VANISHED HOURS.

Where are they gone, those dear dead days,
Those sweet past days of long ago,
When ghosts go floating to and fro
When evening leads us through her maze?
Where are they gone? Ah! who can tell?
Who weave once more that long-passed spell?

They did exist when we were young,
We met our life with strength and trust,
We deemed all things were pure and just,
Nor knew life had a double tongue,
We lightly sang a happy song,
Nor dreamed our way could e'er be wrong.

And then all changed: as life went by,
The friend deceived, or bitter death by,
Smiled as he drank our dear one's breath,
And would not let us also die.
Day followed day, as on they went,
Each took some gift that life had sent.

Yet it was ours, that perfect past!
We did have days that knew not pain,
We once had friends that death had not slain.
And flowers and songs that could not last

Were ours in that most blessed time,
When earth seemed heaven's enchanted clime.

And so I think, when lights burn low
And all the house is fast asleep,
From out a silence vast and deep
Those dear dead days we wistfully sore,
Breathe on us from their hidden store
Their long-lost peace, their faith once more.

God keep those dear old times; ah me!
Beyond our vision they may rest,
Till on some perfect day and blest
Once more those dear dead days will be,
For death, who took all, may restore
The past we loved to us once more.

THE MANLY, LOVING BOY.

He walks beside his mother,
And looks up in her face
With a glow of loving, joyous pride
And a truly royal grace;
He proudly waits upon her—
Would shield her without fear,
The boy who loves his mother well,
Her little cavalier.

To see no tears of sorrow
Upon her loving cheek,
To gain her sweet, approving smile,
To hear her softly speak—
Ah, what in all this wide world
Could be to him so dear,
The boy who loves his mother well,
Her little cavalier?

Look for that boy in the future
Among the good and true;
All blessings on the upward way
His foot shall still pursue!
Of robes and crowns and sceptred kings
He stands the royal peer,
The boy who loves his mother well,
Her noble cavalier.

SOME HINTS ON DRESSMAKING.

There is scarcely anybody who in the course of her life has not found the want of some slight knowledge of dressmaking. I am inclined to think that every girl should go through a course of lessons as part of her education, for a certain amount of insight into how dresses are made conduces to good dressing, and enables the wearer to point out to dressmakers or ladies'-maids the defects which the best of them fall into. Lessons may not make a proficient in the art, but they will teach a great deal.

The first thing is, of course, to obtain a satisfactory pattern, to be kept and used as required. To the uninitiated the very way of setting to work about this is not easy. First, cut two linings roughly in form for back and front. All that is really necessary in doing so is that they shall be of sufficient length from the neck to the edge of the basque, and wide enough across the bust—a most important matter. It is utterly impossible to make any bodice set unless it comes well up to the sleeve, that is, that the armhole be not cut too large. A very common defect is for the sleeve to cover a part of the bodice. Begin by folding over a piece down the edge of the front pattern about one and a half inches in depth, and attach this to the figure by pinning, say an inch apart, down the whole length. There is a knack in placing these pins, viz., horizontally, with the lead outward. Next pass the hand across the bust, taking care that the material from the front to immediately below the arm is straight by the thread; the front and side seams will all be wrong unless this is so, and no bodice will set well if the material and lining run different ways. Quite loosely pin the back to the front under the arm, only just enough to keep them together, the same on the shoulder, and then pin the back down the centre exactly after the fashion of the front, always with the heads of the pins outside, without darning the pins in and out, which produces a pucker inevitably. Now comes one of the most difficult parts of taking a pattern, viz., manipulating the shoulder. You must be careful to have the lining high enough in the neck, and notch it at intervals down to the required height, also round the armholes. It is somewhat the fashion now—or rather such a fashion is creeping in—to give a broad appearance to the back by making the shoulder seam on the top of the shoulder; but as a narrow back is a beauty, this is a mistake. Bring the seam well over the shoulder; keep the back piece firm by holding it between the first and second fingers of the left hand, while with the thumb you draw the front to it very tightly, the material showing no crease. Begin from the top, as you always do in pinning, and place the pins in without darning them, so that the head of one clears the point of the others; they require to be particularly straight, and it is not so easy as it seems to accomplish all this properly. Next you have to form the side pleats called darts on the front of the bodice, which keep quite low down; a high side pleat makes the figure flat. Stout figures require a greater distance between the front and the first dart, than slender ones. When these pleats are satisfactorily settled, pin the front and back beneath the arm, exactly as they go, to fit the figure closely. I is generally necessary, in pinning the material below the waist, to place some side pleats in front in a slanting direction, thus disposing of the extra fullness. The waist line must be most distinctly marked with pins. To recapitulate, then, the great point to be careful of in taking the pattern is to cover the figure exactly, to place your pins in so that they cause no puckers, and to lay the material on the thread.

Having made the pattern as perfect as possible, remove the pins which secure it to the figure, back and front, and take it off. Then place the finger between the pinnings on the shoulder, and stick another row of pins on the side, where the heads of the other pins are not, and through only one layer of the stuff, in such a way that when you take out each pin originally used, and replace it so that it goes through one piece of stuff only, it yet marks out the correct line; the other piece has its row of pins to define its shoulder line and seam under the arm. In this way you have the front and back distinct, and exactly fitting. For the next process a wooden board will be required, the cover of a deal dress box does admirably; lay a sheet of brown paper (French dressmakers use black) upon it, with the pattern above; then with a stiffener or dresmaker's piercer, which has a round top, and is more convenient for resting the palm of the hand, pierce through the lining down the front, and exactly along the row of pins, so that a fac-simile pattern is produced on the brown paper. With a sharp pair of scissors cut the paper by the pierced holes, and you have a pattern which should fit you to perfection, and serve as a guide for all kinds of dresses. But to be quite sure that that the pattern is correct, have the lining ironed when the pins have been removed; lay the brown paper upon it, pierce round the outline into the lining, tack with black thread by the pierce holes regularly, so that the tacking can be felt by the finger, and pin the back and front together. Having first pinned up the front pleats, try the lining on again; very possibly you will find that the armhole is a little too much out, out, the neck a little too low. Make the necessary alterations in the lining, and then in the brown paper, and your permanent pattern will be quite perfect. You may keep it by you in use for years, adding a little to its breadth if you become stouter.

The best dressmakers use silk for lining, but nothing is so durable or preserves the material so well as a firm twill. This is sold double width. Lay it out thus before you. Place the pattern upon it, with the upper dart toward the cut end, the selvedge for the fronts. The side piece for the back will, most probably, be got out of the width, while the top of the back will fit in the interstice of the front. A good yard of stuff may be often saved by laying the pattern out and well considering how one part cuts into another. Prick the outline on to the lining. The brown paper pattern is the exact size, so, of course, turnings must be left beyond the perforated marks. These marks serve for a guide for the tacking.

In forming the front side pleats you must be careful that you do not allow a fold or crease to be apparent on the bodice beyond where the stitching commences; to avoid this, before beginning stick a pin through what is to be the top of the pleat; the head will be on the right side, and holding the point, you can begin pinning the seam without touching the upper part of the bodice. To ascertain the size of button-holes, put a piece of card beneath the button to be used, and cut in an eighth of an inch on either side beyond. Having turned down the piece in front, on the button-hole side, run a thread a sixteenth of an inch from the extreme edge, and again another the width of the card. Begin to cut the first button-hole at the bottom of the bodice, and continue at equal distances. The other side of the bodice is left wide enough to come well under the button holes. The button-holes must be laid upon it, and a pin put through the centre of each mark where the button is to be placed. In sewing on the buttons put the stitches in horizontal; if perpendicularly, they are likely to pucker that side of the bodice so much that it will be quite drawn up, and the buttons will not match the button holes.

As to sleeves. Measure from the shoulder to the elbow, and again from elbow to wrist. Lay these measurements on any sleeve pattern you may have, and lengthen or shorten accordingly. The sleeve is cut in two pieces, the top of the arm and the under part, which is about an inch narrower than the outside. In joining the two together, if the sleeve is at all tight, the upper part is slightly full to the lower at the elbow. The sleeve is sewn into the armhole with no cordings now, and the front seam should be about two inches in front of the bodice seam beneath the arm, but you must be guided in this by the form of the wearer.

It is too difficult an experiment for amateurs, but bodices being now worn very tight-fitting, my readers may like to know that the French stretch the material well on the cross before beginning to cut out, and in cutting allow the lining to be slightly full so that, when on, the outside stretches to it, and insures a better fit. An experienced eye can tell a French-side bodice in a minute, the front side piece being always on the cross.

These hints are of a most elementary description, but, strictly followed, will prove valuable. Stitching, pinning, button-hole making, are only to be acquired by practice. Beginners must not be discouraged; success is only built up by many failures.—Harper's Bazar.

ONE EXPERIENCE FROM MANY.—I had been sick and miserable so long and had caused my husband so much trouble and expense, no one seemed to know what ailed me, that I was completely disheartened and discouraged. In this frame of mind I got a bottle of Hop Bitters and used them unknown to my family. I soon began to improve and gained so fast that my husband and family thought it strange and unnatural, but when I told them what had helped me, they said, "Hurrah for Hop Bitters! long may they prosper, for they have made mother well and us happy."—The Mother.

THERE is a loud market in Paris; 100 good toads bring $15 to $17 for their services in the gardens.

Uncle Sam's Clock.

At the Naval Observatory in Washington stands the clock that regulates time for the whole country. It is not beautiful like many lovely French clocks that noiselessly tick upon the parlor mantel. In fact it is large and tall, with plain face, and body of dark wood, and without ornamentation. It is much like the old-fashioned clock that stood in our grandmother's kitchen. It nowhere touches either the floor or walls of the building, but is securely fastened to a stone pier, which rests upon a solid stone foundation, so that it may not be affected by any motion of the building or ground. Rains may descend, floods come, winds blow and beat upon the house, but the clock feels it not, for it is built upon a rock. It is a splendid time-keeper. At the present time it gains at the rate of forty eight hundredths of a second per day.

In order that the people all over the country may have uniform time, so important for railroads, steamboats and other public conveyances, at three minutes before twelve each day this clock is connected, by means of a galvanic battery, with the wires of the Western Union Telegraph, which extends into the room containing the clock. All other messages, however important, must give way for these three minutes, and in every town and station, from Maine to California, where there is a telegraph operator, as the pendulum of the clock ticks, each second a click is recorded by the telegraph, and at the instant of twelve two ticks are given.

At the same instant a huge black ball, which is drawn up a few moments before, descends upon the dome of the observatory; and hundreds all over the city stand with watch in hand, to see it drop, to keep, as we say, "ball time." Thus when this ball drops, a click in every large town in the land tells the hour of twelve.

So while the clerks of Washington are watching the ball, the restless schoolboy of Minnesota is waiting to hear the big clock upon the town-house sound its merry peal, the signal of dismissal, and the tired factory girl at Lowell listens eagerly for the same sound.

But you must remember that only places on the same meridian with Washington have, after all, exactly the same time. The sun in passing round the earth, which is divided in three hundred and sixty degrees of longitude, every twenty-four hours, must pass through one degree, which is about sixty nine miles every four minutes. So if the sun rises in Boston at seven o'clock, it will not rise in New York—two hundred miles west—till twelve minutes past seven, or seven o'clock will not come to them for twelve minutes after it has reached Boston. Neither will it be twelve o'clock till twelve minutes later than in Boston.

Take the Pacific railroad, and travel west, with your watch correct in Boston; when you reach Omaha you will be an hour and a half ahead of their time; and when you arrive at San Francisco your watch will be three hours and a half fast, because old Sol is still on the way. When you in Boston are going to church at eleven o'clock the boys in San Francisco are just taking their breakfast at half past seven.

So while we tell you that all the towns receive the click of twelve at the same time, you must remember that in places situated in longitude east or west from Washington, the number of minutes it takes the sun to pass those degrees must be added or subtracted from twelve, to give the correct time.—Cottage Hearth.

It is the best preventative of all malarial diseases that you can take. Read advertisement in another column.—Translated from the New York Zeitung.

A Curse of Drink.

The late Dr. Holland speaks these forcible words through Scribner's Monthly: "The appetite for strong drink in man has spoiled the life of more women—ruined more hopes for them, brought them more sorrow, shame and hardships—than any other evil that lives. The country numbers ten, nay, hundreds of thousands of women who are widows to-day, and who sit in their hopeless weeds, because their husbands have been slain by strong drink. There are hundreds of thousands of homes scattered over the land, in which live lives of torture, going through all the changes of suffering that lie between the extremes of fear and despair, because those whom they love, love wine better than the women they have sworn to love. There are women by thousands who dread to hear at the door the step that once thrilled them with pleasure, because that step has learned to reel under the influence of the seductive poison. There are women groaning with pain, while we write these words, from bruises and brutalities inflicted by husbands made mad with drink. There can be no exaggeration of statement in regard to this matter, because no human imagination can create anything worse than the truth, and no pen is capable of portraying the truth. The sorrows and horrors of a wife with a drunken husband, or a mother with a son, are as near the realization of hell as can be reached in this world at least. The shame, indignation, the sorrow, and the sense of disgrace for herself

THE COMING ELECTIONS.

The Political Parties have completed the lists of candidates for the offices to be filled at the November Elections. The campaign has been inaugurated, and soon patriotic interest will glow with fervency, in the efforts of contrary forces to reach the hoped for goal of success.

The mighty efforts which have been made in various quarters to break loose from the tolerated practices which marked the conduct of elections for many years, have been bearing fruit in various directions, and give promise of more extended results hereafter.

These same forces are working diligently in the great states of Pennsylvania and New York, and here too in our own Maryland, and here too in our own Maryland, the results of the efforts to correct admitted abuses are awaited with the deepest interest.

As the election will take place in less than three weeks, the campaign will necessarily be short; how sharp and incisive, we shall soon know.
