SPEAK NAE ILL.

Other people have their faults,
And so have you as well;
But all ye chance to see or hear
Ye have no right to tell.

If ye canna speak o' good,
Take care and see and feel
Earth has all too much o' woe,
And not enough o' weal.

Be careful that ye make nae strife,
Wi' meddling tongue and brain;
For ye will find enough to do
If ye but look at hame.

If ye canna speak o' good,
Oh! dinna speak at all;
For there is grief and woe enough
On this terrestrial ball.

If ye should feel like picking flaws,
Ye better go, I ween,
And read the Book that tells ye all
About the mote and beam.

Dinna lend a ready ear
To gossip or to strife,
Or perhaps 'twill make for ye
Nae sunny things of life.

Oh! dinna add to others' woe,
Nor mock it with your mirth;
But give ye kindly sympathy
To suffering ones of earth.

TWO WERE MISSING.

A Clever Thief's Work and How He Was Caught.
From The Detroit Free Press.
CHAPTER I.

One morning about ten o'clock a St. Petersburg money lender and merchant was seated in his shop trying to devise some means of investing a considerable surplus which a creditor had just paid him. At that time the money market was dull and it was with great difficulty that capitalists could keep their funds profitably employed. As he was meditating upon various projects and becoming more and more discontented with the thought of his idle money the carriage of Gen. Gorgoli, driven by his coachman in livery, stopped in front of the shop. The general, one of the handsomest men in St. Petersburg and one of the bravest soldiers in the army, alighted and hurried into the presence of the money lender.

"Can I have a few words with you in private?" asked the general. "Certainly," said the banker. "This way, if you please."

They stepped into the private office of the banker, whereupon the general, without further preliminaries, said:

"I suppose you know who I am—Gen. Gorgoli and superintendent of police."

"Certainly, your excellency," replied the banker. "Well, I need immediately, for a very important affair, the sum of 25,000 roubles. I am too far from the minister of the exchequer to procure it; for a delay will ruin everything. Give me the 25,000 roubles I beg of you; come to-morrow morning to my residence and I will give you the security for them."

"I am delighted for the favor," replied the banker. "I shall be only too happy to accommodate you with this sum, or even more."

"Very well, then loan me thirty thousand."

"Here they are, my lord," he said, counting them out.

"Thanks! To-morrow, then, at nine o'clock, at nine o'clock."

The next morning, according to appointment, the banker presented himself at the house of Gen. Gorgoli, who received him with his usual affability.

The banker, exchanging the compliments of the day, waited for the general to open up the business on which the visitor had come. But instead of doing so, the general was silent and stood in an expectant attitude, now gazing at his caller, now looking out of the window. But hearing nothing from the visitor, he finally said:

"What can I do for you?"

The question greatly embarrassed the banker, but he managed to stammer:

"I have come, sir—"

"I see you have," coldly replied the general.

This intimidated and alarmed the banker. He began to fear that the general was a scoundrel who had levied this large amount of money upon him and which he did not intend to repay. He began to fear the knout, or imprisonment, or banishment to Siberia for his presumption in demanding his own. Nevertheless he could not afford to lose such a sum. He might as well be exiled as lose his fortune. So he boldly said:

"I have come for the money you borrowed yesterday."

"And pray, sir, who are you that dares to accuse me of borrowing money?"

"I am Anton Truvouski, merchant and money-lender, No.—Grand Million street. You came to my place of business yesterday morning. You said that an important official affair called for an immediate loan of 25,000 roubles. I handed you 30,000, which you took away, telling me to call on you this morning for your acknowledgement and ample securities for the loan. I have done so. I do not understand the motive of your denial. You surely do not wish to ruin me."

The general said nothing, but looked hard and cold and stern. The banker grew pale, for he saw in the determined look of the police officer a purpose not to acknowledge the debt, but rather, perhaps, to use his arbitrary power to put his claimant and accuser out of the way. Suddenly the official turned and rang for his servant.

"Order my carriage!" he said. He put on the familiar gray coat with a big collar by which he was so well known in St. Petersburg.

"What was the color of the horse that was in the carriage yesterday?" he asked the merchant.

"It was a chestnut, my lord."

"Have the chestnut harnessed," he said to the servant.

"Repeat your story, if you please, omitting no detail whatever."

The merchant went carefully over it again.

"Your carriage is ready, your excellency," said the servant, entering.

"I will ask you to remain here until I return," said the general to the merchant. Quitting the room, descending the stairs to the street and getting into his drowsy driver, he drove away.

The suspense of the merchant was terrible. He sat down but in half a minute rose again; walked the room; looked out the window; sat in another chair; once more got up; went to the door; looked out; saw no one, heard no one; but kept hoping, wishing for a solution to this mysterious affair. Should the police officer keep the money and not even accuse the banker of blackmail or attempted extortion—there was only a life of toil, poverty and disgrace before him.

In his desperation he began even to contemplate it. He involuntarily looked around the room to see if there was anything valuable or a place for concealing anything valuable which he might lay hands on by way of restitution. It was a bare official apartment with ordinary chairs, a long table and a writing cabinet furnished with drawers and pigeon holes. He stealthily approached it and carefully opened the drawers. Two of the twelve were locked. The rest contained only official papers and documents. He had several of his own keys in his pockets. He tried them one after another in the drawers. One of them turned the lock in the upper drawer. It too was full of papers. He took two or three of them up and looked at them. They were reports of various cases that had come under the supervision of the police general. One of them was indorsed the name of the richest nobleman in the empire. A sudden but base thought struck the desperate merchant; he would read it and by means of the information extort money from the nabob compromised in it. But he hesitated; he fumbled the little package, began opening it, then stopped and tried to peer into its folds. Suddenly the stopping of a carriage in the street below arrested him. It might be the general. A door below jarred. He thrust the papers into the drawer, and had barely time to lock it again and seat himself at the window when the police general, striding at a hot pace, entered the room.

CHAPTER II.
In those days a line of sentinels was established at the corners of all the principal streets, who formed a part of the police force of the city. On leaving his house Gorgoli ordered himself driven to the block in which the jeweler's shop was situated. Stopping at the nearest sentinel's box, he said to him: "I passed here yesterday morning at 10:30 o'clock. Did you see me?"

"Yes, your excellency."

"Where did I go?"

"Over to the Troitski (Trinity) bridge."

The general was driven to the bridge. At its entrance he said to the sentinel:

"I passed here at twenty minutes to eleven yesterday morning. Did you see us?"

"I did, your excellency."

"Where did I go from here?"

"Your excellency drove across the bridge."

He drove across the bridge and stopped in front of the "Hermitage" of Peter the Great. The sentinel at once stepped out of his box.

"I passed here yesterday morning at a little before eleven o'clock. Did you notice the way I took?"

"You went to the Viborg quarter, your excellency."

Gen. Gorgoli continued his catechizing of the sentinels from point to point, street to street, neighborhood to neighborhood, across bridges and along the wide avenues. At the last of the row of shops on the Grand Perspective he said to one of them:

"You saw me pass here at half past eleven yesterday morning. Did you notice where I drove?"

"Yes, your excellency, to No. 18 on the corner of the Canal Catherine."

"Did I go in there?"

"Yes."

"And come out again?"

"I did not see you."

"Very well. Have yourself relieved by one of your comrades and bring two soldiers from the nearest barracks."

"Yes, your excellency."

The sentinel hurried away and in ten minutes returned with the soldiers. Accompanied by them the general presented himself at No. 18, closed all the outside doors, cross-examined the porter, ascended the stairs and without ceremony burst open the door of the front room. As he entered he came face to face with the inmate who, but for his hair, which was dark, might have been the twin brother of the police general. After one glance around the room, he said to the lodger:

"Your name is—?"

"Yes," stammered the man.

"Yesterday at ten o'clock you entered the shop, No.—Grand Million. You wore a yellow curled wig resembling my hair; you had on a gray coat with a heavy collar like mine; you drove up in a carriage like mine, with a chestnut colored horse like mine. In fact you pretended to be Gorgoli, chief of police, and in my name to borrow 30,000 roubles for which I was to give security. You drove away, through many streets, across several bridges, back and forth until you arrive at this house. You are a notorious thief and pickpocket, who cunningly took advantage of your accidental resemblance to me, to rob the banker of a good portion of his fortune. You have it here. Hand it over! Give me that yellow wig which I see sticking out from under the gray coat which yesterday formed a part of your disguise!"

Perceiving that he had been effectually entrapped the thief went to a closet behind the chimney and took down the bag of gold, which he handed to the chief of police, saying: "I have spent two."

Gorgoli counted them, found them correct, handed the culprit over to the police, who carried him off to prison, while the general hastened back to his house. To the immense and natural delight of the banker, who had himself just come so near being tempted by his losses into the commission of a crime, he passed out to him the familiar canvas bag. With a cry of joy and astonishment at its restoration the banker seized it, but was so overcome by his feelings that he stared helplessly at the police of ficial, asking for an explanation.

"Count them!" said the general, turning to his table and beginning to write.

The merchant eagerly undid the strings of the bag and feverishly emptied its contents upon the table. He began counting them, putting them back into the bag as he did so. At last he said:

"Two roubles are missing."

"That is strange."

"What is strange? That there should be so few gone?"

"Neither. But that the thief should tell the exact truth. They seldom do. He said he had spent two."

"Then you have captured him?"

"He is now in prison."

"How did you get him so quickly? It is hardly an hour since you departed."

The general told him.

ABOUT a year ago the Atlanta Constitution described a singular phenomenon observed in the neighborhood of Tallulah, Ga., where several acres of mountain land are gradually sliding down hill at so moderate a rate of speed that the progress of the movement can be ascertained only at the end of a month, in the course of which time trees and bushes are carried a few feet beyond a given point in the immovable rock. A very similar anomaly is now reported from Immenstadt, in the Bavarian Alps, where a whole mountain slope—woods, farmsteads and all—is slowly but steadily sliding valleyward.

The supposed cause of the strange migration is the obstruction of some highland brook, which now filters through a stratum of gravel and thus undermines the basis of the imperiled district. Several hundred acres of ground, formerly known as the "Trimberg woods," have actually toppled over the steep banks of a ravine, which has since become the bed of an ever-enlarging highland lake. The influence of analogous agencies may explain the present appearance of the southern Apennines, which once were clothed with magnificent forest, but which now for scores of miles are as bare as the skull of a Mormon elder.

A DISAPPOINTED fish peddler was laboring his slow but patient horse in a street in Georgetown, D. C., the other day, and calling out his wares at intervals, as "Herrin, herrin, fresh herrin." A tender-hearted lady, seeing the act of cruelty to the horse, called out sternly from an upper window: "Have you no mercy?" "No mum," was the reply; "notbin' but herrin."

THOMAS CARLYLE was much annoyed by some Cochon China fowls, kept by a lady who lived near him, and sent word of complaint to her. "Why," she said, "the fowls only crow four times a day, and how can Mr. Carlyle be so much annoyed at that?" "The lady forgets," was his rejoinder, "the pain I suffer in waiting for those four crows."

Feeding Corn.
Corn should not be fed to fowls until the winter, as it is too rich in carbon for this season, and cause the hens to become over-fat. It is deficient in egg-producing elements, and when fed in winter it should be fed in connection with some other food as a variety.—American Farmer.

"I've a pressing duty to perform," said the flat-iron to the shirt. "Nevertheless we shall remain friends; there has always been a warm feeling between us," replied the shirt.

WE SHOULD BE READY.

The sudden change in the weather this week suggests the necessity of preparing for winter which is coming so rapidly upon us that we feel like protesting against the injustice which cuts us off without a shadow of warning from the bright and lovely summer which seemed so loth to leave us, notwithstanding our ungrateful complaints of excessive heat.

But that is over now, summer is gone and it behooves us to prepare for the approaching winter, which, according to the theories of weather scientists, is to be unusually long and severe. The beautiful supply of grain, fruits and vegetables which the past season has provided will enable us to stand a pretty long siege of winter's forces and help to lighten the trials of which most of us are subjected under his icy rule. Yet still there is much to do in the way of preparation for the indoor life of the long winter months.

In summer, when doors and windows are open, when fresh air and sunshine, fruits and flowers and pleasant outdoor amusements minister so largely to the happiness of young and old, we are apt to forget the responsibility resting upon us, as workers, in a working world, and the hours, days and weeks slip by without much being accomplished either in the way of labor or improvement. But the summer has not been wasted, if its happy, restful hours, have given us renewed strength and energy to meet the stern realities of life which confront us all when we take up our burdens once more and realize that there is work for us to do, and that the pleasures which are to brighten our lives throughout the dreary winter, depend mainly on our own resources.

If we do what we can to brighten our own home life and use what influence we can command to help others in their efforts to secure a larger measure of sunshine in their hearts and homes, we shall find the winter anything but dreary, however cold and stormy it may prove, and our burdens whether of labor or responsibility will never be beyond our strength.

JUDGE'S DISCRETION IN DIVORCE CASES.

A correspondent, in referring to the recent editorial in the Sun concerning the divorce law of South Carolina, which prohibits the guilty party from contracting marriage with any other person during the lifetime of the other party, suggests that the same law prevails in Maryland. He refers to the case of Josiah Elliott vs. Elen Elliott, reported in 28th Maryland, in support of his view. The case in question was an appeal from the Circuit Court of Anne Arundel County. The parties were colored. They were married in February, 1871, and divorced on June 21, 1872, the court decreeing under the act of 1872, chapter 272, that the husband, the guilty party, should not contract marriage with any other woman during the lifetime of the wife. The act giving the court discretionary power to prohibit the marriage of the guilty party was passed on the 1st of April, 1872, and went into effect one month later. It was contended that the act was unconstitutional because ex post facto. The only question presented by the appeal was whether the act applied to the case in question, and the court decided that it did. Chief Judge Bartol delivered the opinion. It was held that the act applied to all cases where an absolute divorce for the causes mentioned should be decreed after the act went into effect, and as the act went into effect prior to the passage of the decree, the case was clearly within the operation of the act; that the act was not ex post facto; and that an act of Assembly is not invalid merely because it is retrospective in its terms or is made applicable to pre-existing or pending cases.—Baltimore Sun.

There will be a new department added to the Agricultural Fair this year to be known as the Public School department. Premiums will be awarded pupils for map drawings of the United States, Maryland, North America, South America, Europe, Asia and Africa; also for best specimens of writing by pupils in the 1st, 2nd, 3rd, 4th, 5th, 6th and 7th grades; also for best specimens of free hand drawing, instrumental drawings and miscellaneous articles of penmanship. We have reason to believe that the teachers and pupils in the public schools of the county are taking much interest in the matter and will do their very best to make a creditable exhibit in this department. Many of the pupils have already sent their work to the school commissioners office at the Court House, for the purpose of being properly put up for exhibition in the allotted room on the grounds just before opening the Fair.—Citizen.

Since our last issue two very important events have taken place in our county. Last Saturday the Republicans held a nominating convention at Frederick and on Tuesday the Democrats held a like meeting. At these meetings the tickets for this fall's election were formed, and each side is sure that its ticket is the strongest. The ticket is an exceedingly long one and the work of the conventions covered considerable time. We present both tickets in full in another column.

The opposition to the removal of the Lutheran Theological Seminary from Gettysburg is gaining strength, and it is very likely that it will remain where it is. An offer of $20,000 for new buildings is reported, provided the same be erected at Gettysburg.

BOULANGER'S DEATH.

The Once Noted Military Chieflain Dies His Own Life.

BRUSSELS, Oct. 1.—General Boulanger committed suicide yesterday on the tomb of Mme. de Bonnemain, who died recently in the city. The general stood alone by the grave of his mistress for some time, appearing to be deeply affected by sorrowful recollections. An attendant, who had respectfully remained at some distance from Mme. de Bonnemain's tomb, suddenly heard a sharp report in that direction. Running to the spot he found General Boulanger lying dead upon the ground with a revolver clinched in his right hand. A hasty examination of the body showed that the dead man had placed the weapon to his right ear and fired the fatal shot. The affair has naturally caused great excitement in this city and some commotion among the general's followers in Paris. The police and the dead man's friends here have taken possession of his lodgings.

The general's position, financial and political, has, it is generally admitted, been getting blacker and blacker of recent months. He had no hopes for the future, and his remaining friends were few and far between. The once famous general dropped more and more out of public notice. There is no doubt that the general was conscious of these facts and that they preyed upon his mind. Coupled to this was the insidious infiltration which he had for his dead mistress. The body of the dead man was taken to his late residence in this city, after permission from the proper authorities had been given for that purpose.

When the body was examined after the suicide a photograph of Mme. Bonnemain was found under his clothing, next to the heart, stained with blood from the wound. No documents were on the body. The remains lie in a room sumptuously furnished, draped with blue silk, and adorned with a large portrait of himself, his daughter and Mme. Bonnemain.

PARIS, Oct. 1.—The suicide of General Boulanger has caused a tremendous sensation here. The obituaries in the newspapers do not reflect upon his political career, except that in Le Journal des Debats, which says: "General Boulanger knew the intoxication of the wildest and noisiest popularity. It was Boulanger who said that the weakness of one too often influenced the decision of another. His end fully justifies that dictum. He is a man who would have survived her who sacrificed herself for him."

General Boulanger left a will and a political testament in his desk. It is stated that in the latter he enjoins upon his friends to prosecute the great assassin he had in view. He ascribes his death solely to grief for the death of Madame Bonnemain.

HIS RISE AND FALL.

Life Sketch of the Man Who Led the "Revenge" Party.

General Georges Boulanger was born at Rennes, France, in 1837, and his boyhood days were divided between that town and his mother's home in England. His father was a wealthy French lawyer. His first school was at Nantes, and in 1855 his father sent him to the military school at St. Germain. After hard study, he was graduated with honors. He then joined the First Algerian lightshooteers.

He saw service in Algeria and in Cochin-China. Then, being transferred, he was desperately wounded at Solferino, Italy. He had so distinguished himself in the campaign that he was again and again decorated and promoted in the Legion. About this time he married his cousin. In 1881 he visited the United States at the head of the French officers attending the Yorktown celebration.

General Boulanger's political career began when he entered the De Freycinet cabinet and was made minister of war. His policy was energy and reform, and he pushed forward preparations to secure his country's revenge on Germany. On the fall of the Freycinet ministry he was elected a deputy in the Chamber of Deputies, and he was elected a member of the chamber for the department of the north by 17,000 votes against 9,000 for his opponent. He made frequent demonstrations against the government in the Chamber of Deputies, calling him "an impudent liar," and a "duel was fought, the general being severely wounded in the neck. It was at this period of his career that General Boulanger was the ideal of a certain section of the French people, which popularity was greatly enhanced by the famous "Journee de Marche."

Then came the turn of the tide; the 20th of general was charged with appropriating $100,000 of public money for his own use, and he eventually fled to Brussels. This seemed to be the beginning of the end for what had seemed a dangerous and brilliant career. The adherents of "the brave general" gradually developed off, and the weakened general took refuge in the hands of the police. Since then he has been back to Paris, but having no political prestige, present or promised, he has for the past year disappeared from the political horizon.

Mme. de Bonnemain has been known as the mistress of Boulanger. She accompanied him to England after his flight from France, and early in July last she was discovered in Brussels, suffering from consumption. She died during the evening of the 29th of September. Mme. de Bonnemain, at the height of General Boulanger's career, two or three years ago, lived in the Rue de Valenciennes, in this place, by the name of Mrs. Simonet. D. M. Samuel R. Welty of Emmitsburg District, to Miss Emma A. Eckard of Taneytown.

HOPKINS—ORDORFF.—On October 1, 1891, at Mt. St. Mary's College, Mr. Walter J. Hofford to Miss Emily F. Ordorff, both of this vicinity.

All metal, tough and seamless, and made in three pieces only, it is absolutely safe and unbreakable. Like Aladdin's oil, it is indeed a "wonderful lamp," for its marvelous light is purer and brighter than gas light, softer than electric light and more cheerful than either.

DIED.

ADAMS.—On Sept. 23, 1891, at the residence of his parents in Baltimore, James Bernard Adams, aged 15 months, son of James A. and Etta Adams.

King of Medicines

Scrupulous Tumor—A Cure "Almost Miraculous." "When I was 14 years of age I had a severe attack of rheumatism, and after I recovered had to go on crutches. A year later, scrofula, in the form of white swellings, appeared on various parts of my body, and for 11 years I was an invalid, being confined to my bed years. In that time ten or eleven sores appeared and broke, causing me great pain and suffering. I feared I never should get well.

"Early in 1881 I went to Chicago to visit a sister, but was confined to my bed most of the time I was there. In July I read a book, 'A Day with a Cure,' in which were statements of cures by Hood's Sarsaparilla. I was so impressed with the success of this medicine that I decided to try it. To my great gratification the sores soon decreased, and I began to feel better and in a short time I was up and out of doors. I continued to take Hood's Sarsaparilla for about a year, having used six bottles. I had become so fully released from the disease that I went to work for the Flint & Walling Mfg. Co., and since then

HAVE NOT LOST A SINGLE DAY on account of sickness. I believe the disease is expelled from my system. I always feel well, am in good spirits and have a good appetite. I am now 27 years of age and can walk as well as any one, except that one limb is a little shorter than the other, owing to the loss of bone, and the sores remain on my right leg. To my friends my recovery seems almost miraculous, and I think Hood's Sarsaparilla is the King of Medicines." WILLIAM A. LEHR, 9 N. Railroad St., Kendallville, Ind.

English a tract of land two miles west of Fairfield station on the B. & O. Div. of the W. M. R. R., and another on private terms, which will be reported in full later. The Agency is also negotiating an exchange of country for city property in two cases. A supplementary list of properties will be printed in about ten days.—Clarion.

Two Freight Wrecks. Two freight trains on the Western Maryland railroad were in collision and wrecked at Timber Grove near Baltimore on Saturday night. The cause is attributed to neglect of orders by a local freight on the main line which crashed into the night freight from Gettysburg. Both engines were demolished and a number of freight cars broken up. B. Frank Myers of Gettysburg a brakeman on the train from that place was severely bruised and Michael Murphy, conductor on the other train was considerably injured. A similar accident occurred Wednesday night of last week, but no one was seriously injured.

Died Alive. Two dogs were missed from the farm of Mr. John Geis, near this place, last week. Two days after their disappearance, as Mr. James Geis was walking across a corn field, his attention was attracted by a noise under the ground, near his feet. Listening closer he was able to distinguish the faint whine of a dog. Mr. G. got a mattock and dug a hole just at the spot, from which both the dogs were rescued alive after being buried two days. An investigation showed that the animals had burrowed into a musk rat hole, the larger one going first, thus loosening the ground and causing it to cave in. Our authority for the above is beyond suspicion.

October Registration. The registration officers of the various districts throughout the county will hold their October sittings on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, the 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, and 9th inst., and on Monday the 10th. The first four days will be devoted to the registering of all such applicants who are entitled to vote and striking from the lists the names of all persons who may be known or proven to be dead or disqualified. On the fifth day the names of those to whom notices were sent at the September sitting will be struck from the list. The last day (the 10th) is known as the "appeal day," and will be devoted to the hearing of applications for reinstatement of those whose names have been stricken off. Voters should bear in mind that no person can be registered after the fourth day.

Serious Danger. Threatens every man, woman or child living in a region of country where fever and ague is prevalent, since the germs of malarial disease are inhaled from the air and are swallowed from the water of such a region. Medicinal safeguard is absolutely necessary to nullify this danger. As a means of fortifying and acclimating the system so as to be able to resist the malarial poison, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is incomparably the best and the most popular. It regularizes the stomach, liver and bowels, encourages malaria; but these are speedily rectified by the Bitters. The functions of digestion and secretion are assisted by its use, and a vigorous as well as regular condition of the system is maintained. Consultation and prescriptions thus defended against the inroads of malaria by this matchless preventive, which is also a certain and thorough remedy in the worst cases of intermittent and remittent fevers.

The Frederick Fair.

On Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, Oct. 13, 14, 15, and 16, the annual County Fair will be held at Frederick. Never in the history of its existence has the Agricultural Society made greater efforts to secure special attractions for its exhibition, and a perusal of their adv. in another column will show that the efforts have been crowned with success. For the first time in this section go to this Fair, which is connected with the Middle States Trotting Association. Lawrence Bill's Wild West show will give daily exhibitions, and it alone is worth a trip to Frederick to see, to say nothing of the other interesting features.

A Reminiscence of the War. Recently, while Miss Frank Winter of this place was overlooking some of her childhood's treasures, she came across an old testament which she remembered having found on the site of a soldiers camp, near here, during the war, after the soldiers had vacated it for the field of Gettysburg. On examining the book her eyes fell on the name "Samuel Wolcott, Griffins Mills, Erie County, N. Y.," and Miss Winter decided to write to the address thinking that the owner would possibly like to recover the book. A few days ago she received a reply from Mrs. Weaden, of Clifton, N. J., stating that she was a sister of the soldier whose name was in the book, and the only living member of a large family. She said her brother had returned home from the army in 1863, and died in 1864, and that Miss W.'s letter had been forwarded to her, as his nearest kin. Mrs. Weaden seemed much pleased at the idea of recovering this long lost memento of her dead brother, and Miss Winter sent the testament to her by mail on Wednesday.

Fair Closed. A large and enthusiastic audience greeted the Koehenbach-Lansinger-Hoppe combination at the concert in the Mt. St. Mary's Catholic Benevolent Association's Hall Wednesday evening. Besides the surrounding county, Emmitsburg was well represented and Mechanicstown sent a quota of lovers of music to swell the crowd that eagerly gathered to hear the excellent music of these celebrated performers. The hall was crowded to its utmost capacity and the performance was up to the standard of excellence established by the talented artists who rendered it. That everyone present was highly pleased is putting the case rather mildly, for every performance of this combination adds to its popularity. On this occasion new selections were rendered, and the music which was of a high order was fully appreciated by a critical audience. This performance wound up the fair, which for a week past has engaged the attention of the community and which was throughout a brilliant success. The managers are to be congratulated upon the result of their efficient work, in making this the most successful of the many fairs and entertainments given by the Association. It is impossible to give a correct report of the financial result at this time, but we are assured that it is satisfactory to all concerned.

The barn of the Antietam paper mill, near Hagerstown, belonging to J. W. Stonebraker, was destroyed by fire on Saturday, with forty tons of hay and valuable agricultural machinery, but no horses or live stock. One of the fire engines from Hagerstown was taken out and used to prevent the fire from spreading to the mills, which are close by. Hesson's meat house was raided and its contents carried off, and one of the farmer's barn a bag of corn was taken, and the thief borrowed a horse from the owner's stable with which to carry it away.

J., and addressed to "William Gout, Esquire, near the printing office, or in the care of the office of the newspaper men, opposite the Sparrow's Hotel, Middletown, Frederick county, Md.," was received here on Tuesday.
