TO ONE WHO HAS SUFFERED MUCH.

I know, dear friend, your hours are drear and cold; I know your path is harsh with briars and flints; Yet in the darkest day come happy glints Of distant brightness underneath the fold Of blackest cloud, and ever to the bold The roughest road will show the faintest prints Of weary feet. Look up! When morning tints Are in the sky the night grows pale and old.

The longest lane a sad world hath will turn At last, and round the turning, mayhap, waits Some joy to greet you that shall fill your life With bliss past all belief. Not always stern The future, nearer seen. Sometimes the Fates Do smile, and Peace comes surely after strife.

AN ANIMAL ELIXIR.

The Extraordinary Story of How an Old Man Became Young.

One August afternoon in the year 1870 I met at the outskirts of Bernequei, in the San Blas mining regions, not far from the town of Legutiano, a company of villagers who were following the body of a child to the cemetery. The little corpse reclined upon a cushion surrounded by flowers, and, as is customary in that country, was borne upon the head of an old woman. Moved by idle curiosity, I inquired whose child it was.

"Bring them! bring them!" I cried, excitedly.

"I will bring them, but will you read them all, every bit, to us?"

"Yes, friend Gussurandi, all, and will make all as plain as possible."

"So, after supper, a lamp was lighted and placed at my side, and after the men had filled and lighted their pipes and all taken seats around me I unrolled the bundle of papers given me by my host. It was composed of many leaves of different sizes, ages and styles of writing. I arranged them in order, and, with over-increasing astonishment and curiosity to myself as well as my listeners, read the following:

The 20th of August, 1785, completed my eighty-fifth year, and I found myself in the kitchen of my beautiful home, seated at the table with Don Juan Manuel de Ursubil, a famed empiric, a man of great ability and reconidite knowledge, whom I had known intimately from youth. My children and grandchildren, after celebrating the anniversary of my birth, had retired to their homes. The empiric, myself and an old serving-woman who waited upon me were alone in the house. It was one o'clock in the morning; we had smoked thirty-four pipes of tobacco and drunk five jars of cider, and, though at that time I was rugged as an oak tree and of an exceptional constitution, so much smoking and drinking caused my head to spin.

The empiric was even worse than myself. For more than an hour he talked unceasingly of humors, clivicles, systems, plasters and other things of which I understood not a word. I listened silently.

"You do not answer me," he finally said.

"What can I answer?"

"You might say something, man. What are you thinking of?"

"That I am very old and shall not last much longer."

Juan Manuel struck the table with his fist, and, with a loud laugh, exclaimed: "Not much longer—what folly! Why, you can live as long as the fancy strikes you."

"Truly?"

"Surely, I have a secret of everlasting life, but I fear the Inquisition and the priests if they learned of it. I would be taken for a sorcerer and it would go hard with me."

"Juan Manuel, are you telling me the truth?"

"The exact truth. Ah, if I could but find one who did not wish to die."

"You could easily find many."

"You are mistaken. Men are peculiar in their mode of reasoning; they fear death, but they fear more the operation they must undergo to escape death. They would rather die than suffer for a few days."

My brain reeled. This learned man expressed himself with such positive conviction that it already seemed to me that death no longer existed. There was an ineffable satisfaction in the thought.

We drank several more glasses. The old servant was sound asleep, the stocking she had been knitting had fallen from her hands and the cat was playing with the yarn.

"Why do you not make a proof of your theory upon yourself?" I at length asked the empiric.

"What nonsense! How could I operate upon myself when the operation demands all my care, observation and strength?"

We again relapsed into silence. My eighty-five years weighed heavily upon me; a new life appealed to me too strongly to be resisted. I decided, and, rising suddenly, cried, "I do not wish to die! Dispose of me!"

"Done!" answered Juan Manuel rubbing his hands with pleasure; "eight or eighty thousand years hence we will again drink cider in honor of the twentieth of August."

He arose staggering, seized my arm and said: "Let us go."

"Where?"

"To my house. This very night all shall be accomplished."

"Let us go, then." And in my shirt sleeves, just as I was, we set out, unsteadily, reeling and stumbling, toward his house.

On reaching his room Juan Manuel lit a lamp, took off his hat and coat, opened a drawer of a table, from which he took an apparatus composed of wires, bandages, tubes and bulbs, with wooden keys, then rolled up his sleeves, pushed a bed from an adjoining alcove into the centre of the room, placed a large copper kettle beside it on the floor, and turning to me said, smilingly: "Now place yourself at full length on the bed and remain perfectly quiet."

I extinguished my pipe and threw myself upon the bed, stretching myself out as much as possible. The empiric then produced a lancet, and, after feeling my arm, made a broad incision in one of the veins. I heard the plashing of the blood as it fell into the caldron, while Juan Manuel busied himself preparing his strange apparatus.

This must have consumed a-quarter of an hour, when I began to feel horribly weak and faint from loss of blood. All effects of intoxication had disappeared. From time to time the empiric felt my pulse, murmuring as he continued his work: "More; more yet!" I do not know how long a time elapsed, but I suddenly found that I could not move; I was consumed by thirst but could not make an articulate sound; I could only lie there and listen to the monotonous dripping, dripping of the blood as it fell into the caldron. My sense of vision, though, had remained remarkably clear and distinct.

"The empiric again felt my pulse. 'Good!' he exclaimed; 'a little more,' and, finally, 'Enough!' and he remained contemplating me for some time in a species of abstraction. Then he bound up the wound, and taking some small pieces of linen, moistened in water, he introduced them into my mouth, pushing them into my throat, using for this purpose the wooden handle of a spoon. Then he closed my nostrils with pieces of dampened tow.

"So!" he said, when this was accomplished. "We are progressing finely. Now breathing almost imperceptibly, and with the heart barely fluttering, we shall come within a step of death, but that step we will not take."

My condition was now simply indescribable. I seemed to have no body, for only the head retained warmth and life. A terrible oppression weighed upon my breast, my ribs seemed crushed in, and I felt an intense agony in every respiration as I inhaled a little air through the damp cloths. My head seemed burning, and the slow pulsation of my heart reverberated in my ears like the blows of a hammer.

Juan Manuel, after contemplating me for some time, took a deep drink. "It is necessary," he said; "my nerves must be steady."

He then went out and returned in a short time, carrying in his arms one of his grandsons, a beautiful four-year-old child, who appeared wrapped in a profound slumber. He laid the child down beside me and made the sign of the cross over it.

"My plan," he said, communing with himself, "must have occurred to many, but the actual problem is that the regenerating blood shall not come in contact with the air; that it shall pass warm, pure, full of life and throbbing with power from the heart of the child to the almost lifeless old man. The old man loses his blood; there it is in the caldron, weakened and vitiated by the sins and pains of eighty-five years. The child is going to transmit his almost entire life; but it will not matter, for after eight days, the little that will be left will have multiplied, and the child will be as robust as before. Blood is fire; a single drop serves for the base of a life. I know there are doctors in Salamanca and Alcalá who laugh at me, for it is the privilege of men of science to laugh with impunity at others, whether they are right or wrong. But after my friend shall have lived for two thousand years, where, then, will be the doctors of Salamanca?"

He again placed his hand over my heart; it scarcely fluttered and the noise in my ears had died away.

"Now is the time," he exclaimed; "he will feel nothing now."

He then took the strange apparatus from the table and enveloped my neck with its bandages, doing likewise with the child, who still remained without moving at my side. Next, from another vessel he took a dark ointment, with which he smeared the wooden keys of his apparatus and also my neck, all but one side, where, by means of a cupping-glass, he had drawn the flesh into a roll. The bulbs were squeezed together, the tubes in which they terminated adhering firmly to my own and the child's neck. Among the wire constituting the apparatus were two long and strong ones, which the empiric, grasping with both hands, gave a sudden jerk, as if he wished to separate them; as if he wished I felt a sharp pain in the side of my neck and the child gave a terrible start. Then a cloud passed before my eyes, but I could still hear Juan Manuel rubbing his hands with pleasure, murmuring to himself: "It beats, it beats!—after twenty years of thought and study—the air does not enter—the priests and doctors are vanquished!"

On opening my eyes on the following day I found myself stretched upon the same bed. The empiric was beside me. I endeavored to speak, but could not; the empiric placed his finger on his lip and shook his head.

"You now have within your veins," he said, "the revivifying blood of youth. You will begin life anew at the age of four years. What terrible heat! A hundred and eighteen pulsations; the new blood pours through your veins like a torrent in a mill-race. This fever will last for fifteen days, during which time you must take nothing but milk. My little grandson is resting well; in six more days he will have recovered. Ah, my apparatus is a marvel."

At this juncture a knock came at the door, and my old servant, Maria Anton, entered.

"What has become of my master?" she asked.

"Here he is, a little indisposed because in accompanying me home he stumbled and"—

"That accursed cider!"

"No, Maria, it was owing to the darkness. Two of his ribs are displaced, but inside of fifteen days he will be all right."

Maria Anton, thus reassured, departed.

"Poor old woman," mused the empiric; "how many of your grand-daughters will have to wait upon your master?"

For many days the empiric paid me hourly visits, feeling my pulse, giving me milk, and talking to himself. My condition was very peculiar. My whole body was burning with a feverish heat, and I experienced a general trembling, with light pains in the chest, back and ribs on drawing a breath, but felt a sensation of restful satisfaction when the air was expelled from my lungs.

By degrees my strength returned, and at the end of twenty days, accompanied by Juan Manuel, I returned to my own house.

"I believe your life is now assured for another epoch," he said, as we approached my door; "but you must be careful, as it is, of course, exposed the same as before to disease and violent accidents. I have merely lengthened your days by renewing the vital element which sustains life; what you should do is to be silent and watchful."

Some time passed, and my health and strength became enervated, save for that strange, persistent pain in the breast accompanying each respiration. Yet I could never convince myself that Juan Manuel had succeeded in his undertaking, but looked upon the operation as a grave indiscretion, committed while we both were intoxicated, and I expected to die at the usual age of mankind.

Five years later my face was more ruddy, my pulse stronger, my

CHANGE IN DATE OF ISSUE.

With this issue the CHRONICLE appears as a Friday evening paper, instead of Saturday morning, as heretofore. We have been led to make this change in order to better meet the requirements of such legal publications as may be entrusted to its columns. The idea was recently suggested by a friend who is a prominent member of the bar of this county, and we at once decided to adopt it. The CHRONICLE always has been virtually a Friday evening paper, as it is issued on that day, consequently it will make no change in the business of the office.

"SUNSET" COX PASSE AWAY.

Samuel S. Cox, the distinguished Congressman died at 8 o'clock on Tuesday evening, at his residence in New York. Mr. Cox was one of the most popular men in Washington, both in political and social circles. Possessing brilliant talents, indomitable energy and an unshaken moral character, he was one of the few public men that the country can ill afford to lose. Mr. Cox began his career as assistant to his father in the Clerks office at Zanesville, Ohio, and following the ordinary common school education took a regular college course after which he studied law, becoming a successful practitioner and also had some experience as an author, then he embarked in journalism, becoming editor and proprietor of the Columbus Statesman. At thirty-two years of age he was elected to Congress, where he was looked upon as the leader of the Democratic side of the house. Throughout his entire career, as office boy, college student, lawyer, author, statesman and journalist, his name remained unsullied and the peaceful closing of his useful and brilliant life was like the beautiful sunset of which he once wrote so eloquently as to earn the sobriquet of "Sunset" Cox, by which he has become so familiarly known.

FALSEHOODS ABOUT THE HOPKINS UNIVERSITY.

Yesterday's Sun noticed an article in the New York Sun of the day before, headed "The Johns Hopkins University Ruined," the basis and structure of which were supplied by a fallacious and malicious imagination. The article is a tissue of inaccuracies and misrepresentations which no journal with a reputation to lose would publish. As an ingenious invention the story, with its doleful conclusion, is well calculated to amuse. But it seems to have been taken seriously by the New York Herald, the Philadelphia North American and the Boston Transcript—journals that ought to have known better. We assure these contemporaries of ours, and others that sometimes take the New York Sun's cock-and-bull stories for news, that the article of Monday's New York Sun was a blundering mixture of a little fact with a great deal of fiction, false in substance and in the idea it was meant to convey. All that is true about it is that the B. and O. is not at present paying dividends on the 15,000 shares of B. and O. stock the university holds, and that the university's income has been curtailed temporarily to the extent of $150,000 a year. It is utterly false to suggest that the university is without funds, or that its operations have been curtailed. The stoppage of B. and O. dividends is believed here to be a temporary difficulty, the indications being that the road will resume dividends within a year. In the meanwhile the university has other sources of income—to say nothing of tuition fees—in paying securities and properties it owns.—Sun of Sept. 11th.

THE GREAT STORM AT SEA.

Baltimore last night experienced some of the effects of the storm which yesterday raged with so much fury along the New England, New York and New Jersey coasts. Originating some 500 miles off shore in the path of the steamships plying between this country and Europe, the storm's greatest fury will be expended, it is to be feared, upon vessels laden with returning tourists. The havoc wrought at Newport, Coney Island, New York City, Atlantic City and other points along the coast is attributed to huge "tidal waves," but it was due directly to high water, caused by the fierce wind from the northeast. The wind blew the water inland, and at high tide the accumulated flood inundated many localities that have not been under water for years. Coney Island and Atlantic City seem to have been the principal sufferers. Part of Coney Island was washed away and many buildings were demolished. A few wrecks are already reported, and in a few days the number will probably be considerably enlarged. At Norfolk there was a severe northeast gale, and as a consequence the lower sections of the city were submerged. Many vessels sought refuge in Hampton Roads from the storm. Along the Virginia and North Carolina coast the storm was very severe, and the telegraph wires in that direction are down.—Sun of Sept. 11th.

OCEAN CITY, Maryland's leading summer resort, is a wreck. The place is literally flooded, and but for timely warning the inmates of the large hotels and cottages would have been drowned in their beds.

When the guests of the hotels retired on Monday night it was hoped that the fury of the storm had been spent, but soon after midnight they were awakened by the roaring waters, which poured into the lower section of the house. They hurried from their rooms and sought safety, further inland.

By noon on Tuesday not a piece of furniture was left in position, some of it floated out with other wreckage, and much of it was pounded to pieces. Still the water kept encroaching and the residents became alarmed for their safety. Word reached Salisbury of the danger and a special train was sent to the rescue. When the rescuers reached the city the waves had already cut off all retreat from the main land and what was to be done must be done quickly. The plan determined upon was a novel one, but worked to perfection. The rescuers joined hands and spread themselves along, wading through the water up to their necks. In this way they joined those in peril, and the men assisted in bringing the ladies to the train.

THE operations of the United States revenue steamer Rush in Behring sea are becoming the laughing-stock of the press.

Dyspepsia

Makes the liver of many people miserable, and often leads to self-destruction. Distress after eating, sour stomach, sick headache, heartburn, loss of appetite, faint, "all gone" feeling, bad taste, coated tongue, and irregularity of the bowels, are some of the more common symptoms. Dyspepsia does not get well of itself. It requires careful, persistent attention, and a remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which acts gently, yet surely and efficiently. It tones the stomach and other organs, regulates the digestion, creates a good appetite, and by thus overcoming the local symptoms removes the source of the disease, banishes the headache, and refreshes the tired mind. "I have been troubled with dyspepsia. I had but little appetite, and what I did eat I could not digest. In an hour after eating I would experience a faintness, or tired, sickish feeling, as though I had not eaten anything. My tongue was aggravated by my business, which is that of a painter, and from being more or less shut up in a room with fresh paint. Last Spring I took Hood's Sarsaparilla—saw a bottle. It did me an immense amount of good. It gave me an appetite, and my food relished and satisfied the craving I had previously experienced." GEORGE A. PAGE, Watertown, Mass.

Choral Union Incorporated. Articles of incorporation of the Emmitsburg Choral Union have been filed in the Clerk's office at Frederick, with the officers of the Union as incorporators, viz: Rev. W. Simonton, D. D., President; William H. Troxell, Vice-President; Jeremiah O'Donoghue, Secretary; Paul Motter, Treasurer; Dr. J. Kay Wrigley, conductor; Maj. O. A. Horner, Assistant Conductor. It is incorporated to continue for thirty-nine years.

The Best Advertising. The most efficient advertising in behalf of Hood's Sarsaparilla is that which comes from the medicine itself. That is, those who are cured by it, speak to friends suffering similarly, who in turn derive benefit and urge others to try this successful medicine. Thus the circle of its popularity is rapidly widening from this cause alone, and more and more are becoming enthusiastic in behalf of Hood's Sarsaparilla as it actually demonstrates its absolute merit. All that is asked for Hood's Sarsaparilla is that it be given a fair trial. If you need a blood purifier, or building up medicine, try Hood's Sarsaparilla.

In the Pen. A disagreeable and impudent tramp, claiming to have something to sell, appeared in this place on Monday, and after making himself generally disagreeable to everyone he met, seemed determined to create a disturbance on the public square, going to Zacharias's meat shop, and keeping up the fuss until Cochran Rifle who is employed in the establishment named, proceeded to knock the stuffing out of him. This however only served to make him move on further, when Constable Ashbaugh took him in charge and gave him a night's lodging in the "Cooler." Next day he loitered around town until threats of violent expulsion made him decide to leave.

Hess Manufacturing Company. Mr. John G. Hess, of this city, has received a proposition from Mr. N. K. Mead, of Sheffield, Ala., to remove the shops of the Hess Manufacturing Company, now in operation here, to that place. Mr. Mead offers, if the proposition be favorably considered, to furnish ground for buildings, put in $5,000 or more in cash and also suffer the use of machinery already in operation for the manufacture of all the wood work required to turn out a hundred or more carts a day, stipulating only that no more territory or shop rights for the vehicle be sold. The proposal is a tempting one and may result in taking the industry away from Westminster. The Company has now a large number of orders that it cannot fill because of the limited capacity of the works, which cannot be enlarged without an increase of capital. It is to be hoped this difficulty may be remedied and the works retained here. Westminster cannot afford to lose this, or any other, existing manufacturing enterprise; but should rather seek to add to the number.—American Sentinel.

The Ladies Delighted. The pleasant effect and the perfect safety with which ladies may use the liquid fruit laxative, Syrup of Figs, under all conditions make it their favorite remedy. It is pleasing to the eye and to the taste, gentle, yet effective in acting on the kidneys, liver and bowels.

Co. will sell excursion tickets to Columbus at rate of one first-class limited fare for the round trip. Serious Fall. On Friday morning of last week, Mrs. C. F. Rowe fell down the stairs at the residence of her son Mr. V. E. Rowe, a distance of nine steps, striking on her face and side. At the time she had her little granddaughter Grace, S. L. Rowe's daughter in her arms. Mrs. Rowe was severely bruised on her side and head and the baby received an ugly cut on the top of its head. By the skillful treatment of Dr. Wrigley, both are doing well.

Vintage of Grapes for Invalids. The Port Grape wine of New Jersey is the best medical wine in the market, and it is said that the vintage of Alfred Speer far exceeds any other produced. It is heavy in body, rich in flavor, and well adapted for sickly persons and for general family use. It makes new blood and gives color to the pale and sickly. Leading physicians prescribe this wine in their practice, and use it at their own homes. Druggists sell it.

The Great Exposition in Baltimore. The week just closing has been an extraordinary one for Baltimore City which has been crowded to its utmost capacity with eager and excited sight-seers. The elaborate and artistic decorations of stores, dwellings and public buildings throughout the city bear evidence, not only to the good taste of the citizens but also to their interest and enthusiasm in the great demonstration. The Civic Procession on Monday, was a gorgeous display of the talent, energy and industrial achievements of the State.

The floats on which the different industries were represented were wonderful specimens of artistic skill as well as illustrative of the taste, wit and ingenuity of the designers, whilst the historical floats three in number representing "War," "Peace" and "The Star Spangled Banner," were a grand study in themselves, indicative not only of the skill and good taste of the designers, but also of intellectual culture. As all the trades, professions, mercantile occupations, as well as societies were represented, strangers from other states were able to form a very good estimate of the resources as well as the importance of "My Maryland" from Monday's procession alone, which there was ample opportunity to examine at leisure, during their visits to the Exposition Grounds, where the display was something to be proud of and set descriptive powers at defiance.

President Harrison reviewed the parade from the stand corner of Madison and Eutaw streets with the reception committee and Secretaries Windom and Tracy, Adjutant-General Kelton, U. S. A., and Marshal Ramsdell, of the District of Columbia, who arrived at Camden Station at 10:15 A. M. Entering carriages, the party were driven by way of Camden, Hanover, Lombard, South, Baltimore and Eutaw streets to the stand. The President was cheered along the way. He enjoyed the parade very much, but was rather fatigued by its length. When it was over he was escorted to Hotel Rennett, where he lunched with about one hundred gentlemen. From 6 o'clock to 7:30 he held a public reception at the City Hall, and left for Washington at 8 P. M.

On Tuesday the high winds and slight showers were somewhat depressing to spirits of the sightseers as well as the participants in the celebration. There was a parade of the Veteran Firemen, races at the Fair ground, &c., the tournament which was to have come off at 8 o'clock was postponed on account of the rain. Wednesday was occupied with horse and cattle sales, awarding of premiums and races.

Thursday a grand Parade of labor organizations, horse and cattle sales at Pimlico, and Representation of the battle of North Point, Dedication of the new post office and Maryland ball at the Concordia Opera House. Friday was the Military Parade and reviewing of troops by Gov. Jackson, horse and cattle sales and races at Pimlico, and Bombardment of Fort Mifflin. Saturday will wind up the great celebration and the tired workers will gladly rest on their laurels after a week of unprecedented excitement, through which they maintained their position as exponents of the glory, progress and possibilities of the grand old State of Maryland.

Merit Wins. We desire to say to our citizens, that for years we have been selling Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Dr. King's New Life Pills, Bucklen's Arnica Salve and Electric Bitters, and have never handed remedies that sell as well, or that have given such universal satisfaction. We do not hesitate to guarantee them every time, and we stand ready to refund the purchase price, if satisfactory results do not follow their use. These remedies have won their great popularity on their merits all Druggists.

COMMUNICATED. BLUE RIDGE SUMMIT, Pa.—When in Chambersburg last week, it was my fortune to be present at a trial which was a ninth-provoker and a wonder-exciter quite exceeded all others ever before harkened unto. When I state that the defendants in the case were residents of this locality—namely, Mrs. Bloom, her daughter Mary and Mr. E. L. Keyes—it seems almost superfluous to add that the plaintiff was the celebrated Colonel Wm. F. Benchoff of Montana Springs Resort fame. Though the plaintiff well knew that Adam Bloom—the husband of Mrs. Bloom—lived on pleasant terms with his wife, and though he well knew that the daughter had nothing whatsoever to do with the keeping or the maintaining of the Blue Ridge establishment, and though he was well aware of the fact that Keyes was only a boarder in the household, yet he, in his peculiarly inimitable way, proprietary manner and Annias-like method, so impressed the grand jury that this body was compelled to find a true bill against the above mentioned trio for keeping a disreputable house. The result was similar to the termination of all the Colonel's law ventures, he paid the entire costs and the victims of his wrath were speedily acquitted.

A man named Bowers acted for the Colonel and the trio were ably defended by the District Attorney and Mr. W. Rush Gillan. In another case the same Miss Mary Bloom appeared as the plaintiff and Colonel Wm. F. Benchoff, Jr., figured as the defendant. Mr. Gillan being a chivalrous gentleman naturally assisted the young woman; the boy was defended (?) by his father's partner, (a man named Kimmel) and Bowers. Now it was the united object of the Colonel, his partner, the boy and Bowers to make Keyes, who was simply a witness in this case, appear the real culprit, and for this purpose a large number of the inhabitants of this community, regardless of sex, creed, age or reputation—were transported to Chambersburg. It would take a far more graphic pen than I am capable of wielding to even attempt to describe the astonishing and conflicting evidence (if it may so be termed) that was adduced. I frankly and unblushingly confess my inability to perform such a miracle. I sat as in a trance, expecting every moment to see the signed spirits of Ananias and Sapphira bounding into the chamber of justice and demanding, as their right, that the ignominy they had so long borne in flames and in silence should be now transferred to the more deserving. The defendant was found "Not Guilty." In Scotland, "in redden tyme," this finding would have read, "Not Proven." It again seems needless to remark that the entire costs fell to the share of the Colonel, and if report be true, they exceeded in figures far more than the value of many loads of hoop-poles. But you will truthfully say that you see nothing worth-provoking in this. Nevertheless you are upon its very threshold. When the old Colonel had strained every nerve, exhausted every argument and resorted to every means to represent Keyes as a common drunkard, an example of perpetual "maney pochey" (as he expressed it) and as a bad, riotous man, and after his "partner" and the man Bowers had tried every scheme from childlike persuasion to expert hypnotism to influence the witnesses in the same direction, the man Bowers winds up the grandest effort of his life before a jury by characterising Keyes as a "A Young Baltimore dude"!! "O what a falling off was there, my Countrymen!" Now what is a dude? Simply a young man of no worldly experience, whose whole mind is absorbed in his appearance and his apparel. Who is a pet of fashionable boulevardiers rather than the keeper of a rude, disreputable house. In fact an individual who succeeds in preceding fads and fashions and in whom a cigarette and a glass of seltzer water constitute a grand debauch. Now Keyes is over forty years of age. Has seen about every thing worth seeing on this side of the Atlantic. Is hardly ever without a strong pipe in his mouth. Drinks every thing from aqua-fortis to sweet cider with the same reckless abandon that prompted him to wear the same garments into the courtroom at Chambersburg that were worn by him three years previously. He has lived nostentionally in a log cabin for over three years, and the character of his mind was entirely unknown to Bowers; for an old philosopher once wrote: "It is not possible to form an estimate of any man's character of mind from association with him under extraordinary circumstances, yes! remarkably extraordinary circumstances that Keyes and Bowers had associated. So extraordinary in fact that had not Judge Stewart wisely denied Keyes his request to put one question to Bowers, the court room in Chambersburg would have witnessed a scene which exceeded everything ever pictured in the base imaginings of a male prostitute. I have attempted a rough pen portrait of Keyes, if it portrays a dude well and good. But certain writers in the Chambersburg papers blow the "dude" theory to thunder when they speak of Keyes' "dissipated air" and "fast appearance." For the veil of dissipation never so gauzy, if it may be discerned, no trace of dissipation can be detected beneath it. In some of his replies to Bowers, Keyes, accidentally I fancy, made several bull's eyes. If he had been aware of certain facts, he might have indulged in repartee that would have amused some of the many Bowers was trying to impugn his character Keyes might have retorted: "Though I have faced bullets, Mr. Bowers, I am not concerned that I ever ran from any, and my name has been sent to the Senate of the United States for brevets for bravery in action." This would have been true and in those circumstances rather neat. And again, if Keyes had launched into poetry, he might have selected these lines from the Poet of the Sierras: "For what man can have no his bosom. And weep with his forehead rivers. And say: 'This as snow? 'as a blossom? Ah, beware of the snow!' Beware!" But this is digression. After the jury had been informed by Bowers that Keyes was a "dude," Kimmel, "the partner," like "Oliver Twist" wants more. So he rushes into the rescue, and at the same time to the complete annihilation of Benchoff, for he tells the jury that Keyes is a "posy?" Now a posy has two definitions, it motto on a ring and a flower. Now what earthly connection was there or is there between a motto, a flower and the facts that Benchoff and his witnesses had been struggling to establish? Did any one ever see a flower, a carnation, for instance, screaming in a fit of jimmicks? Did any one ever hear of a Marceal Niel bull engaging in a slugging match, or listen to a sweet pond lily swearing at imaginary ring-tailed monkeys? If such persons exist they possibly may have seen "Rats," "Snakes" oaths &c., engraved upon rings. But I say it without fear of contradiction that no representative of that peculiar race was present, Kimmel may have had the ghost of a pun in his brain when he likened Keyes to a posy. Possibly he intended to depict him as one of the "flowers that bloom in the Spring, tra, la," but this he failed to do; so his brilliant effort, like the original flowers that bloom in the spring, had "nothing to do with the case." Consequently as a "dude" and as a "posy," or in other words as a gentleman with a flower in his button-hole, that will reprobate, that rake, that terror of the South Mountain (from a Benchoff standpoint) was permitted to quietly leave the courtroom, with an expression on his homely visage which plainly denoted sadness. And I firmly believe he felt; for the "partner" Kimmel, of whose great ability he had so frequently heard, actually did not dare to ask him one question! Now Colonel Benchoff stated under oath that he was not in the least offended at the slanderous article Keyes wrote about him, so it must follow that he and his "partner" will take no exception to this little tribute to respectation which is indulged in only as a kind of a mental cocktail. Sept. 12th 1889. POTOMAC.
