and recently she has almost lost her eyesight. Her eyes began to grow dim about a year ago, and have been gradually but sensibly failing ever since, until it is almost impossible for her to see.—Her physician says it is from the use of arsenic. In view of the calamity her engagement with a young physician of good prospects, while not broken off entirely, has been held subject to the final result of experiments for the restoration of sight.

A MONTANA justice of the peace doesn't splurge any when he marries a couple. He says: "Arise! Grab hands! Hitched! Six dollars!" And that is all there is to it.

SHAVE your face but not your customers.

Whitewashed Babies.

A missionary who was stationed at one of the South Sea Islands determined to give his residence a coat of whitewash. To obtain this, in the absence of lime, coral was reduced to powder by burning. The natives watched the process of burning with interest, believing that the coral was being cooked for them to eat. Next morning they beheld the missionary's cottage glittering in the rising sun, white as snow. They danced, they sang, they screamed with joy; the whole island was in commotion. Whitewash became the rage. Happy was the coquette who could enhance her charms by a dab of the white brush. Contentions arose. One party urged their superior rank; another obtained possession of the brush, and valiantly held it against all comers; a third tried to upset the tub to obtain some of the precious cosmetic. To quiet the hubbub, more whitewash was made and in a week not a hut, a domestic utensil, a war-club, or a garment but was as white as snow; not an inhabitant but had a skin painted with grotesque figures; not a pig that was not whitened, and even mothers might be seen in every direction capering joyously, and yelling with delight at the superior beauty of their whitewashed babies.

Does the World Miss Anyone?

Not long. The best and most useful of us will soon be forgotten.—Those who to day are filling a large place in the world's regard will pass away from the remembrance of man in a few months, or, at farthest, in a few years after the grave has closed over their remains. We are shedding tears above a new made grave and wildly crying out in our grief that our loss is irreparable. Yet in a short time, the tendrils of love have entwined around other supports, and we no longer miss the one who has gone. So passes the world. But there are those to whom a loss is beyond repair.—There are men from whose memories no woman's smile can chase recollections of the sweet face that has given up all its beauty at Death's icy touch. There are women whose plighted faith extends beyond the grave, and drives away as profane those who would entice them from a worship of their buried loves. Such loyalty is hidden away from the public gaze. The world sweeps on beside and around them, and cares not to look in upon this unobtruding grief. It carves a line and rears a stone over the dead and hastens away to offer homage to the living. It cries out weepingly "Le Roy est mort"—but with the next breath exclaims joyously, "Vive le Roy."

THE most sensible remedy, and the only safe, sure and permanent cure for all diseases of the liver, blood and stomach, including bilious fevers, fever and ague, dumb ague jaundice, dyspepsia, &c., is Prof. Guilmette's French Liver Pads, which cures by absorption. Ask your druggist for this noted cure, and take no other, and if he has not got it or will not get it for you, send $1.50 to French Pad Co., Toledo, O., and they will send you one post-paid by return mail.

LET THEM GO.—Says the Burlington "Hawk Eye," solemnly: Yes, daughter, you should go somewhere this summer. You cannot stay at home all summer and live. To be sure, your mother, who hasn't been out of town since she was married, can stand it, but then she is old fashioned and don't know any better, and besides, she has fun enough doing the washing and ironing. By all means, go. Get a linen duster and a basket and go at once.

THE IMPROVEMENT OF TRADES.

The settlement of the Western States has wrought a mighty revolution in the course of trade.

Thus it happens that to a great extent the Northern farmers have abandoned the raising of wheat, rye and corn, and betaken themselves to the cultivation of fruits and vegetables, vineyards, the rearing of fowls and cattle, with dairy products and the like, all which find a ready home-market.

The prudent and far-seeing farmer should recognize these facts, and endeavour to regulate his line of conduct agreeably to the stern logic of the case.

Just on the other side of the mountains before us, at Edgemont, on the Western Maryland Rail Road, a vineyard has been started within the last few years, and an orchard for peaches and other fruits, which ere long will become famous for its rich products.

We are certainly well located for the production of fowls and dairy products, and so near the market as to make the sale of them certain within a few hours.

We cannot but think that the general cultivation of the grape, would prove one of the most beneficial means for the solution of the liquor question, substituting a pure and wholesome beverage among the people, in the place of the impure and destructive ones on which they have so much depended.

On the 11th inst., there was another terrible accident with a dozen lives lost and over forty persons wounded, all of whom were scalded or burned.

WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENCE.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 17th. Viewing the situation impartially, and one residing here has good opportunities for so doing, it is plain there is a hitch somewhere in the management of the Democratic National Campaign.

I have it from official sources that there is no truth whatever in the statement being made that recent occurrences on the border have engendered ill-feeling and misunderstanding between the United States and Mexican Governments.

A most important announcement is made by the Chinese ambassador at Washington to the effect that his government has revoked the ancient decree prohibiting natives of China from engaging in commerce with foreign ports and will henceforth permit Chinese merchants to trade with foreigners at will.

GLANDING'S Patent Trunk,

Patented September 30, 1879, by Thomas Glanding, Baltimore, Md. This Trunk is presented to the public, and the special attention of buyers is called to its advantages. The body and lid of the trunk are made in the usual manner. The trays, which are a special feature, are divided into two sections, the smaller tray or parsonal case being attached to the lid, is raised out of the body when the lid is raised. The larger or main tray is attached to the ends of the body by means of parallel arms, so that the tray may be raised and carried back into the lid in its original horizontal position, and is supported on the arms, thus giving access to the body of the trunk. The arms are pivoted to plates of suitable metal, on which are knobs or projections to stop their motion and prevent the tray from falling back against the lid. We ask the ladies when in town to call and examine the Trunk at GEO. A. GILBERT'S Hat, Boot & Shoe Store, NO 16 N. MARKET ST., Frederick City, Maryland. Ask for Glanding's Patent Trunk. Use no other. mar1 1880

Planting Whole Potatoes.

Geo. S. McCann, of the Elmire, N. Y., Farmers' Club, during the last season made a trial of planting whole potatoes. He planted whole and cut potatoes in alternate rows. All were treated alike, except the one difference in preparing the seed. He reported that from the large whole potatoes the crop was just twice as great as from the cut, while other conditions were alike in both cases. Last spring he picked out small potatoes and planted them whole by the side of the other rows in the same field planted with cut seed. All these rows presented an appearance of greater thrift, more growth and more vigor, and at the digging they gave greater yield.—In every case where the test has been made he has found whole potatoes more profitable for planting, the yield always proving their superiority.

A NEW ENEMY TO GRAIN.—An intelligent and reliable farmer in the Medley's Neck section of this district complained in our hearing the other day that his oat field had been attacked by multitudes of small bugs, and that they threatened to destroy his entire oat crop. Mr. Geo. M. Bohanan, a resident of the same neighborhood, under date of May 3, writes us that the same kind of bug has invaded his corn-land wheat, and that a fourth of it is now dead and the most of it appears to be dying.

REMEDY FOR THE CABBAGE WORM.—A new York farmer kills the cabbage worm by sprinkling the plants with common black pepper from an ordinary tin-box—a pound to 150 plants—sometimes previously sprinkling with soapuds from the week's washing.

FERTILIZERS FOR FLOWERS.—Iron filings or nails and wood ashes make good fertilizers for flowers; they give a decided brilliancy to the color of both foliage and blossoms.

THE sooner we can cool the milk the quicker will the process of creaming commence, and by keeping it at low temperature the more perfect will it be.

VALUABLE RECIPES.

GUM CAMPHOR, wrapped in paper and laid around sugar barrels, will disperse ants.

Soot falling on the carpet from open chimneys, or from carelessly handling stovepipes, if covered thickly with salt, can be brushed off without damage to the carpet.

To clean oilcloths, wash always with warm milk. Once in six months scrub with hot soapuds, dry thoroughly and apply a coat of varnish. They will last as long again.

Plaster of Paris mixed with gum arabic water makes an excellent white cement, but must be used immediately, as it hardens quickly.—A mixture of five parts gelatine to one of acid chromate of lime applied to broken edges, which should be pressed together and exposed to the sunlight, makes an insoluble cement.

It is said that a single clove dropped into an inkstand of ink will preserve it from moulding and that any essential oil will answer the same purpose. Russia leather which is perfumed with tar of birch rarely becomes mouldy. A few drops of any essential oil will preserve leather from moulding.

PEACH COBBLER.—Make a rich biscuit crust; put it rolled thick around the dish; put in a layer of peaches, then butter and sugar, and a very little flour, then peaches, and so on until the dish is full; then cover with a thick crust, cut a slit in the centre, and pour in boiling water till full; bake in a moderate oven.

STEWED PEARS.—Cut a number of nice cooking pears in halves, peel them, and trim them so as to get them all of a size; put them into an enamelled saucepan with just enough water to cover them, and a good allowance of loaf sugar, the thin rind of a lemon, a few cloves, and sufficient prepared cochineal to give them a good color. Let them stew gently until quite done. Arrange them neatly on a dish, strain the syrup, let it reduce on the fire, and when cold, pour it over the pears.

Humorous.

A YOUNG lady, who has studied all the "ologies" at Vassar, wants to know if the crack of a rifle is where they put the powder in.

PATRICK having been told that Dr. Peters had found an asteroid, remarked: "Bedad, he may have his asteroid, but as for meself I prefer a horse ter ride."

A MICHIGAN farmer's wife (whose name, by the way, is Eliza) lately produced a second pair of twins, and the happy agriculturist now calls his spouse his "fertile Liza!"

WHEN young Bluff kids quoted the good book to the girl he was anxious to marry, that it was not good for man to be alone, wasn't it cruel in her to advise him to go home to his mother?

NOWADAYS it is impossible to listen to the conversation of a half dozen young "society" people without feeling that the American language should be more appropriately called the American slanguage.

LITTLE Johnny went fishing last Sunday without consulting his parents. Next morning a neighbor's boy met him and asked: "Did you catch any thing yesterday?" "Not till I got home," was the rather sad response.

A YOUNG and beautiful Philadelphia maiden was rapidly sinking with the lockjaw when her physician conceived the happy idea of holding a spoonful of ice cream to her lips. The moment he did so she opened her jaws and shrieked, "Don't give me a little plate, make it a big one."

Not long ago an Irishman applied to an overseer in a Tyne shipyard to be put on a job. He was informed that he could not comply with his request; but as Pat continued to gaze earnestly at an anchor which was lying in the vicinity the foreman repeated his reply that there was no work for him, and advised him to get away. "Devil bit will I stoer," replied Pat, "till I see the man that's going to use that pick!"

THE minister stopped at a house on the south side last week, and sought to improve the time by giving an eight-year-old boy an instructive lesson in morality. "My boy" said the minister: "I have lived forty-five years, and I have never used tobacco in any form, nor told a lie, nor disobeyed my mother, nor said an oath nor played truant, nor—" "Gimmin crickets," interrupted the lad, "yer ain't had any fun at all, have ye?"

DURING the last political campaign in Michigan, a well-known lawyer of that State was addressing an audience composed principally of farmers, in Gratiot county. In order to win the confidence of his hearers, he said: "My friends, my sympathies have always been with the tillers of the soil. My father was a practical farmer, and so was my grandfather before him. I was myself reared on a farm, and was, so to speak, born between two stalks of corn."

Here the speaker was rudely interrupted by some one in the audience, who exclaimed, "A pumpkin, by Jingo!"

SOME YEARS AGO there was an old steamboat captain, who was at one time owner and commander of one of the numerous floating-palaces on the broad Mississippi. Captain Striker was a German, passionately fond of music—always carrying a band on his boat, which was a favorite packet and which was patronized by all the planters on the Bayou La Fourche. His family resided near the town of Donaldsonville. The building of a church having been proposed, Captain Striker subscribed three hundred dollars. In due course of time the church was finished. Then a lightning-rod was proposed, and another call was made upon Captain Striker. Raising from his chair, and gesticulating angrily with his forefinger, the old German replied: "No! chentlemen, I will not! I say vonce for all, un vonce I will not! I gif three hundred dollars to raise a church to Got. Now, if Got vonts to tunter it down, fy jus', by Got! let him tunder away!"

Literary Revolution and Universal Knowledge.

An Encyclopedia in 20 Vols., over 16,000 pages; 10 per cent more matter than any Encyclopedia ever before published in this country, and sold, handsomely and well bound, in cloth for $10, in half morocco for $15, and printed on fine heavy paper, wide margins, bound in half Russia, gilt top, for $20—an enterprise so extraordinary that its success, beyond all precedent book publishing, may be fairly claimed to inaugurate a Literary Revolution. THE LIBRARY OF UNIVERSAL KNOWLEDGE is a reprint entire of the last (1879) Edinburgh edition of "Chambers's Encyclopedia," with about 40 per cent of new matter added, upon topics of special interest to American readers, thus making it equal in character to any similar work, better than any other suited to the wants of the great majority of those who consult works of reference, and altogether the latest Encyclopedia in the field. Specimen Volumes in either style will be sent for examination with privilege of return on receipt of proportionate price per volume. Special Discounts to all early subscribers, and extra discounts to clubs. Full particulars with descriptive catalogue of many other standard works equally low in price, sent free. Leading principles of the American Book Exchange: I. Publish only books of real value. II. Work upon the basis of present cost of making books, about one-half what it was a few years ago. III. Sell to buyers direct, and save them the 50 to 60 per cent. commission commonly allowed to dealers. IV. The cost of books when made 10,000 at a time is but a fraction of the cost when made 500 at a time—adopt the low price and sell the large quantity. V. Use good type, paper, etc., do careful printing, and strong, neat binding, but avoid all "padding," fat and heavy-headed type, spongy paper and gaudy binding, which are so commonly resorted to in make books appear large and fine, and which greatly add to their cost, but do not add to their value. VI. To make $1 and a friend is better than to make $5 and an enemy.
