HIDDEN CHORDS.

The present hour repeats upon its strings

Echoes of some vague dream we have forgot;

Dim voices whisper half-remember'd things,

And when we pause to listen, answer not.

Forebodings come; we know not how or whence,

Shadowing a nameless fear upon the soul,

And stir within our hearts a subtler sense,

Than light may read or wisdom may control.

And who can tell what secret links of thought bind heart to heart? Unspoken things are heard,

As if within our deepest selves was wrought

The soul, perhaps, of some unutter'd word.

But, though a veil of shadow hangs between

That hidden life, and what we see and hear,

Let us reverse the power of the Unseen, Because a world of mystery is near.

—Every Other Saturday.

JACK'S AUNT'S FLAT CANDLESTICK.

Jack Wyvill was one of the staff of the Saturday Star, a weekly journal, combining sensation-romance with the political and other intelligence. I was dramatic critic on the same periodical. We took a fancy to each other and spent many an afternoon, and not a few evenings, together. He was a gentleman—that there was not a doubt of—but he was in sorely reduced circumstances, and the anecdotes he related to me of the time when he and a friend, who was an excellent student, lived in a garret in Gray's Inn, in a constant state of siege by creditors, were as amusing as his stories in the Star, with the advantage of being true besides.

But, amusing as they might be to those that heard them, they could not have been pleasant to the actors and I said as much to Jack.

"What would you have?" he answered. "When you're runned for money you don't choose to pay it's all very well; you can ring the curtain down on the comedy when you are tired. But when you positively can't pay, you must play—play it out to the last scene."

"But, hang it all!" said I, with a recollection of stress of debt at college, and of its removal, "could not you apply to your friends?"

"I had only one real friend then," said Jack; "Jim Downes, the young painter I told you of, who shared chambers. He had exactly as much as I had—nothing! If he had been possessed of a penny more than I,

he wouldn't have been a real friend.

If you mean the ordinary article termed 'friend,' and procurable

(while you have the money) in assorted lots, then let me tell you, they would have been the last people I should have applied to, it being my experience that a confession of weakness to them is dangerous."

"I meant relations, Jack," said

I, apologetically, "when I used the conventional vagueness, you have very properly pitched into."

"Oh! that's even worse; for of all people in the world, one's relations are those who are least likely to prove one's friends. I have no relations—except a rich old aunt."

"The very party to apply to!"

Possibly. But also the very party to be refused by, with a snubbing

in. Bless you, the old lady is serious!

When she learned I was a 'writing fellow,' especially of fiction (though for that matter I don't see much difference between a storyteller and a newspaper correspondent) she resolutely refused to see or hear of me. I never cared to bother her; for I had always, as a youngster, been foolishly independent, and hated the notion of making up to her for coin. I said I would make my own way in the world by my talent."

been cleared off, I was keeping my terms at the Temple on an income which, with what I got by my pen, was more than enough for my humble requirements. I was able to be of some assistance to Jack, therefore, though only in the way of loans, which he scrupulously repaid when he drew his money. Time went on, and I was called to the bar. Jack was at my call—supper —and that was the last I saw of him for a long while, for my mother was taken seriously ill, and I was telegraphed for. I went home and watched by her bedside until she was taken away. I was very fond of her, the only parent I had ever known, for my father had died while I was an infant. I was her only child.

It was a long time before I recovered from the blow, and the arrangement of affairs kept me in the country yet longer. When I returned to town I found the little world in which I had moved knew me no longer. My place had been filled up and had I wanted work—which luckily, I did not—I should have had but a poor chance of procuring employment on any paper. I had dropped out of the running completely.

Several times I visited the old haunts, chiefly in the hope of meeting Jack, but I never fell in with him again, and some one told me he thought he had gone off as "sub" for a provincial paper.

But one night as I was sitting alone in my chambers, studying a brief—I had begun to practice in a small way, now—there came a timid knock at my door. I opened, and in came the ghost of Jack Wyvill.

He had never—as my description of him will have led you to suppose—looked too robust, well-fed or prosperous, but now he was the shadow of his former self. We hardly

THE BATTLE JOINED.

The canvass to determine who shall represent the Sixth Congressional District of Maryland, in the fiftieth Congress, has opened.

The Republican Convention met at Hagerstown on Tuesday, and re-nominated Hon. Louia B. McComas as its standard bearer for the place; and the Democratic Convention met at the same place on Wednesday, and nominated Col. L. Victor Baughman as its choice for the office.

Both of the candidates are young men of excellent parts, personally and mentally, and known as without reproach. Mr. McComas in his service as representative for two terms has proven himself a successful official, serving his constituents with marked ability, gaining a reputation far beyond the limits of the State, having shown himself a conscientious worker, intent on fulfilling his trust as a duty to the entire people.

Col. Baughman is well and favorably known throughout the State as an accomplished gentleman, a graceful speaker, a fearless advocate of Democratic principles, and the eloquent champion of his candidates in many well-fought political contests; whilst his management, as President of the Canal, improving its condition in all respects and promoting its prosperity, above the experience of years gone by, has shown him to be possessed of executive abilities that eminently fit him to fulfill any trust to which he may be called.

With such candidates in the field, a lively contest may be expected, henceforth until the election in November shall decide the issue. The personnel of the gentleman is such that every man in the several Counties of the District may be expected to take part in the battle.

"When Greeks joined Greeks then was the tug of war." So now as the parties having foemen worthy of each other, no doubt the canvass will proceed on an honorable and high-toned basis, which if it shall not prove as amiable as that of the Taylor Brothers, for the office of Governor in Tennessee, it is hoped may be devoid of elements that may produce regrets at its close.

THE THIRD PARTY.

The Examiner of this week discourses on the above subject. It seems to suggest that the Republican party shall take the wind out of the sails of the Prohibition party, and says: "The intelligent voters of this Congressional district know very well that in the matters of control and restraint of the liquor traffic the Republican party is far in advance of the Democracy; in fact the issue is clearly drawn in Wisconsin where the Republican platform this year declares for prohibition, while the Democratic enunciation of principles declares for the support of the rum traffic." It might be edifying to have it explain the state of the question in Maine, where with everything favoring, for some twenty-five years, there are not even to this day, the most flattering evidences of advance in the conflict against "the rum traffic."

The argument is irresistible, if the "issue" is rightly drawn for Wisconsin, why not draw it for this sixth Congressional District of Maryland? and why should the prohibitionists do the proper work of the Republicans?

Perhaps the following from the Philadelphia Record might meet the case:

THEY HAVE BOTH.

The people of Maine want no better prohibitionist party than the Republican party. Under the Republican party they have their prohibition and their liquor too.

We have no disposition to discuss the question. Nor do we think it can be properly met, on political grounds, as parties exist. With appropriate legislation enforced by accordant popular sentiment, good must result, but all attempts to make the personal predilections of the few, the rule to govern the many must fail now as they have always done in the course of history.

An attempted revolution in Spain on Monday was promptly followed on the next day by the condemnation to death of the officers implicated.

The new Homoeopathic Medical College, at Philadelphia, was dedicated Tuesday night.

THE CONSTITUTION'S CENTENNIAL.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 17.—Seven Governors and representatives of the Chief Executives of the six remaining States composing the original thirteen Colonial States which carried on the war of Independence assembled here to-day, effected a permanent organization and completed plans for celebrating the centennial anniversary of the adoption of the Constitution of the United States on Sept. 17, next year. There were present Governors Fitzhugh Lee, of Virginia; Stockley, of Delaware; Lloyd, of Maryland; McDaniel, of Georgia; Wetmore, of Rhode Island; Shepherd, of South Carolina, and Pattison of this commonwealth, together with representatives of Connecticut, North Carolina, Massachusetts and New Hampshire.

They were tendered a cordial reception by the citizens and municipal authorities. They visited Independence Hall and Carpenter's Hall in the forenoon and in the evening attended the Chestnut Street Opera-House. Later to-night they were tendered a banquet at Deemer's Hotel by the Hibernians' Society. At the morning meeting it was resolved that the Federal Government and each State and Territory in the Union be invited to unite in preparations for a proper celebration of the anniversary on Sept. 17, 1887, and that the President send delegates to this city Dec. 2, to devise measures to secure a worthy celebration of the anniversary.—N. Y. World.

BALTIMORE BOOKS IN THE SCHOOLS.

In a late issue the Baltimore Sun argues very conclusively in favor of giving the preference to Books of Baltimore manufacture in the Primary Schools. We think its statement of the case very pertinent, but at the same time also think the argument might be extended in favor of more State pride generally. In New England, Boston has ever been the watchword in whatever relates to progress in that section, and Boston has been cried up, in the school books and through every agency until, all the people exclaim, Great is Boston!

The New England children know their geographical points from earliest childhood, because the maps and instructions lay every point before them in their first lessons. It is only of late years that our Maryland youth, have been able to get maps of the State, and perhaps they have been compiled from abroad. A reasonable amount of State pride cannot fail to bring forth good results, and surely Baltimore presents every point of interest and consequence in which Marylanders may feel a just pride. To think well and to talk lovingly of one's home surroundings is better than by unjust comparisons to disparage it.

The following very consoling announcement of Prof. Wiggins, will, no doubt, lift a load of apprehension off the minds of those who were threatened with another direful shake, and they will feel encouraged to go on with the work of reconstructing their homes, with hopeful hearts, now that they are assured of immunity from earthquake visits for some time to come.

The Constitution of Atlanta having telegraphed to Prof. Wiggins, he replied as follows:

"OTTAWA, Ont., Sept. 22.—The earthquake wave that visited Charleston and your region August 30 has moved eastward and from it there can be no future danger. The shocks there yesterday were caused by the sun moving across the celestial equator. There is positively no danger from earthquakes in your latitude east of the Rocky Mountains, except on Wednesday next, and even that force will pass westward on a parallel south of you. The greatest danger is to Central America, South America and California. The forces that create the earthquake will cause a great storm with high tides, both in the North and South Atlantic, on Wednesday next, which, however, will not be felt in forty degrees of the equator."—E. STONE WIGGINS.

Prof. McGee telegraphs the following to the Constitution:

"WASHINGTON, Sept. 22.—No attention whatever should be paid to Wiggins's predictions. You will remember that he is the same man who, a few years ago, predicted hurricanes, floods, earthquakes, volcanic eruptions, wars, pestilences and famines all over the earth and that never came in response to his predictions. His predictions of that day were based, as his present prediction is, on the conjunction of principal planets. It proved to be absurd then and will prove to be absurd now."

—W. J. MCGEE.

The Bartholdi statue is to be unveiled on October 20th.

THE SOUTHERN EXPOSITION.

Special to the Emmitsburg Chronicle.

LOUISVILLE, Sept. 20.—Three weeks of the Southern Exposition of 1886 have gone by and the fourth week opens under the most favorable auspices. Every thing is not only in good shape and running order, but all who have exhibits and all who have any official connection with the Exhibition as a whole, have grown familiar with their duties, and are fully prepared to give the visitor all the information desired in regard to, and in every department.

The area of the machinery department of the Exposition is divided into four sections, the first containing 36,000 square feet, the second 60,000, the third 45,000, and the fourth 36,000; total 177,000 square feet of space. The pump tank in section two is 60x30 feet, with a capacity of 57,000 gallons. The shafting is run in double lines, 528 feet on the east side, 436 on the south side, and 552 feet on the west side. There are three batteries of four boilers each on the east side, and one battery of four boilers on the west side, making sixteen boilers 42 inches by 24 feet. The engines selected are of a variety for the encouragement of engine builders. The horse power required is usually from 1,000 to 1,400 to drive the machinery and furnish the electric lights.

There is heavy machinery, here, there and everywhere, from a steam engine to a steam plow, but there is also much light machinery, especially in its proper place, in the Main Building, where work is turned out before the eyes of the visitor. There is also to be found a very comprehensive collection of models of inventions, hand machinery, etc., including also several newly patented incubators, in which the process of hatching chickens by artificial heat may be observed. All sorts and kinds of agricultural machinery occupy a prominent place, as the planter is still recognized as the most independent dweller on the globe. In this connection it is not out of place to mention that the cotton and tobacco industries are well represented. There are to be seen all the kinds of tobacco raised in this country; cotton from every clime on the globe that cultivates the plant, in samples, and all the machinery used in its cultivation and manufacture. The machinery connected with the cultivation and preparation of the cereals for the markets and consumption is also to be seen in great variety.

EXPOSITION NOTE.

Great crowds are attracted to the cyclorama of the "Battle of Gettysburg."

People who like Castilian mineral water are supplied free near the Fourth street entrance.

A very large stone from Leonic, Ind., and quite a curiosity in its way, has been placed on exhibition at the Exposition.

Mr. Shallcross' Holstein Cattle Show is a great attraction for farmers, and the Dog Show is visited by all sorts of people.

In the western aisle there is a handsome display of buggies, carriages and other vehicles including farm wagons of all kinds.

The United States exhibit from the Smithsonian Institute is one of the best Government displays the Exposition has ever had.

Think of an animal with feet one yard in diameter, its height sixteen and a half feet, with tusks thirteen feet long, and your reader will have some idea of the skeleton of the great hairy mammoth to be seen at the Southern Exposition.

The Amateur Art Collection in the Exposition, is near to the Art Gallery and it is worth a visit. It contains not only specimens of paintings in oil and water colors, but samples of work done by the pupils of the Polytechnic School.

The Incubator in the Exposition is something of interest, especially to farmers who believe in the good old fashioned way of hatching chickens. The idea of having a chicken hatched every minute, and almost to order, fairly takes their breath away.

The Sewing Machine Department has many lady visitors. The machines are operated by a lady expert. For every address recorded on the register in this department, a ticket is given which entitles the holder to a chance in a drawing for a machine.

A cigar factory is in full operation in the Exposition building, and those who are curious to see just how a cigar or cigarette is manufactured from the leaf, can be gratified. There is always a crowd of those who are fond of the weed, inspecting the modus operandi.

The Catalogue of the Art Gallery at the Southern Exposition this year is an improvement on former years. The biographical notes are arranged alphabetically in the back of the book, making it handy for those interested in American artists and their productions.—W. D. B.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

SEPTEMBER 22, 1886.

Socrates: But what is this evil? Crito: Clearly on the body, I should say.

An interesting, but somewhat sorrowful complaint has been received by the Secretary of State, this week. It comes from the Chinese Minister. This worthy descendant of the almighty Confucius, relates a tale of woe, quite unprecedented. He states that certain female celestials, upon landing in San Francisco, were "searched all over" by the custom house officers, in the presence of a discourteous mob. "They were not only searched," wrote the irate minister, "but were compelled to take off their outer garments by compulsory orders." As the matter appeared serious, Secretary Bayard immediately notified the Treasury Department, who in turn, wrote to the collector of the port at San Francisco. This gentleman's reply, came in a few days, reeking with mellifluous eloquence, and conveying some rather startling information. He intrepidly observes, that the woman in question, were obviously smugglers. This assertion, he declares, is based upon the fact, that the inspectors, who searched the woman, found numberless unnecessary articles of feminine attire. These consisted of "new and unworn" overcoats, fine kerchiefs, variegated hose etc. So numerous indeed, were the articles gradually brought to light, that some little doubt existed with the collector, whether these furtive females, were not in the employ of some large importing establishment. He closes his report with a few remarks relating to the common practice of smuggling.

The President and his party will return next week. The White House during his absence, has been completely renovated. The painting, decorating and refurnishing cost about $8,000.

I noticed, some little time ago, a collection of Mrs. Cleveland's pictures. They were twenty-five in number, and each an excellent likeness. It is difficult to conclude, whether these pictures denote vanity or simply, a kind thoughtfulness of the curiosity of the people at large. Mrs. Cleveland has said, that she had these photo's taken to gratify the people, therefore, I cannot affirm, that she is like the philosopher of old, who after devoting a lifetime, writing of the uselessness of worldly fame, very singularly signs his name to his book.

That wily redskin Geronimo is once more reported, as having been captured. We will not credit this report, however, until we see him safe, inside a well built jail. There are a few faint hearted persons, who favor treating this nomadic gentleman, as a prisoner of war. These misguided few, have evidently been asleep, since the days of the good William Penn. Their idea's are accordingly musty, and appear to dwell upon the benevolent savages, whom our forefathers so sedulously pillaged. Anon, they appear to overlook the fact that this deep dyed sinner, has been murdering and burning the unlucky settlers in the southwest for many months. Upon one occasion he is said to have danced a jig, while the houses of his victims were burning. Why—should such a wretch be permitted to live?—I see that Florida, wants this extraordinary fiend—what she wants him for, is more than I, or anyone else can safely say.

ALIC.

The prices of coal have again been advanced by representatives of the monopolies to which Congress has accorded the privilege of regulating this matter to suit themselves. We have seen no notice of any increase of pay to the miners, who are working nearer to the "pauper wages" of England than are any unprotected laborers in this country.—N. Y. World.

Three bodies of six of the eight men who were buried in the Maruine mine at Seranton, Pa., on the 13th inst., were found on Tuesday in gangway beyond the point where the rescuers had mined through 150 feet of coal.

AMONG the many suggestions as to the causes and developments of the South Carolina earthquake. Mr. Edward W. Byrn writes to the Scientific American suggesting the idea that "the escape of the vast volumes of petroleum and natural gas from the wells sunk into the bowels of the earth may furnish a cause for the earthquake in this region."

The following from the New York World of the 18th inst., is in point: There are rumors of a perceptible lessening in the flow of gas from some of the wells in Pennsylvania, and it is said that some of the companies have stopped taking new customers since the earthquake, claiming that the convulsion has affected the flow unfavorably. Whether the report is true now or not, the stoppage is probably only a matter of time.

CONCLUSIVE.

Col. Lamont having been appealed to the other day as to whether the President and Col. Belo had worn the same blue flannel shirt, thought it must be so "as he had never seen the two have on flannel shirts at the same time."

The President and Mrs. Cleveland returned on Wednesday evening to the White House from their vacation in the Adirondack mountain.

PLEURO-PNEUMONIA prevails at Chicago to such an alarming extent that it threatens the stock and agricultural interests of the whole country.
