WAITERS AND WAITING.

The Difference in Hotel, Restaurant and Tea Party Work.

"What would be deemed excellent service in one class of establishments, said Mr. Hugo Ziemann at the Hotel Richelieu, "would be considered bad waiting in another. Indeed, men who give good satisfaction in one branch would be wholly inadequate in another branch of the same establishment. Hotel waiting is one thing; restaurant waiting, quite another; and that required in catering, different still. I think hotel waiting is the easiest; that required in the American restaurant is doubtless the hardest. In hotel service every thing is what we may call straight. There is not the rush and confusion that is incident to restaurant waiting. The waiter is not so hurried, and hence his liability to make mistakes or to be reckless is not so great. "In many of our popular restaurants from noon to two p. m. there is a perfect jam. The stores pour out their employes, and they all want their lunch at the same time; and, be it said to the credit of the waiters, it is a marvel that there are so few mistakes in orders and so little breakage of crockery. In hotels there is a more leisurely class of patronage. Fewer follies are displayed, and the waiter has breathing time, so to speak. In many big restaurants, where somebody has been quick to seize upon every chair vacated, it is necessary for the waiters to lay off every little while for a rest. This is never the case in hotels.

"So far as special qualifications required of waiters are concerned, there is all the difference in the world between different establishments. In places where French dishes are served and French names are printed on the bills of fare a knowledge of French is requisite. When a guest points to a name on the card and asks what it means the waiter can't go back to the cook to find out. Without some knowledge of French he would probably have to run back and forth half a dozen times, before finally getting his order. There are dozens of points peculiar to individual establishments that the average guest wants explained to him, and as a rule the better the house the higher the qualifications of the waiter required, not only in point of skill, but also of education.

"What is the hardest class of waiting? "Undoubtedly popular tea parties, where the guests do not sit down to eat but take a standing lunch in a room, the doors of which are thrown open at a given hour. The room is usually packed till it is almost impossible to edge one's way through the crowd. Yet waiters are expected to carry viands and coffee, without colliding with the guests—no easy thing, as you can imagine. A cup of coffee spilt on a silk dress would be a catastrophe both to the waiter and to the house doing the catering. Of course the waiter is regarded on such occasions as the next thing to a nonentity, and a legitimate assertion of his rights would be taken as pomposity and be summarily repressed. In such parties skill, next to that of an acrobat, is necessary on the part of the waiter, and guests are, as a rule, too slow to recognize his difficulties. An accident on the part of a host in carving or serving viands would be laughed off or not observed at all, while the same slip would be little short of unpardonable in a waiter. "Oh, my dress," "look out, young man," "what are you trying to do?" are exclamations frequently heard at tea parties; and all the time the crowd keeps surging in. Yards of fluffy skirts are cast about the waiter's feet or a jeweled hand jostles his elbow at the same time that the exclamation is uttered."—Chicago News.

CHILDREN OF NATURE.

How Mr. Turton Attended the Simple-Minded in New Guinea.

The unsophisticated tribe in New Guinea who think sugar is not fit to eat, recently offered to try an experiment upon Mr. Turton and his wife, which was respectfully declined. Regarding the color of the Europeans as a white pigment laid on very thickly they desired to wash it off, and see what their visitors looked like without their paint. Being amenable to argument, however, they finally became convinced that the pallor on the faces of the strangers was not applied, but was natural. Confidential relations were nearly established when Mrs. Turton upset every thing by suddenly closing her parasol without due notice. This phenomenon caused a panic, and the chief retreated over a hill in undignified haste, followed by all his people. As the world did not come to an end, and as the visitors were most friendly in their manner, the natives finally ventured back to the chief's two-penny looking-glass to the chief re-established complete confidence, and was accepted as a present worthy of a great prince.

But Mr. Turton was determined to show these children of nature some more wonders. He first exhibited his watch, and the movements of the wheels were observed with many exclamations of astonishment. Then he held it to the chief's ear, and when that venerable person heard the ticking he jumped about three feet from the ground, and declared that the thing talked. Mr. Turton showed some other curiosities, and at last accomplished the most astounding feat of the day. He caused wild dismay by lighting a match, and the chief declared that such exhibitions of magic art must be stopped. The portent of this occurrence was calamitous, and he begged Mr. Turton not to do so any more. The natives had seen more than they could assimilate in one day, and began to scatter to their huts. These people live only a few miles from the coast, at a place which has only recently been visited by white men.

MISS HARRIET HOSMER.

The Most Distinguished Representative of Her Sex in Sculpture.

Miss Hosmer was born in Watertown, Mass., in 1833. Her father was a well-known physician, who, having lost wife and daughter by consumption, required his surviving daughter to live in the open air in the hope of strengthening her constitution. His plan succeeded. Miss Hosmer is as rosy and vigorous as she is genial and suave. Her father built better than he knew. In a clay-pit near their home she spent many hours amusing herself modeling animals and shaping in the ductile medium any thing that pleased her fancy. She then studied anatomy with her father, who appreciated her gifts, and her anatomical drawings were notable for precision before she had been inside a school-room. At sixteen she was sent to Mrs. Sedgwick's school in Boston. Friends in St. Louis becoming interested in her talents she proceeded West and entered the medical college of that city to perfect herself in anatomy. She remained until she received a diploma. In 1851 Miss Hosmer modeled her first ideal, "Hesper," and the following year went to Rome, where she entered the studio of Gibson. Her taste led her into classic precincts, and her earliest work was a "Daphne," and a "Medusa" and an "Epona." In 1856 she modeled a "Puck." More than thirty replicas have been ordered. One is in the possession of the Prince of Wales. Mr. John G. Shortall has one. He has also a replica of the "Sleeping Faun," the original of which was bought by Sir Benjamin Guinness, the Irish brewer, at the Dublin exhibition of 1865, he paying the artist for it $5,000. Miss Hosmer has lived abroad the best part of more than thirty years; but she is American, as essentially so as if she had never crossed the water.

DR. HOLMES' WEAKNESS.

The Autocrat's Vanity and Inexplicable Love of Notoriety.

The popular supposition is that Boston worshipped Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes with a passion that is little short of idolatry. This notion, however, is a slight exaggeration of the fact. There is a considerable element here which is not at all predisposed in his favor. Representing this element are very many intelligent people, who think that the witty poet is altogether overrated. His digestion is all gone, they say, and now he is reduced to the necessity of living upon his reputation.

This sounds very much like petty jealousy. Nevertheless it is undeniable that the doctor's vanity is the weak point. There is nothing he enjoys so much as being advertised, although a person who has justly earned so varied a celebrity might well dispense, one would think, with vulgar notoriety. Not long ago a newspaper man asked Mr. James Russell Lowell for some materials wherewith to construct a sketch of the then British Minister's life and career. Mr. Lowell politely declined.

This happened, by the way, just before Mr. Lowell's celebrated interview with Julia Hawthorne. The facts in the latter case no fellow will ever be able to accurately find out. Here in Boston it was thought, and is still believed, that the interview in question was pretty correctly reported. At the same time, it is not for a moment to be imagined that the ex-Minister to Great Britain made all those scandalous remarks about the fat Prince of Wales, and so forth, with any idea that they were to be published. The most discreet of gentlemen, over his after-dinner port, is apt to relax his habitual caution in speech, but every body has always said that Julian Hawthorne was a gossip. He is forever doing something absurd, and this was only an instance in point.

NEW DYNAMITE GUN.

An Invention Which Works Upon a Well-Known Principle.

A gun without a barrel, which is to be fired without powder or other explosive, and whose discharge is comparatively noiseless, is the curious invention of Walter E. Hicks, of Brooklyn. The principle that this gun involves is the same as that which hurled the stone which killed Goliath. The gun consists of two solid steel wheels placed concentrically side by side, and made to revolve by means of a Westinghouse engine. In the circumference of each wheel are placed two projectiles at equal distances from each other. On either side of this double wheel is a quadrant, which is so arranged that the gunners may by means of it give the desired direction to the missiles. When all is ready he pulls the lanyard, and two shots on opposite sides of the disk are discharged simultaneously. Then, if desired, the lanyard on the opposite side may be pulled and the other two shots released. It is impossible to fire a single shot at a time. Either two or four shots may be discharged at once. The shots may be fired vertically, straight toward the ground, or in any intermediate direction. The apparatus is designed to be placed upon a turntable, so that missiles may be projected in any direction. The especially ingenious part of the invention is the contrivance to release the missile at exactly the proper time. Thus, if it is to be projected horizontally, it must be released at the exact fraction when the part of the wheel where it is confined is upmost. At that instant it may be considered as moving horizontally, and when it is released it will not change its direction, but will fly forward in a tangent to the top of the wheel.

A MIGHTY IMPLEMENT.

The Marvelous Thing Women Can do with a Hair-Pin.

"What I want when I am cast away on a desert island," said a dramatic, as she took a hair-pin out of her head, and bending it into a hook, fished her ring out of the drain pipe with it. "is a whole package of hair-pins! If ever a woman writes a Robinson Crusoe story, she will have a gross of hair-pins instead of a hair-pin. She will use them to build her little cottage with, and to make wire mattresses and baskets, and broilers, and what not; with, and she will execute feats of ingenuity that will leave the Schomburgk-Gotta family out of sight. Of course, it is the order of nature," Andramatic went on, straightening out the small but adaptable implement in her hand, and returning it to her French twist; "of course she ought to have the back of a hair-brush to drive and bend her pins with, but if that would be making her too much at home on the desert island, I dare say she could learn to make a stone do. You think I'm exaggerating the virtues of the little busy hair-pin, don't you? Think your ignorance. If you'd wear 'em awhile you'd learn to button your boots and gloves with them, and make hooks of them to hang your bric-a-brac on, and use them to clean your nails with, and to mend your umbrella, and to file your papers on, and to pick nuts with, all just as a matter of course. No, I didn't say take them out of your hair to pick nuts with, you hateful, mean thing. Of course, you go and get new ones

This March issue of the Eclectic, presents a rich variety of matter. The opening article by John Addington Symonds makes suggestive comparison between Elizabethan and Victorian poetry. Mr. W. T. Knight offers a clear account of M. Godin's experiment in co-operative manufacturing at Guise, Belgium. "The Growth and Decay of Class Distinctions" and "The European Outlook for 1889" are papers of strong interest. H. H. Johnson's humorous paper on "The Ethics of Cannibalism" is marked by a wide scientific knowledge. Mr. Mallock makes a study of "The Scientific Bases of Optimism." Lady Grant Duff contributes a sketch of the late Laurence Oliphant. The article on "The Bismarck Dynasty" is one to excite the widest interest, and no little commotion. Other papers are entitled "The Trade of Antiquity" and "American and English Girls," by J. Acton Lomax. There are a number of short papers and a thrilling story in the best style of Blackwood.

In the March Century the most timely essay is that on the "Rules of the House of Representatives," by Hon. Thomas B. Reed. Another timely essay is Dr. Edward Eggleston's review of James Bryce's work on "The American Commonwealth," entitled "A Full-Length Portrait of the United States." A curious article on "The Use of Oil to Still Waves," by Lieut. W. H. Beecher, of the Office of Naval Intelligence. "The Edict of Freedom" is the title of the Lincoln paper, and completes the story of Emancipation. The frontispiece is a portrait of the Grand Lama of the Trans-Baikal, from a photograph given to George Kennan in exchange for his own. Beginning of "The Last Assembly Ball," by Mrs. Foote; Mr. Edwards, in "The Rival Souls" tells a story in a new vein; and Mr. Jessop, in "The Correspondence of Mr. Miles Grogan," gives a study of the progress of a New York politician from a liquor saloon to a residence in Montreal. The "History of Alix de Morainville" is another "Strange True Story" by Mr. Cable. In Mrs. Foote's "The Choice of Reuben and Gad," "Dutch Painters at Home" by Mr. and Mrs. Harry Chase; "Amateur Theatricals" by Gustav Kobbe, and "Something that Electricity is Doing" by Charles Barnard. A Great Battle.

Is continually going on in the human system. The demon of impure blood strives to gain victory over the constitution, to ruin health, to drag victims to the grave. A good reliable medicine like Hood's Sarsaparilla is the weapon with which to defend one's self, and drive the desperate enemy from the field, and restore peace and bodily health for many years. Try this peculiar medicine.

Work of the Fire Fiends.

The large frame warehouse of L. A. Bushman at the foot of Little Round Top, on the extension of the G. H. Railroad, about two miles from Gettysburg, was totally destroyed by fire, together with its contents on Friday night of last week. A heavy explosion was heard by members of several families close by a few minutes before the fire broke out. Mr. Bushman received no notice of any kind. The building contained at the time together with a lot of wheat, rye and corn, 110 bushels of clover seed and 1000 bushels of oats. An insurance of $2,500 was held on the building and its contents, divided between three different companies.

The citizens of McSherrystown and vicinity are armed, and all strangers entering the place are apprehended and required to give an account of themselves before a magistrate. A watch of twenty-four men was placed at Mr. Dominick Smith's premises, whose barn was to have been burned at four o'clock on Saturday afternoon.

Stackhouse, a Pinkerton detective, who for weeks has been engaged night and day in pursuing the burners. She is only sixteen years old.

Levi Herr was arrested on Wednesday morning, charged with firing his father's barn near McSherrystown last week, after sending himself a notice to remove the contents. The arrest was made upon circumstantial evidence, by constable Smith, assisted by Chief of Police Egger, of Hanover, and Detective Seibold of Baltimore. Herr waived a hearing and was released on $2,000 bail furnished by his father, for the action of the Quarter Sessions Court at Gettysburg.

Maryland Department G. A. R.

The annual meeting of the G. A. R. Department of Maryland at Hagerstown on the 22nd ult., was largely attended by members of the different Posts throughout this State, West Virginia and Pennsylvania, who with the Hagerstown Light Infantry and five fire companies of Hagerstown, paraded the streets and made a fine display. Resolutions were passed concerning the death of Gen. Sheridan and Hunt, and encouraging the Sons of Veterans. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Department commander, Comrade Wheeler, of Post 6; senior vice-commander, Ira Taylor, of Post No. 2, of Frederick; junior vice-commander, Dr. Henry, of Glyndon, Md.; medical director, Dr. Graham, of Post No. 3; chaplain, Rev. A. Allord, of Post 3, Baltimore. Captains W. W. Walker, of Hagerstown, George Cramer and Charles H. Marburg of Baltimore, were elected delegates to the National Encampment. The next annual session will be held in Cumberland on the 21st and 22d of February, 1890.

Another Fire.

The stable on the premises of Mr. Abraham Hahn, about three miles south of this place, between Mott's Station and Mt. St. Mary's College, was destroyed by fire on Monday night. Mr. Hahn was on the lookout and discovered the fire in time to save his stock, but the entire building, which was a small log structure with a shed attached was destroyed, together with all his gears and a lot of feed. Mr. Hahn is a poor man and had no insurance on his property, which makes the loss to him very serious. He was badly burned about the head and face while getting his stock out, and is confined to his bed from the effects of the burns.

About three days before the fire occurred, Mr. Hahn received a notice which stated that his stable, the barns of J. V. Keepers, Henry Hankey, and four others would be burned within ten days. The people of the neighborhood are very much alarmed, and about the time the fire occurred, word was received in town by telephone to apprehend a man who was seen loitering in the neighborhood shortly before the fire broke out. Constable Ashbaugh found the man described at the Emmitt House, where he had engaged to work. When taken before Justice Stokes he gave an account of his doings which was straight enough to warrant his release and relieve him of suspicion.

A Terrible Misfortune.

It is a calamity of the direst kind to feel that one's physical energies are falling in the prime of life—to feel more nervous, more depleted, weaker every day. Yet this is the unhappy lot of hundreds who surround us. A source of renewed strength which science approves, in behalf of which multitudes of the debilitated have and are every day testifying, and which, in countless instances, has built up constitutions sapped by weakness and intensity and long unhealed by other means, surely commends itself to all who need a cure. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is such a medicine—pure, potent, soothing to the nerves, promoting digestion and a fertilizer of the blood. Dyspepsia and nervousness—the first cause of the second—a consequence of lack of nutrition—depart when a course of the Bitters is tried. All forms of malarial disease, indigestion, biliousness and bladder trouble, constipation and biliousness are annihilated by this standard family medicine.

It is said that the directors of the Gettysburg and Harrisburg Railroad are considering the extension of the road from Round-Top to Washington city—the shortest route to the north, being only 90 miles from Harrisburg.—Ex.

If the above is correct our citizens should come to the front at once, and see to it that the road passes through here. This will be in the direct course, and no doubt the Emmitsburg Railroad could be used to advantage towards the promotion of the plan. Now is the time to act, though, don't wait until too late, and as on other occasions within the memory of many, have to sit by and say "it might have been."

A Warning to Incendiaries.

Henry Smith, colored, pleaded guilty of incendiarism in the Circuit Court at Frederick on Tuesday, and was sentenced to three years imprisonment in the State penitentiary. Judge McSherry took occasion to further state that he desired it to be distinctly and emphatically understood that as far as he was concerned he would not hesitate hereafter to impose the death sentence upon persons convicted of setting fire to buildings.

Disfranchisement for Colored.

The Complete disfranchisement of men who have been guilty of the lesser offenses would not be just or expedient. Such men ought to have space for reformation. The first term of their disfranchisement will be brief. Conviction for drunkenness or disorderly conduct might exclude from the polls for one year. More serious misdemeanors might entail a longer disfranchisement. And it would be well to give large discretion to the authorities who grant pardons, and who regulate indeterminate sentences, that they may restore the suffrage more speedily to those whose conduct in prison has been exceptionally good. But we should make sure that every conviction under the criminal law work some temporary forfeiture of political privilege. We should make it plain to the dullest mind that good conduct is the indispensable condition of the possession of the franchise; that those who wish to take part in making the laws must refrain from violating the laws.

Some offenses should be followed, as now, by perpetual disfranchisement. That all "felonies" should incur this penalty is not at all clear; many of those committed to our prisons for crimes of passion may, under proper care, be reformed and rendered useful members of the state. That door should by no means be forever closed against them, nor should the opening of it be left to executive clemency. The felon's record, in prison, should determine whether he may, after a space, be restored to full political privileges. But there is one class of crimes for which the laws of many of our States do not entail any political disabilities, which ought to be punished every where by the final forfeiture of political power. These are the crimes against the suffrage itself—bribery, both in the briber and the bribed, fraudulent voting, the falsifying of returns, and the like. No man convicted of one of these crimes ought ever to be permitted to vote again. Some of the States, with a moral obtuseness on this point which is positively grotesque, provide that a man caught in attempting a crime of this nature shall lose his vote "in that election"! What a sense of the sacredness of the suffrage the men must have had who could frame into a statute such a grinning jibe as that! The man who strikes with a poisoned dagger at the very heart of the Republic—he shall not be allowed to vote "in that election"! Could the force of anti-climax—and of a priori theory—go farther? Such an offender deserves to be banished and forbidden ever again to set foot upon our soil under penalty of death; certainly the lightest punishment that can with justice be meted out to him is perpetual exclusion from the franchise.—Dr. Gladden, in February Century.

The Story of "Annie Laurie." The famous song that is sung by all singers of the present day, I am informed, says a writer of the Chicago Herald, is a mystery to the author. I was raised on the next farm to James Laurie, Annie Laurie's father, and was personally acquainted with her and her father, and also with the author of the song. Knowing these facts I have been requested by my friends to give the public the benefit of my knowledge, which I have consented to do. Annie Laurie was born in 1827, and was about seventeen years old when the incident occurred which gave rise to the song bearing her name. James Laurie, Annie Laurie's father, was a farmer, who lived and owned a very large farm called Troggleston, in Dumfriesshire, Scotland. He hired a great deal of help, and among those that he employed was a man by the name of Wallace to act as foreman, and while in his employ Mr. Wallace fell in love with Annie Laurie, which fact her father soon learned and forthwith discharged him. He went to his home, which was in Maxwellton, and was taken sick the very night he reached there, and the next morning, when Annie Laurie heard of it, she came to his bedside and waited on him until he died, and on his death bed he composed the song entitled "Annie Laurie."

In setting out trees let them lean toward the south. This prevents sun scalding at first. The tree will gradually pull itself back upright. A MAN whose store is in the basement can always sell his goods lower than anybody else.

The publishers of Scribner's Magazine aim to make it the most popular and enterprising of periodicals, while at all times preserving its high literary character. 25,000 new readers have been drawn to it during the past six months by the increased excellence of its contents (notably the Railway articles), and it closes its second year with a new impetus and an assured success. A CORRESPONDENCE and collection of notes relating to the F. Millet and a famous group of modern FRENCH PAINTERS will furnish the substance of several articles.

The brief end papers written last year by Robert Louis Stevenson, will be replaced by equally interesting contributions by different famous authors. Mr. Thomas Bailey Aldrich will write the first of them for the January number.

Many valuable LITERARY ARTICLES will appear; a paper on Walter Scott's Methods of Work, illustrated from original MSS., a second "Shelf of Old Books," by Mrs. James T. Fields, and many other articles equally noteworthy.

Articles on ART SUBJECTS will be continued. Papers are arranged to appear by Clarence Cook, E. H. Blasfield, Austin Dobson, and many others.

FISHING ARTICLES describing sport in the best fishing grounds will appear. Salmon, Winnish, Bass, and Tarpon are the subjects now arranged. The authors are well-known sportsmen.

ILLUSTRATED ARTICLES of great variety, touching upon all manner of subjects, travel, biography, description, etc., will appear, but not of the conventional commonplace sort.
