HALL'S Vegetable Sicilian HAIR RENEWER

was the first preparation perfectly adapted to cure diseases of the scalp, and the first successful restorer of faded or gray hair to its natural color, growth, and youthful beauty. It has had many imitators, but none have so fully met all the requirements needed for the proper treatment of the hair and scalp. HALL'S HAIR RENEWER has steadily grown in favor, and spread its fame and usefulness to every quarter of the globe. Its unparalleled success can be attributed to but one cause: the entire fulfillment of its promises. The proprietors have often been surprised at the receipt of orders from remote countries, where they had never made an effort for its introduction. The use for a short time of HALL'S HAIR RENEWER wonderfully improves the personal appearance. It cleanses the scalp from all impurities, cures all humors, fever, and dandruff, and thus prevents baldness. It stimulates the weakened glands, and enables them to push forward a new and vigorous growth. The effects of this article are not transient, like those of alcoholic preparations, but remain a long time, which makes it use a matter of economy.

THE CHRISTMAS LOG.

BY ELIZA COOK.

Hail to the night when we gather once more
All the forms we love to meet;
When we've many a guest that's dear to our breast,
And the household dog at our feet.
Who would not be in the circle of glee
When heart to heart is yearning—
When joy breaths out in the laughing shout
While the Christmas log is burning?
'Tis one of the fairy hours of life,
When the World seems all of light;
Nor the thought of woe, or the name of foe,
Ne'er darkens the festive night.
When bursting mirth rings round the hearth,
Oh! where is the spirit that's mourning,
While merry bells chime with the carol rhyme,
And the Christmas log is burning?
Then is the time when the gray old man
Leaps back to the days of youth,
When brows and eyes bear no disguise,
But flush and gleam with truth.
Oh! then is the time when the soul exults,
And seems right heavenward turning;
When we love and bless the hands we press,
While the Christmas log is burning.

SANTA CLAUS.

BY ROSE HARTWICK THORPE.

"Please, sir, be you Santa Claus?"
The small voice rang out, shrill and eager, on the crisp evening air, and J. P. Fernald, senior member of the firm of Fernald & Co., turned and looked down into the child's animated face, uplifted with an anxious inquiry shining through the large, dark eyes, made larger and seemingly darker, by want and poverty.
"Santa Claus—I—ha, ha, that is a joke," said Mr. Fernald, good naturedly, viewing the immense bundle in his arms, from which protruded a doll's foot through an opening in the paper that enveloped it, and whose uneven surface bore a wonderful resemblance to Santa Claus' mysterious packages.
"Well, my little man, it does look like it; but how did you find me out?"
"Oh, sir," cried the child, with an expression of rapt admiration on his small pinched face. "I knew you in a minute, 'cause you look just like your picture in the toy-shop windows. There's the long, white whiskers, an' the white hair, an' the fur cap, an' the great overcoat, an' the bundle of toys you're goin' to give to the rich children to night. I've stood on the corner here ever so long, a waitin' for you to come along. I knew you'd come down this street sure, 'cause the rich children live here."

The child talked rapidly, catching his breath between the sentences, as though frightened at his boldness in addressing so great a personage as Santa Claus.

"And what did you want to see me for, my little man?" said Mr. Fernald, taking both little blue-veined hands in one of his great, warm ones.

"I wanted to tell you where we live, sir. I guess you don't know, 'cause you never find us, an' Tom—Tom's my big brother; he's most twelve years old, an' helps ma lots. He earns much as fifty cents some days, an' ma don't know how she'd ever get along 'bout Tom. Well, Tom says that you don't care one bit about the poor little children; that you'd just as lief they'd starve on Christmas Day, as on any other day; but you must 'cuse Tom, sir. He works hard an' gets tired, an' then he's cross. When I looked at your picture in the toy-shop windows, I said to myself: 'Bobby Brown, don't you believe it of Santa Claus. He does care for all the children, only he don't know where to find you, that's all. Was I right, sir?'"

"I think you were, my boy. I certainly do not know where you live," said Mr. Fernald, in an unsteady voice, for the child's trusting faith in Santa Claus, who had never brightened a Christmas for him touched the rich man's heart, as it had not been touched for many a month.
"I'll tell you where I live, an' how many there is, an' everything," cried Bobby, breathlessly, "so't you can't 'stake the place. My I won't Nellie be glad't you found us. I won't tell Tom that I hinted, 'cause he'd say it, wasn't perlide of me to do it. But you see, sir, I just couldn't let this Christmas go by 'thout findin' you, 'cause Nelly—Nelly's a little thing, sir, only five last summer—an' Nelly is talkin' all the time 'bout a Christmas dolly, an' she really thinks you'll bring her one, an' it makes poor ma cry to have her tell her what she'll do with her dolly. You won't forget the doll for Nelly, sir?"

"No," said Mr. Fernald, writing something in a little book. "Step into the store with me, my boy. It will be more comfortable for you. I see your clothes are thin."
"Yes, sir, they wear out faster'n ma can mend 'em. Little Paul only four, sir, an' I guess he'd like some candy best of anything, an' maybe, if 'tisn't too much, an orange, too. You'll remember little Paul, sir?"
"Yes, I've got him down. Now who else?"
"There's Tom, sir. Tom is such a good brother, an' has to be out in the cold all day. I do wish Tom could have some warm mittens; an' his shoes are most gone, but I guess the mittens will do. He'll be awfully glad to get 'em. Is Tom's name down?"

"Yes, Tom's name is down." Mr. Fernald looked up, waiting for the child to continue his requests.
"That's all, sir, 'ceptin' ma, an' ma needs most everythin', but I guess she needs a shawl most."

"But you, my little man, is there nothing you wish for?"
"No, sir, I don't need anything. I'll be so glad to see the rest, an' I'll have my secret about meetin' you for my Christmas. Oh, it will be the jolliest Christmas ever was; an' won't ma wonder, an' won't Tom be 'prised, an' won't Nelly dance about! I guess Tom'll change his mind 'bout you, pretty quick, sir."

Bob nodded his head emphatically, and his eyes twinkled like stars.
"Now tell me where you live, Bobby," said Mr. Fernald, with a warm glow at his heart.
The child gave the directions very minutely. Then Mr. Fernald sent him home, and I doubt if there was a happier child in all the land than Bobby Brown.

Mr. Fernald then retraced his steps, visiting a clothing establishment, a shoe store, a toy shop, the confectioner's, the baker's, the grocer's, and at each place, after giving his order, he requested that the things be sent, the first thing in the morning, to a certain address, and left at Mrs. Brown's room with Santa Claus' compliments.

Bobby tossed restlessly in bed that night. How could he sleep with such a wonderful secret on his mind? At every sound he started nervously, and listened attentively until the sound had ceased. Toward morning he fell asleep and was only awakened by Tom kindling a fire in the old stove.

"Has he come yet," cried Bobby, springing out of bed.
"Who?" asked Tom.
But Bobby pretended to be too busy about his wardrobe to heed Tom's question. He felt chagrined that he had so nearly betrayed his precious secret.
Mrs. Brown, with a weary sigh, put the last potato in the oven, and wondered where the dinner, for those little hungry mouths, was to come from. Her faith in God's care was sorely tried at times. Poor woman, her burdens were heavy to bear.

Suddenly there came a knock at the door.
"It's him," cried Bobby, springing forward to open it.
"Here's a basket for the widow Brown, which Santa Claus sent from the grocery, with his compliments," said the man, thrusting a large basket in at the door, and disappearing before a question could be asked.
Before the contents were half taken out, another basket was thrust in.
"From the bakery, with Santa Claus' compliments," said the man, briskly, slamming the door behind him.
Such a basket of good things as that one was! The children stood about it in wide eyed wonder, until little Paul broke the spell, by snatching a handful of brown ginger-cookies.

"Santa Claus' compliments," announced a voice at the door, and a large bundle, which proved to be good, stout shoes for the children all around, was thrust in, and before the door could be closed, more bundles followed.
By this time the little ones were capering about the room in the wildest delight. Tom stood with the stove-handle in one hand, and an expression of blank amazement on his face, a perfect statue of surprise. Mrs. Brown had sunk into a chair, and with clasped hands and tearful eyes, was viewing the presents which seemed literally to shower down upon them, and which meant so much of comfort and happiness to her little family. Bobby was the only one who did not seem to be at all surprised at the generous display. Nor did he cease to regard the door with anxiety until the dull and the cardy, together with other surprises and toys not mentioned by him in his conversation with Santa Claus, had made their appearance.

"Where did they all come from?" gasped Mrs. Brown, in perplexity.
"There must be some mistake."
"No, there ain't!" cried Bobby, enthusiastically; "Santa Claus sent 'em."
"But there isn't such a person, Bobby."

"Yes, there is. I saw him last night," said Bobby, trying a jack-knife which had his name on a card attached to the handle. "There's good stuff in it," he added, sending a long shaving off from a piece of pine stick. "I told him where we lived, an' he said he'd try to find us this year."
"Who could it have been?" murmured Mrs. Brown.
"Santa Claus of course," said Bobby, emphatically. "He's a jolly old man—looks just like his picture, too."

And Mr. Fernald, as he placed a diamond ring on the finger of his granddaughter, thought of the humble home his bounty had blessed, and how much more that gift was prized than the one which now sparkled on the hand of her who had never had a wish unsatisfied.
"It pays to be Santa Claus," he soliloquized. "It pays in here," laying his hand over the place where a warm heart throbbed beneath, "and I believe I'll make a general Santa Claus of myself next year, for the benefit of poor little children whom the usual Santa Claus fails to find."

CHRISTMAS Pantomime.

Never were father and child more alike in every possible respect than old Ned Herring, the famous pantomime clown, and his little daughter Edith—even in personal appearance. Ned, the father, was ugly and the daughter beautiful, but they were both tall and slender and solemn looking. Edith seldom smiled, except upon her father, or when engaged in the business of the pantomime. For, of course, she was brought up to his own business by her father, and at a very early age became a great favorite in holiday pieces as a "fairy," etc.

Her popularity soon began to exceed that of her father. But this only made him love the child the more. There was no possible jealousy between these two devoted souls. And the knowledge that she was so useful and valuable to her dear father only made that father dearer to little Edith and rendered her more desirous to be of service to him and to the pantomime which made his world.

Shortly after Ned Herring's arrival in New York he was engaged, with his daughter, as the clown and fairy star of a holiday pantomime at Niblo's Garden. Great preparations were made for this affair, and Herring found himself, as usual, a man of much importance. His name and that of his daughter were in all the papers and posters, when suddenly his little daughter fell sick, for the first, and last, time in her little life.
At first hearing this, stupefied, dazed, he could not believe that such a calamity could by any possibility happen to him as his daughter's getting sick. Then, when the full truth at last burst upon him, he was wroth, not on his own account, but on hers. He thought not on his own blighted prospects, but only of his little darling's sufferin' whom he nursed all day like father, mother and nurse combined, stayin' in her little room in Theatre Alley and never puttin' in an appearance at the Garden, where, of course, all the pantomime preparations were at a standstill from his absence.

But the father was recalled to a sense of his pressin' professional necessities by his sick daughter herself. Little child as she was, she thoroughly understood just what her sickness at this time and her father's absence meant, in a business point of view. At first she fought against her illness, tried to get up and go to the theatre for rehearsal anyway; but this was a physical impossibility, and she sank back on her bed exhausted and all the worse for her effort. But recoverin' herself a moment, she insisted at any rate upon her father's goin' to the theatre, even if she couldn't. She could nurse herself, she said, or she could do without nursin', but her father must attend to his duties; he must devote himself as before to the great pantomime. Finally, the afflicted father so arranged it that an old woman in the neighborhood was engaged to remain with and attend to his child when he went to the theatre.

This was hard on poor old Ned, but little Edith had suggested something harder yet. With a wisdom beyond her years, she had reflected that as her sickness just at this time would incapacitate her from takin' part in the programme, it was necessary for her father's interests, and the great pantomime's, that somebody, some other little girl, take her place. So, before her father started for the theatre, for the first time since her sickness, she had an earnest and full talk with him about her successor—a very bitter sort of talk to have, for any "professional," especially any woman. They naturally hate the term "successor." But little Edith discussed the matter calmly.

And of two little girls whom she had already met around the theatre, little Edith particularly recommended one to be taken in her place, givin' her reasons for the preference in the most unimpassioned and stage manager sort of a manner. Her poor father, struck with this new evidence of his little daughter's inestimable worth, kissed her passionately and sadly, and departed to the garden.

There he found a certain amount of sympathy, it is true, but of course, not enough of that article to interfere in any way with the business of the piece. The holidays must be taken advantage of, no matter who suffers, and the pantomime must be produced, no matter who be crushed. And Herring was informed that his daughter's services were indispensable. In a Christmas pantomime children count, and she was such a child. The management had extensively advertised her and it could not afford to disappoint the public.

Besides, the "successor" or substitute idea suggested by little Edith would not work.
True, the little girl she had chosen for the part was already to take her place, but had a father, himself a clown, and the father, seen his chance, would not permit the services of his child unless his own as clown were engaged likewise—a proposition, to which, of course, Herring would not consent.

He returned to Theatre Alley with a sadder heart than he had left it with, and told his daughter all. "Cheer up, father," she said, with her sweet smile, and her sweetly solemn way, "I will get well in time for the openin' night, and we'll play together."
It really seemed as if she would keep her word, for from that moment she appeared to grow better. Her father was buoyed up with hopes, and it looked as if Christmas and New Year might be Christmas and New Year after all. Her father kept her posted about the progress of the rehearsals and gave her all the "points" she needed for her own part, which ran through the piece, windin' up with the grand "transformation" scene, in which she, the fairy queen, was revealed in all her glory in the centre of a star, which openin' disclosed her to public view and admiration. The child's quick and trained comprehension took in all the points, and the rehearsals progressed almost as satisfactorily in her bed as they would have done on the stage.

The openin' night came at last, and all day long little Edith had been in a flurry of expectation, while the father had been in a flurry of preparation, rushin' from Theatre Alley to Niblo's Garden every two or three hours and back again, overseerin' alike the preparations for the production of the pantomime and the removal of his daughter.

Although he could ill afford the expense, a woman was hired for the day to see to Edith and her dresses, and a carriage was hired at night to take her, with her father, to the theatre. Up to about four o'clock in the afternoon, Edith had seemed uncommonly bright and cheerful, but reaction set in, and the child became nervous and low spirited. She rallied, however, when her father came for her in the carriage, and when she had been tenderly wrapped up with a loose cloak around her fair fiery, and was carried into the carriage in her father's arms, she enjoyed the novelty of the experience and reached the Garden in a glee.

She was far from strong, however. In fact, her devoted father saw that she was growin' weaker and weaker. After all she was but a child, and ought to have been that night in bed, but it was too late to think of that now.

The pantomime began and both old Ned and little Edith were received with favor, the latter especially. She acknowledged her reception joyously, and for awhile went through her part with all her wonted grace and glee. But then she seemed to grow faint and weak, to her poor father's infinite chagrin and sorrow. He watched her every moment and his heart bled for her. While he was makin' his faces and cuttin' his capers, tears of sorrow were in his own eyes when he was bringin' tears of laughter into the eyes of others. And at last he rushed up to little Edith and insisted, pantomime or no pantomime, that she should stop at once and go home with him. "No, Father, love," as she always called him, "let me finish the piece," she said, and she stayed and tottered through, as best she could, still smilin' and lookin' charmiu'.

And at last the end came—the transformation scene was on—and amid great applause the great central star appeared and revealed the little Edith, the glorified fairy queen. A cry of admiration went up from the spectators, but at the same moment a strange cry—a cry that sounded terribly strange in its contrast to the other—an exceedingly wild and bitter cry went up from the heart and voice of old Ned Herring, the clown.

For he saw his daughter, and he saw that she was dead! Those around noticed it not. The audience, of course, could not perceive it; but the father's heart guided the father's eye, and he saw the awful truth that had escaped all others. As the curtain fell upon the glitterin' scene, the wretched clown, in his powder, paint and spangles, rushed up to the "star" and seizin' his lifeless child in his arms, wept over her like a baby.

They crowded around him, harlequin, columbine and the rest, and tried to give him hope that she was not really dead. "Not dead!" cried the heart-broken clown, "don't you see her eyes are open and yet she does not smile upon her father for the first time in her life. Ah, she is dead, indeed!"
And so she was. Little Edith had "finished her piece," and had done with pantomime and life together. Perhaps, as in the case of Little Nell, "it was better as it is."

CHRISTMAS PRESENT—The one just at hand.

CHRISTMAS.

Before another issue of this paper occurs, the glorious Festival of the Nativity of our Lord, will have been numbered with the happy celebrations of it in the days gone by.

Whatever doubts may have arisen in the past, as to the present season being the correct one for the celebration of Christmas, they are no longer regarded, and are counted as nothing worth before the universal will and practice of all Christians in its favour.

The New Orleans Exposition was formally opened yesterday, Tuesday, the President, in Washington, setting the machinery in the exposition balls in motion by the touch of an electric key.

Christmas is the immediate product of the Church to honour Him, who as His Head became man, for man's salvation.

Mr. BLAINE has written a letter to his attorneys instructing them to dismiss the suit for libel against the Indianapolis Sentinel, because he thinks he cannot get justice in Indiana.

The Methodist Centennial Conference that had been in session in Baltimore for eight days, adjourned on Wednesday evening, after adopting an address to the Church.

It is reported that the President elect having given Senator Bayard his choice of a seat in the cabinet, the Senator has chosen the Treasury Portfolio.

A GRAND BANQUET.

A banquet was held on Thursday night the 11th inst., in Baltimore, in honor of Senator Arthur P. Gorman, in recognition of his services as chairman of the democratic executive committee.

ATTEMPT TO BLOW UP LONDON BRIDGE.

On Saturday last an attempt was made to blow up London Bridge. It produced a terrible concussion, but resulted to a failure in the purpose.

A WRITER from Boston to the New York Sun, (Dec. 14th), among the details of a conversation with Poet Whittier, gives the following: "There are many things I have written, especially in prose, which I never shall republish."

WASHINGTON LETTER. WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 17, 1884. An addition to the bronze monuments with which Washington already abounds, is to be unveiled in the presence of the public dignitaries at the Capital next Saturday.

THE METHODIST CENTENNIAL CONFERENCE that had been in session in Baltimore for eight days, adjourned on Wednesday evening, after adopting an address to the Church.

SUMMARY OF NEWS.

FROM surveys of the Gulf of Mexico it appears that its area is 595,000 square miles.

THE DRUGGIST estimates that the annual production of canned goods in the United States, equals 500,000,000 packages, or ten for every person.

THE POSTMASTER General has decided that patent medicines and proprietary packages can be sent through the mails in the original packages as fourth class matter.

AN AEROLITE fell on the farm of O. Francois, at Chateau Richer, a short distance from Quebec, at 3 a. m. on Saturday.

THE LATEST offer of assistance to put up the Bartholdi statue comes from Miss Elsa Von Blumen, a feminine bicyclist, who proposes to ride 100 miles against one horse or two horses in Madison Square Garden.

SIXTY tons of rock fell on the 1st, from the arch of the Natural bridge, Va.—The report was deafening and the shock considerable.

CHURCH property is hereafter to be taxed in Washington Territory.

It's a Positive Fact. That no remedy compares with "Aromanna" for the cure of dyspepsia, liver and kidney diseases, chills, fevers, impure blood, indigestion, biliousness, sick headache, etc. If you are afflicted with this valuable remedy and be cured.—Price 25c and 75 cts. Sold by C. D. Eichelberger.

To the Afflicted. Don't suffer with chills, malarial fever, liver and kidney diseases, dyspepsia, indigestion, sick headache, etc., when you can get relief so readily. Aromanna was being thoroughly tested and effects wonderful cures where other medicines have failed. Call at C. D. Eichelberger's drug store and get a 25c. bottle that you may judge of its medicinal qualities.

Pleuro-Pneumonia. Dr. A. Ward, state veterinary Surgeon was summoned to the farm of Mr. Sam'l. Hoke, near Frederick, on last Saturday and found two fine cattle in a herd of sixty or more suffering from pleuro-pneumonia. He had them killed immediately ordered the place to be thoroughly disinfected. He thinks that as the disease had not become virulent, none of the rest of the herd will be attacked.

The New York Sun. The advertisement of the above great journal appears elsewhere in this issue. The Sun is Democratic in its bearings, but independent in the strictest sense in its deliveries. Its great excellence lies in the fact that its writers are of the highest cultivation, whereby they are enabled to give all the news of the day in the smallest compass, and in the most attractive form, condensed to the last degree.

A Heavy Sleet. We had a hail storm on Sunday evening last that eventually turned into a drizzle that froze as it fell, this continued well on into the night. On Monday morning the views of the ice encased trees shrubbery were beautiful in the extreme until about 10 o'clock, when the sun-shine soon reduced it all to water. Along our streets the melting progressed, the falling drops of water gave the appearance of a light shower of rain in progress.

DuLac's "Swiss Balsam." Is an unequalled remedy for the cure of coughs, colds, croup, hoarseness, asthma, and all diseases of the throat and lungs. It's a quick, safe and effectual remedy, especially recommended for children, as it contains no morphine or opium. Try it and you will use no other. Price 25 and 75 cents. Sold by C. D. Eichelberger.

PATTI, it is said, guards herself carefully against cold. She evidently does not believe in free concerts, but does believe in the free use of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup, as it has cured her several times.

Extraordinary Vegetation. A two-year old child of Mr. E. H. Woltz, this city, ate heartily of dried corn on Thanksgiving Day at a dinner with its parents. Since then the child has been affected with a high fever and a physician being called in found the little sufferer's abdomen distended and hard. Relief being afforded, it was found that the corn had undertaken to grow in the child's stomach, some of the grains having bursted and produced sprouts two inches in length. The little one, who unintentionally and unavoidably placed herself on record, has entirely recovered.—Hagerstown Globe.

We have received a copy of the American Agricultural Family Cyclopaedia. The book is presented free to all subscribers to the Agriculturalist on the receipt of $1.50 and 15 cts. extra for postage on the Cyclopaedia. It contains 700 pages and over 1000 engravings, and is bound in cloth. It is a most excellent work treating upon almost every subject that can be of interest to the farmer, the home circle and others, in such condensed forms as make it truly instructive and of ready reference. In combination with the EMMITSBURG CHRONICLE the Agriculturalist and the book may be had for $2.90 per year.

On Saturday evening last, after night-fall, Mr. Chas. Cover of this place attempted to ford Owens Creek above the bridge on the Graceland and Rocky Ridge road, when the current capized the wagon and he narrowly escaped drowning. Both the horse and wagon rolled over. The horse became detached and saved himself, although owing to the darkness, neither were recovered until the following morning. The seats of the wagons were found about a mile below. The wagon was badly used up about the top. The bridge was undergoing repairs and could not be used.—Clarion.

An Arctic Hero's Welcome. Commodore Winfield Scott Schley, commander of the Greely relief expedition, paid this city a visit Saturday evening, as the guest of Miss Mary C. Goldsborough, on West Patrick street. The Frederick Cornet Band tendered the honored guest a serenade. Mr. Schley was introduced to the crowd by Maj. E. Y. Goldsborough, and after returning thanks for the courteous treatment referred briefly to his work and that of the noble men under his command. At the close of the address many prominent citizens tendered their congratulations to the commodore, who is a native of Frederick, and is held in high esteem by the nation.—News.

Flow to Get a Public Office. There are one hundred and twenty thousand offices within the gift of the new administration, and now is the time for those seeking public employment to take proper steps to secure one of these lucrative positions. To this end the United States Blue Book will prove an indispensable guide and assistant. The Blue Book is a register of all Federal offices and employments in each State and Territory, the District of Columbia and abroad, with their salaries, emoluments and duties, shows who is eligible for appointment, the civil service rules, questions asked at examinations, how to make an application and how to push it to success, and gives besides a vast amount of important and valuable information relative to government positions never before published.

Send seventy-five cents to J. H. Soule, Publisher, Washington, D. C., and secure a copy of the Blue Book. Agents wanted.

Something to Take. There came to this office some days ago, an envelope to whose regular address was superadded a "Proposition to notice and advertise the Pictorial History Romance and Philosophy of celebrated crimes and criminals, including the Great Typical Crimes and Criminals that have marked the various Periods of American History. New, Reliable, Attractive. Over 150 Superb Engravings. Combines Dignity and Accuracy with the thrilling interest of Romance."

To this feast we are invited. It needs but that we shall insert a few inches of commendation of the book, and its contents, superb binding and all shall be our indisputable property.

Ordinarily such applications find their circulation at an end in our waste-basket, but as even there they may find a re-examination by the chance rumbering of idle hands, this choice and tempting offer we have submitted to the purveyor of the flames, as we have done many others that promised handsome payment for their appearance in our columns.

It is just such books as these that combine "the dignity and accuracy of History with the thrilling interest of romance" that tempt our boys to crime and our girls to the vilest criminals are thus depicted in the glowing language of romance, they become heroes to the idle boy, who rebels against the restraints and discipline of home, and they consider the arrest and punishment of the villans a sort of martyrdom, which they are eager to risk for the sake of the glory attached to it; and in this way the succession of outlaws is secured.

It is time that the sense of decency and regard for the public safety should put an end to this wholesale poisoning of the minds of our youth. Whatever may be the influence of our journal, we cannot lend its weight to the circulation of a class of literature tending thus towards immorality, crime and degradation; therefore we say once for all—Be distant, the whole vile herd!

Hogs raised about distilleries are very often subject to inflammation of the lungs and liver. These troubles may be easily avoided by keeping Day's Horse and Cattle Powder in their stables. One package to the barrel, or pro rata, is the proper quantity.

MR. ELIAS DELAUNDER, a well known farmer residing near Myersville, in this valley, is the owner of a pair of very fine Norman colts. One of them, which was three years old last October weighs 1232 pounds, and the other, just 18 months, weighs 1110 pounds. Mr. DeLauder also makes a good report in another direction. He says that he gathered this season 174 barrels of good corn from a 14 acre field on his farm, an average of 12 1/2 barrels per acre.—Valley Register.

Horse cars, stages and elevated railroad to all depots. Families can live better for less money at the Grand Union Hotel than at any other first class hotel in the city. oct 18-1y

Fire at Walkersville. Early yesterday morning fire was discovered by a domestic in the store of Mr. G. Clinton Winebrenner at Walkersville. It is supposed that some hot coals dropped from the stove on the floor through a hole in the ceiling, lighting the floor through which a hole was burned, allowing the stove to careened over. The five colts fell to the cellar and destroyed a wooden box containing a lot of lamp chimneys, many of which were ruined. The fire was with difficulty extinguished. The store and fixtures are insured in the Old Mutual Company of this city. Mr. David Frazier visited the scene of the fire this morning in the interest of the company and appraised the loss at $10.—News, 15th inst.

The inaugural address of the Rev. James M. Mason Knox, D. D., the newly elected President of Lafayette College, at Easton, Pa., is before us. After paying deserved tributes to its original founder, and to his immediate predecessor, he enters upon the consideration of matters more purely educational.

He recognizes the fact, too often lost sight of in our modern education, that man has moral and religious faculties that need to be trained, and disciplined quite as much as his intellectual. He sees that the higher faculties which lay hold of unseen verities constitute the true balance-wheel in our complex mental structure, and hence says with force and reason. "If in our day of unrest and stirring movements, there is to be order,—if law, and not licentiousness is to prevail, then every College a work to do, the magnitude and importance of which are beyond the power of speech to tell." We commend the address which can be obtained of the Secretary of the College, to the persons of those interested in the subject of christian education.

History of Santa Claus. The history of Santa Claus—a curious mixture of truth and fable—goes far back into the ancient times. Centuries ago a child was born in Asia Minor who received the name of Nicholas. His parents were wealthy and of high rank, and desiring to express their gratitude to God for the birth of their son, they resolved to educate him for the Christian priesthood. The child was sober and thoughtful, and while yet young both his parents died and he inherited their great wealth. He considered the riches a sacred trust; he fed the hungry, he clothed the destitute, and performed all kinds of good deeds as secretly as possible. As a priest he was greatly beloved; as a bishop he continued his benevolence. After his death the church canonized him and he became one of the greatest patron saints, being revered as the help of the poor, the protector of the weak, and as the special patron saint of little children, who were taught to believe that their good gifts came from him. St. Nicholas was the name given him by the monks, and this was familiarly changed to Santa Claus and finally clipped down to Santa Claus, who is still represented as retaining his old habits of secret benevolence and coming down the chimney at nights, laden with Christmas presents for children. A pleasant fiction it is to them, under the cover of which that charming secrecy concerning the donors of gifts is kept up, though little eyes and ears and minds are keen, and Santa Claus is usually very well known to them as a much more modern personage than old St. Nicholas. But the children enjoy the harmless pretense, the mysterious filling of stockings and the heavily laden Christmas tree.—Frederick News.

SANTA CLAUS AND THE MOUSE. One Christmas Eve, when Santa Claus came to a certain house, To fill the children's stockings there, He found a little mouse. "A merry Christmas, little friend," Said Santa, good and kind. "The same to you, sir," said the mouse; "I thought you wouldn't mind." "If I should stay awake to night And watch you for awhile," "You're very welcome, little mouse," Said Santa, with a smile. And then he filled the stockings up Before the mouse could wink— From top to top, from top to toe, There wasn't left a clink. "Now, they won't hold another thing," Said Santa Claus, with pride. A twinkle came in mouse's eyes, But lamely he replied: "It's not polite to contradict— Your pardon I implore— But in the fullest stocking there I could put one thing more." "Oh, oh!" laughed Santa, "silly mouse! Don't I know how to pack? By filling stockings all these years, I should have learned the knack." And then he took the stocking down From where it hung so high, And said: "Now put in one thing more, I give you leave to try." The mouse chuckled to himself, And then he softly stole Right to the stocking's crowded toe And gnawed a little hole! "Now, if you please, good Santa Claus, I've put in one thing more; For you will own that little hole Was not in there before." How Santa Claus did laugh and laugh! And then he gaily spoke; "Well! you shall have a Christmas cheese For this nice little joke!" —EMILE POULSSON, in St. Nicholas.

Mankind's Hygienic Mistake. It is a mistake to labor when you are not in fit condition to do so. To conclude that the smallest room in the house is large enough to sleep in. To think that the more a person eats the healthier and stronger he will become. To take off proper clothing out of season because you have become heated. To imagine that if a little work or exercise is good, violent and prolonged exercise is better. To think that any nostrum or patent medicine is a specific for all diseases flesh is heir to. To go to bed at midnight and rise at day break, and imagine that every hour taken from sleep is an hour gained. To believe that children can do as much as grown people, and that the more hours they study the more they can learn. To eat as if you only had a minute to finish the meal in, or to eat without appetite, or continue after it has been satisfied, merely to satisfy the taste. To imagine that whatever remedy causes one to feel immediately better—as alcoholic stimulants—is good for the system without regard to after effects.

A RECENT French writer thinks the unmarried life of English women delightful, but when they marry the contrast is wholly in favor of French females. When a French woman marries, he says, she is emancipated, while an English girl enters upon a condition of slavery. She becomes merely the housekeeper of her husband, and knows nothing of his business, being moved by him from a villa to a palace, or to a hovel like a mere piece of furniture, as his fortunes may change. In France, on the other hand, among the commercial classes, the wife is as well up in business as her husband, and in many cases keeps the books. In England a woman is nobody when bereft of her husband, who has frequently made no provision for her. Across the channel, on the contrary, the widow frequently carries on the business and sustains no reverse of fortune.

Fresh Air. Live out of doors as much as you can. It is the place for a man to be. It is good for the health. A distinguished physician was in the habit of saying: "However bad the air may be out of doors, it is always worse in the house. It is good for the temper. People who are always shut up in a house are apt to grow fretful and peevish. They are prone to acquire narrow views of things, and worry over trials not worth considering. It is good for the whole character—for strength, hope, patience and fortitude. It expands and softens one's nature, and makes one more charitable." Never put a hot iron directly upon silk; it takes the life out of it.

If the children ask how Santa Claus got down the chimney, tell them he flew down in his winter suit. HAVE faith in Santa Claus, and hang up your stockings. He has never been known to steal one, even if he didn't put anything in it. YOUNG men, it isn't always the girl who looks loveliest in the soft, sweet shadows of the darkening twilight, who takes that beauty with her in the grim, gray morning as she wrestles with a kitchen stove.—Merchant Traveller. "Why can't we give dinner parties in Lent?" said Mrs. Parvonn. "Because the daughter explained, 'it isn't fashionable among real nice folks, who fast, you know.'" "Stuff and nonsense!" exclaimed Mrs. Parvonn, "but we'll ask 'em anyhow and then we'll get ourselves asked later on." BE cheerful. It is better to live in sunshine than in gloom. If a cloud rests upon your heart, turn its silver lining to your friends, and the glow of cheer it will cast upon them will be reflected on you, and the cloud will give way before the brightness and joy its own light has begotten. His Money's Worth.—"The fish I bought from you yesterday were not good," said a gentleman to a negro dealer. "What wuz de matter wid 'em?" "They were half spoiled." "But, sah, you must recollect dat I gin yer double weight; derefer de good half wuz yer money's wuth." —Arkansas Traveller.

The Christmas Tree. The possibilities of a Christmas tree that will bear fruit in the shape of presents for all the family, and stockings running over with surprises for little folk are many, even under the most adverse of circumstances, and whenever it is possible to have the tree it should never be neglected. Banking Intelligence. He wanted a position in an Aus tin bank. The president was satisfied with his credentials, but before engaging him put him through a civil service cross examination. "Suppose now, a man was to come in here to deposit twenty dollars in one dollar bills, how would you count them?" "I'd wet my finger and lift up each bill until I got to the last one." "Why would you not lift up the last one?" "Because there might possibly be one more bill under it, and if the depositor was to see it he would want it back, but if the twentieth bill is not lifted up and there should be another bill in the pile the bank makes it, don't you see?" "You will do," said the bank president. "You have been in the business before, but I didn't suppose you knew that trick!" —Texas Siftings.

DR. JOHN BULL'S Smith's Tonic Syrup FOR THE CURE OF FEVER and AGUE Or CHILLS and FEVER, AND ALL MALARIAL DISEASES. The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern countries to bear witness to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to cure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient to cure, and whole families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usualy this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of BULL'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient. BULL'S SARSAPARILLA is the old and reliable remedy for impurities of the blood and Scrofulous affections. DR.
