A NATURE PRAYER.

BY MARIE S. OWYNS.

I.
O, birds that sing such thankful psalms,
Rebeking human fretting,
Teach us your secret of content,
Your science of forgetting;
For every life must have its illa,
You, too, have hours of sorrow,
Teach us, like you, to lay them by,
And sing again to-morrow;
For gems of darkest jet may lie
At every golden setting,
And he is wise who understands
The science of forgetting.

II.
O, palms, that bow before the gale
Until its peaceful ending,
Teach us your yielding linked with strength,
Your graceful art of bending;
For every tree must meet the gale,
Each heart encounters sorrow,
Teach us, like you, to bow, that we
May stand erect to-morrow,
For there is strength in humb' grace,
It's wise disciples, shielding,
And he is wise who understands
The happy art of yielding.

III.
O, brooks, which laugh all night, all day,
With voice of sweet seduction,
Teach us your art of laughing still
At every new obstruction,
For every life has eddies deep
And rapids fitly dashing,
Sometimes through gloomy caverns forced,
Sometimes in sunlight flashing;
Yet there is wisdom in your way,
Your laughing waves and wimplies,
Teach us your gospel of content,
The secret of your dimples.

IV.
O, trees, that stand in forest ranks,
Tall, strong, erect and slightly,
Your branches arched in noble grace,
Your leaflets laughing lightly,
Teach us your firm and quiet strength,
Your secret of extraction
From slimy darkness in the soil,
The grace of life and action;
For they are rich who understand
The secret of combining
The good that's hidden deep in earth
With that where suns are shining.

V.
O, myriad forms of earth and air,
Of lake and sea and river,
Which make our landscapes glad and fair
To glorify the Giver,
Teach us to leave the lessons hid
In each familiar feature,
The mystery which still perplexes
Each low or lofty creature,
For God is good, and life is sweet,
And suns are brightly shining
To glad the gloom and thus rebuke
The folly of repining.

VI.
Each night is followed by the day,
Each day by fairer weather,
While all the works of nature sing
Their psalms of joy together,
Then learn, oh, heart, the song of hope;
Cease, soul, thy thankless sorrow,
For, though the clouds be dark to-day,
The sun shall shine to-morrow.
Learn well from bird, and tree and rill,
The sin of dark resentment,
And know the greatest gift of God
Is faith and sweet contentment.

A WAR EPISODE.

The Story of a Young Soldier's First Battle.

BY D. B. WAGNER.

One night at the theatre, several years ago, I saw a military play, called if I remember aright, "The Siege of Lucknow." It was a stirring piece, full of the pomp and circumstance of war—marching troops, brass bands, dashing officers, deadly conflicts and all. One scene in the play made a deep impression on me. It represented a room in a house in Lucknow at the moment that the Sepoys began their attack on the place. The only persons in the room were a young British officer and an old woman, a sort of family servant, who had been the young man's nurse.

The officer was a mere stripling, but he belonged to a family of the Scottish nobility, and held a commission in the army. He had come out from England to India with his regiment, but had never seen active service. Of course, therefore, he had never "smelt gunpowder," nor received that "baptism of fire" of which Louis Napoleon spoke when he sent to Paris that memorable dispatch about the gallant young Prince Imperial.

The scene between the boy and his nurse was a very thrilling one. Outside might be heard the booming of guns and the din and turmoil of a hotly-contested battle. Inside was the disgraceful picture of a young man, the scion of a noble house, the descendant of a long line of gallant soldiers, overcome by abject cowardice and crying like a panic-stricken girl at the idea of bucking on his sword and joining his comrades where the flame of battle burned.

The old nurse, full of love for the boy that she had brought up, but equally full of shame for his weakness, pleaded with him to master his unmanly feelings and show himself a worthy member of his illustrious family. Nor was she more ashamed of the young man than he was of himself. His better self wrestled with his weaker, and he tried with all his soul to rouse it to a sense of what was demanded of it.

Finally the man conquered, and the young officer, full of a high exaltation of the born soldier now, went forth to join his regiment and share with it the perils of the fight. A later scene showed the battle raging on the stage, and this same young officer was leading his men to the charge as gallantly as did the "Little Corporal" at the Bridge of Lodi.

What was it that made the young fellow behave like a frightened school-girl at the sound of the guns?

Several cases of this kind came under my own observation during the late civil war, and it is to tell you about one of them that this story is written. There was a boy in the company of which I was the captain, who had to get the consent of his parents to enlist, for he was only 16 years old. He was a strong, sturdy fellow, full of life and spirit, obedient, intelligent and faithful in the performance of his duty.

I noticed him often, chiefly because he was the youngest member of the company, but also because he evinced great aptitude in learning the duties of a soldier. He seemed to take a positive interest in everything connected with camp life, and I frequently told myself that Johnny Bates, as he was called, would soon win promotion and distinction.

One night this little idol was shattered into a thousand fragments. We had been ordered to the field, but had not yet had an engagement with the enemy. A soldier's first battle is a trying episode in his life. I believe that seventy five men out of every hundred would turn and run at the first volley from the enemy were it not for the moral support given by the presence of their companions.

But Johnny Bates gave way before his first battle came. Our regiment was encamped well towards the front of our line and we knew that the enemy was not far off. In fact, we were gradually approaching each other and a great battle could not be delayed much longer.

About 12 o'clock one night the long roll was sounded and our regiment was roused and soon formed into line of battle, where we were to await further orders. A sentinel on one of the outposts had fired his gun and we thought the enemy was upon us.

"That was my first experience of the kind, too, and I shall never forget the strange feelings that came over me. I never recall that hour without thinking of what Governor Vance, of North Carolina, said one day on a battlefield. During a lull in the firing and while the Federals and Confederates were facing each other, ready to go at it again, a poor little rabbit, frightened out of its resting place by this horrible din on its native heath, rushed at top speed down between the two lines seeking a quieter and safer spot.

Governor Vance—he is Senator Vance now—saw the little creature, and, while a peculiar smile broke over his face, he said:
"Run, Molly Cottontail; I'd run, too, if I were not Governor of North Carolina."

Well, there we stood in the darkness and silence, not a man daring to speak, waiting for the expected order to march to the night attack. Here and there, down the line, I heard a man cough, but no other sound broke the stillness.

Suddenly, right behind me, I caught the sound of a boyish voice whimpering and crying. Amazed beyond expressing I turned and saw Johnny Bates. He was crying like a big baby. When I sternly ordered him to stop he burst out worse than ever, apparently overcome by uncontrollable fear. He begged me most pitifully to allow him to leave the line, claiming that he could not possibly stay there; that he was ill, weak, trembling like a leaf and utterly unable to perform his duty as a soldier.

It never occurred to me to pity the boy; on the contrary, I blazed out at him with all the vigor of a man fairly beside himself with indignation and anger. I told him that if he did not stop his blubbering instantly I would have him shot like a cowardly puppy. That threat, or my manner, perhaps both, had the effect of quieting him. In half an hour or so word came that the alarm was false, and we were ordered back to our quarters.

The next day I sent for Bates to come to my tent. When he entered his face was full of shame and repentance. That softened me somewhat and I determined to lead him on to a frank expression of his feelings. Let it be sufficient to say that fear of the expected battle had wholly unmanned him and turned him into a baby. He did not believe that he was a coward, but he had found it utterly impossible to subdue his fear as he stood there in the darkness waiting for the fire of the enemy's guns.

I really felt sorry for the boy, but for the sake of discipline I had to punish him, and I did so in the presence of the company. I don't mean that I thrashed him as a school teacher does a refractory pupil, but I imposed a task that carried some degree of ignominy with it.

Johnny's companions turned a cold shoulder on him after that, for no man respects a coward. But the boy went on performing his duties as faithfully and zealously as if nothing had happened. Indeed, I think he showed even more zeal than he had shown before. I had come, as a result of the peculiar circumstances of the case, to take a decided personal interest in the

ODDS AND ENDS.

She could swing a six pound dumb-bell; She could fence and she could box; She could row upon the river; She could clamber 'mong the rocks; She could do some heavy blowing, And play tennis all day long; But she couldn't help her mother, 'Cause she wasn't very strong.

"Can February March?" asked the punster, with a sickly smile.
"Perhaps not," replied the quiet man, "but April May."

He—Well, if you won't tell your age, I'll ask your father.
She—He won't give me away.
He—I only want your age.

Boodle—Of course there will be a great concourse of fair women at the Chicago Fair, but it is conceded that Philadelphia will send the bell.—New Haven Union.

The man who sat out on the wood-pile and told funny stories, expecting the wood would split, evidently did not strike a "responsive chord."—Yonkers Statesman.

Said a lady to the famous actor Garrick: "What a pity it is you are not taller." "Madam," replied the wit, "I should only be too happy to stand higher in your estimation."

"I mailed a postal card to day and forgot to address it. I'm very absent minded."
"So am I. Yesterday I mailed a Columbian stamp without putting the letter on it."

Mr. Wickwire.—What is that woman across the way trying to sing?
Mrs. Wickwire.—My Sweetheart's the Man's in the Moon.
Mr. Wickwire.—Well, if she don't hear it isn't her fault.

Wayside Communion.—You say you would live off in the fat of the land," jeered Walkabout Beggs. "How d'ye eat it?"
"Eit it with the forks of the road," responded Rusty Rufus.

"See that ragged fellow over there. Well some years ago I saw him in his own carriage."
"You can't mean it?"
"Yes, I do. He was a baby then and his nurse was wheeling him."

Amy—Didn't you tell Sue to go up stairs and compose herself?
Mabel—Yes.
Amy—Well, she's about finished. She's put on her hair, jabbed her teeth in her mouth and is now laying on her complexion.

"There is no pleasing Mrs. Adipose," said Parker. "She got on a crowded car the other day, and when three men got up to offer her a seat she got mad. Took it as a reflection upon her size."
—From the "Editor's Drawer" in Harper's Magazine for May.

"You may talk all you like about women being the weaker sex," said Mr. Snipps, "but the women did something last year that men could never do."
"And that was," inquired Mr. Snipps, "Lost 50,000,000 hairpins and wore wings of 3,000,000 birds on their hats."

At a railway station an old lady said to a very pompous-looking gentleman, who was talking about steam communications: "Pray, sir, what is steam?"
"Steam, ma'am, is, ah—ah! steam is—"
"I knew that chap couldn't tell you," said a rough-looking fellow standing by; "but steam is a bucket of water in a tremendous perspiration."

A bright story of Irish wit is related in which his satanic majesty figures. It appears that an English tourist was shown the sights by a guide one day, and among the places visited was the "Devil's Gap" and the "Devil's Bowl." "What an amount of land the Devil possesses in Ireland," said the tourist; "he must be an important personage in this country." "Your honor's right," replied the guide promptly; "but like the rest of the landlords he's an absentee."

Editor (wildly)—I am ruined—toto ruined!
Foreman—What's the matter now?
Editor—What's the matter? Why, in my notice of Col. Jones' marriage I plainly wrote: "The ready and waiting bride advanced to the altar hung with lilies and rose leaves," and confounded you, here's the way it reads in the paper: "The wretched and weary bride danced to the halter, hung with liars and horse-thieves." Go off in the woods and hang yourself. I don't want to waste shot on you.

Always Open.—A man who has his own opinion of women is at present engaged in getting up plans for a hotel in the Welsh mountains. The other day a friend met him, and they talked quite a while about the venture. "By the way," inquired the friend, "what are you going to name it?"
"Woman's Month," he said, shortly.
"What," asked the questioner.
"Woman's Month," he repeated.
"That's a funny name for an hotel. What are you going to call it that for?"
"Because it will be open all the year round."

EXPERT IRISH GIRLS.

Seventeen Pretty Lasses Who Will Make The Irish Village.

The Irish Village at the World's Fair will no doubt prove a signal attraction to many visitors. It is an ideal production of an Irish village and seventeen of the sweetest girls in Ireland are its inhabitants.

There are among them lacemakers, spinners, dairymaids and knitters. They are not only experts in the different branches which they represent, but they are, every one of them, just like the maidens whom young Irishmen used to have in mind whenever they heard poor "Peek-a-boo" Scanlan in his palmy days sing "Sweet Molly O!"

There are three dairymaids, Kate Barry, Maria Connolly and Johanna Dougherty. They came from the Munster dairy school in Cork, and they will dole out dainty little "pats" of butter that "melts like honey in your mouth," made from milk of real Kerry cows, half-a-dozen of which are to be brought over from these days from the McGillicuddy reeks.

There is also a mitre loaded down with gems of great value, and another of gold embroidery. In a glass case there is a cope made beautiful by a profusion of precious stones and elaborate embroideries, the entire labor having been performed by women.

It has been estimated that the whole collection shown by the three firms named has a value of not less than $5,000,000.

County Monaghan is represented by Bridget Flynn and Kate Kelliday. The two chief towns of Monaghan are Clones and Carrickmacross. Miss Flynn is called the Clones crocheting maker and Miss Kelliday the Carrickmacross lacemaker. They are both wonderfully skillful and do excellent work.

They are very intelligent girls and are careful to remind one that the cottage industries which they represent are not to be the only Irish exhibits at the fair. Miss Murphy remarked that some of the ancient Irish manuscripts which have been treasured in the Royal Academy in Dublin are being brought over.

Did you ever think of your pot economy? Nearly everyone has one for instance, there is a man, the very reverse of a miser, who will rice from the library to hall and from hall to drawing room, to get the full value of a sulphur match.

A CHAPEL AT THE FAIR.

Noble Art Work Exhibited by the Tiffany Glass Company.

A chapel, complete in all its appointments, is a portion of the exhibit which the Tiffany Glass and Decorating Company has sent to the Columbian Exposition.

In the Tiffany chapel there is an altar of white marble, inlaid with Venetian and gold mosaics and enriched with precious stones. The altar rests upon a pedulla approached by five steps, the treads being of white marble and the risers in glass mosaic.

At the west end of the chapel is a large rose window, the design of which is an adaptation of a picture of Botticelli, representing the Mother of Jesus with her infant standing upon her knees and surrounded by angels bearing seven candlesticks.

Without removing his overcoat the Westerner rushed away for a glass of water. As he held it near the patient's lips he remarked: "Put your forefingers in your ears. So, now take a good swallow of water, and don't hicough until you have downed the full glass."

It required a great effort to suppress the hicough while doing so. But it was accomplished, and when the poor fellow removed his fingers from his ears his diaphragm had resumed its normal condition and hicoughs no longer held sway.

THE SEAL CONTROVERSY.

The Able Argument of Hon. Frederick R. Couderc of New York.

At a meeting of the Behring Sea Tribunal of Arbitration, which was held in Paris last week, Frederick R. Couderc, the counsel for the United States, gave an outline of the argument that he proposed to offer in support of Mr. James C. Carter. He declared that the defense of the sealing industry in Behring Sea by the United States was imperative, and an attack on the sealing industry was an attack on the United States.

At the conclusion of his remarks, which riveted the attention of the court, of all the counsels and the spectators, Baron de-Conreul, the President of the Tribunal said to him: "You have captivated our attention by a remarkable display of talent. We have to thank you for the great ability, liveliness and humor with which you have carried us over what would otherwise have been a rather dreary field of questions of fact.

What to Do With a Ham. In a small family a large, cold boiled ham after several appearances, is apt to lead to aggressive criticism. In harmony with that sympathetic attitude which should be maintained toward the gender sex, we offer a suggestion which may soften some of the asperities of domestic life.

For Dyspepsia, Indigestion, and Stomach Disorders, take BROWN'S IRON BITTERS. All dealers keep it. 50¢ per bottle. Contains the trade-mark and crossed red lines on wrapper.

TO PERFUME THE BATH.

What Kind of Things Are Used for This Purpose.

All manner of things are put into the bath, choice varying with taste and condition in life. Benzoin is one of the cheapest and sweetest adjuncts. An ounce will turn a tub of water white and leave the body fragrant.

Remove the heads from two bunches of asparagus and break the stalks into inch lengths; cook in boiling salted water until tender, adding the tips some time after ward, as they require less cooking than the stalks. Make one pint cream sauce with two tablespoonfuls each of butter and flour, one-half teaspoonful of salt, one-half teaspoonful of pepper and one pint of hot milk or cream.

REMEDY FOR HICCOUGHING.

Rather Ancient, but it was Good in This Case.

"Hi-e-e-hicough!" "Off and on for a day and a half an uptowner had hicoughed, until his friends felt sure he was doomed to a death of which he read at long intervals. His distress was apparent in his features and complete exhaustion, nervous and physical, must soon have been his lot, when a very simple remedy relieved him.

A Russian jelly is just now a popular dessert. It is very simply made, from any fine jelly, which is whipped to a stiff froth just before it begins to thicken. Continue the whipping until the entire mass of the jelly is a thick froth. A very pretty effect may be produced by having the different individual moulds of this jelly in different colors.

As this is the season of spinach, it is well to call the attention of housekeepers to the fact that this is a vegetable which is very much improved by being cooled and recooked. This process may be repeated an almost indefinite number of times with increased improvement.

HOW TO COOK SPINACH.

A quiet conscience is a foretaste of heaven, an inquiet one a foretaste of hell. "Do you know there isn't one man in 500 who knows how to wear shoes?" remarked a shoemaker the other day.
