What is CASTORIA

Castoria is Dr. Samuel Pitcher's prescription for Infants and Children. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other Narcotic substance. It is a harmless substitute for Paregoric, Drops, Soothing Syrups, and Castor Oil. It is Pleasant. Its guarantee is thirty years' use by Millions of Mothers. Castoria destroys Worms and allays Feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhoea and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatulency. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.
"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."
Dr. G. C. Osmond, Lowell, Mass.

Castoria.
"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."
Dr. H. A. Archer, M. D., 111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we have to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

AXES TO GRIND.
MARGARET E. JORDAN.
"When weary I grow of some wearying toll,"
Said Uncle Tom, one day,
"I always think of my boyhood ago,
When work seemed nothing but play,
And studying lessons the dearest toll,
And school a prison cell.
But I learned a lesson of life, my boys—
It has stood me long and well."
"The men were heaving timber down
With axes keen and bright.
I longed to give a helping hand
With all a small boy's might.
I coaxed and teased as small lads will;
I pouted and I whined—
'Come, turn the stone,' my father cried,
'Till I these axes grind.'"

"I flew to the stone with right good will;
I turned it round and round;
The dull-edged axes one by one,
My father coolly grind.
My back grew stiff, my breath grew short,
My arms grew limp and lame,
But my father kept the blade of an axe
Close to the stone the same.
"I held tight to it with might and main,
Till every axe was keen.
Then I slunked away, and a glummer lad
I venture never was seen.
My father he smiled for a month or weeks
And his smile would always say:
'Would you rather help me to grind an axe
Than go to school to-day?'"

CHESSY'S IDEAS.
BY MEXICAN ROSE.
"CHESSY," said Mrs. Ford one bright morning, as she entered her little daughter's room, "your Aunt Annette is very ill, and I am going to her immediately."

"Oh mamma, don't go away and leave me here all alone; you know old Eunice is sick and went home last night, and papa is at the office all day. It would be awful lonesome here in this big house, with not a living soul to talk to."
"Yes, dear, but I will come home tomorrow if Aunt Annette is better, and you know that when I am away there is no one to give papa his meals but our little daughter, except when Eunice is here, and she is growing very old, and has been at home sick quite often of late," and Mrs. Ford sighed heavily, for old Eunice had been her only servant for years, and she was a person to be trusted. The family was very much attached to her.
"Very well, my little daughter, for one day, and you know I can cook nicely. I think I'll keep Tabby near me even a eat it company sometimes," and Chessy patted her pet cat affectionately, for even then it was curled up contentedly in her lap.
"I thought my little daughter would do as mamma wished," said Mrs. Ford, as she left the room to prepare for her short journey.
An hour later and Chessy stood at the front door watching her mother as she walked rapidly down the street. "Very well, my little daughter, she found herself alone in that great large house. But she was determined to be brave, and began singing at the top of her voice as she washed the breakfast dishes. In a very short time the plates and cups and saucers were arranged in order on the shelves of the large dresser, and Chessy was standing before the mirror dressing her hair, which clustered about her neck and shoulders in countless ringlets, when she was startled by a ring of the door bell. "A morning caller," she thought, putting aside her large check apron, in preparation to answer the bell. But on opening the door she was very much surprised to behold her cousin, Regina Reade, of Boston.
"Oh, dear, you are looking just as sweet as ever," exclaimed that fashionable young miss, embracing Chessy and kissing her rapturously on both cheeks.
"Well, indeed, Cousin Regina, I am very much surprised to see you. In fact, I didn't know you were in this city," Chessy replied, recovering her power of speech.
"I arrived here Saturday evening, and would have called to see you Sunday evening, but I have had so many callers at grandma's that I didn't get a chance to have the house this morning," she said, with a great rustling of her sky blue silk, Regina seated herself in the comfortable rocking chair with a lofty air. For Chessy had conducted her into the neat parlor.
"Well, I'm glad you called this morning, for I'm all alone. Aunt Annette is very ill, and mamma went to her about an hour ago. Won't you take off your hat and put aside your parasol?" exclaimed Chessy, as for the first time, she noticed that her visitor appeared to have no notion of making her call a very long one.
"Oh, no, dear, I must call on Amy Winters this morning, or she will never forgive me, you know. And this evening I am going to the park with a party of friends; will you come with me?"
"I would like to go, but mamma expects me to have papa's supper prepared when he comes home this evening, and this afternoon I must sweep the dining room and do some dusting up stairs."
"Dear, dear, what a dutiful little housewife you are, Chessy!" exclaimed Regina, laughing heartily; "but now, really, you don't intend spoiling your hands with sweeping and dusting, do you?"
"I never think of my hands, and I always help mamma when Eunice is not able," replied Chessy, looking down at her pretty little white, dimpled hands.
"Grandma always said it was more becoming to a little girl of my age to wear curls than any style of a braid or knot," and Chessy gave her bright curls a vigorous shake.
"Just at present, the Catagon knot is very stylish; you see, I wear it," said Regina, rising, "but if you always dress according to your grandmother's ideas, you will never be a fashionable young lady."

"Well, I never intend to become a slave to fashion," replied Chessy, with a slight pout, "oh, don't go yet!" she exclaimed, as her cousin walked toward the door.
"Indeed, I have stayed longer now than I intended," and with her sweetest smile, Regina Reade departed.
"Cousin Regina is fifteen—only two years older than I, and she seems like a grown up young lady," thought Chessy, as she returned to the kitchen again, and tied on her large gingham apron.
But then, Chessy's mother was a good, sensible woman, who considered it her duty to rear her daughter to be the sunshine of her home and a good housekeeper, instead of a society belle or a fancy dancer. While her sister, Mrs. Reade, was a woman of fashion, whose highest ambition was to have the pleasure of some day introducing into society a beautiful and accomplished daughter. Thus, Regina had been reared to think more of fashion than anything else, and was, at the age of fifteen, a foolish young lady, cultivating manners that were not at all what one admires in young girls.
Chessy had never thought of sparing her hands, but after what Regina had said about spoiling them with sweeping and dusting, she hesitated about doing the work she had intended. But, oh, what a bright idea! Didn't Miss Sara Douglas, that precise old maid who lived across the street, wear kid gloves every morning to sweep her pavement? "Yes, indeed," Chessy thought, and she would do the same. So she ran quickly up stairs and put on a pair of kid gloves that were somewhat stained and faded, and returning, she began sweeping the dining room, till she was obliged to open a l the windows, in order to let the clouds of dust pass out.
But finally, she thought it was not very comfortable to be handling a broom with tight gloves on one's hands. Of course, Miss Sara Douglas did it, but then old maids were different from little girls, so off came the gloves, and Chessy felt very much relieved.

GIRL AND BOAT.
ROWING is a delightful exercise for a girl of health and spirit, with a sound backbone, and not quailish. It is not, however, an accomplishment acquired as easily as some girls think. One does not learn to row well in a day, a week, a month, nor always even in a season. The girl who means to become really mistress of her little craft, will require time, patience and judgment, as well as muscle, but the end is worth the trouble. There are, however, times when the beginner is inclined to waver in this belief. It looks so easy to row! A boat glides through smooth water so naturally, so simply, so lightly, it seems as if the merest hint from the oars must be enough to set it in motion. She intends when she dons her new sailor suit and steps aboard—which proves a tedious process and disconcerts her a trifle because she sits down with such a bump—to row across the lake and back before breakfast, and surprise the other boarders when she returns with an account of her little exploit. She is not at all afraid to go alone. The day is calm, and she is not unfamiliar with boats; only with managing them. She considers herself a good sailor, in fact, because she has never been seasick; and once, when there were whitecaps and the other girls squealed and clutched one another, she did not mind at all. She was the little mistake of trying to row out into the pond before shoving the stern off, but she sees at once what is wrong, and proceeds to remedy it; and although she overbalances herself and nearly goes overboard in doing so, she does not quite, and a miss is as good as a mile.
Moreover, the at first forgets the lowlocks so that her oars slip and wobble mysteriously, but that oversight also she promptly sets right, and settling herself trimly in place and bracing her feet firmly, she dips both oars deep in the shining water and gives a pull with all her might. To her surprise the boat does not skim ahead. On the contrary it turns in a half-circle with the blade of the right oar, which seems to have struck down to the bottom of the lake, as a kind of pivot, while her left oar merely skips along the surface, scattering a few drops of spray. She repeats this experience several times; she also 'catches a crab' that jerks her from her seat, and she nearly over-sets the boat by leaning to pick a pondily which declines to yield up its rooted grasp upon the bottom. At last she does make a series of laborious jerky strokes which carry her a head in something approaching a straight line, and although they land her on a mud bank, from which she finds it a task of much difficulty and some danger to release herself, still they do mark progress and she thinks them enough of a success to warrant her in turning round for home.
She has by no means crossed the lake; but she has learned something and does not feel entirely defeated though humbler than when she started. She does not try again next day, because her back is tired and she has a row of blisters on her hands, but she goes again soon accompanied by an instructor. By the end of the summer she can really row, and proudly promises next year to teach her younger sisters.

THE MAGIC TRUNK.
EXPLANATION OF A TRICK WHICH IS POPULAR WITH PRESTIDIGITATORS.
The Indian trunk mystery, which is so popular with the prestidigitators, owes its success entirely, says the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, to the cabinet-maker's skill, and the deftness of the chief operator. The trunk trick is one in which a confederate of the prestidigitator is put in a trunk just after it has been thoroughly examined by several persons from the audience. One spectator locks the trunk, guards the lock, and even seals it. It is then tied up with ropes, and the intricate ropes of these seals. The whole thing is put in a leather bag, with double locks and again sealed. The bag is then set up on rests, and the operator fires a pistol over it. When it is unwrapped, the confederate is gone.
The trick is simple. One end of the trunk turns on a pivot and is held by a spring. When the trunk is being tied with the ropes, the operator, after a turn or two has been taken in one direction, tilts the trunk up, and in an instant, the confederate has pressed the spring, opened the end and slid into a trap-door corresponding to the end of the trunk. Then the tying goes on with as many variations as the operator may choose.
The ruling passion is strong in a bookkeeper.

ODDS AND ENDS.
The Favorite Word.
What are you studying, my little maid? "I'm learning to read in a book," she said. "And what is your favorite word?" said I. "Then the little maiden made reply: "Big A is the nicest word I know." And when I asked why she thought it so, she gravely answered (the shy little tot) "Because big A is as far as I've dot!"

Naughty Tommy.
Parent—This is your birthday, Tommy. What can I do for you that will cause you pleasure?
Tommy—Spank Johnny.

Just in Time.
"O, grandma!" cried Ruth, "here's an egg. I took it out of the nest just when a hen got in. Isn't it lucky, grandma, that I took it before that hen sat down on it?"
Smart.
Mamma (revising Ethel's "composition")—Why, child! This is no way to spell "rhinoceros."
Ethel—But if it did not spell it, how did you know what it was?

No Danger.
Little Johnny—"May I hitch the dog to my wagon and have him pull me?"
Mother—"I'm afraid he'll bite you."
Litte Johnny—"It's the other end I'm going to hitch."

Disappointed.
Funny Boy—Did you ever notice the advantage the funny book has over the funny paper?
Joke Editor—In what way?
Funny Boy—Why, it is bound to please.

"Transparent" Defined.
Teacher—Tommy Taddells, what is the meaning of the word "transparent"?
Tommy—Something you can see through.
Teacher—Name something you can see through.
Tommy—A ladder.

A Proud Record.
School Boy (rejoice!) I haven't missed school one day this term, and I haven't been late once.
Mother—That's splendid; but what are all these black marks in your report?
School Boy—Them's only for missin' lesson.

How to Get Fat.
One evening when the mosquitoes were very troublesome, Bobby cried out, "Oh dear, if these mosquitoes don't stop biting me, there'll be nothing left of me!"
"Oh no," said Floris, "the bites will swell up and make you bigger than ever."
Knew No More Than the Fly.
For several minutes Carleton watched a fly buzzing on the window-pane, and then asked, "Why does that fly do that?"
"Because," explained mamma, "he doesn't know what glass is, and wants to get out."
"Well," answered Carleton, shortly, "I guess I must be a fly, 'cause I don't know what glass is."

"A man," said Uncle Moses, "is a heap like a silver dollar. De best way to find out w'at kind o' metal he is made of is to slam him down hard."

In a cemetery adjoining a small town in the State of Vermont, there is a tombstone bearing this remarkable legend, "Sacred to the memory of three twins."

Gableigh: "Do you believe in the power of the human eye with a wild beast?" Professor: "Yes, the power of the eye is very useful—to see the wild beast coming."

"Is this a fast train?" asked the traveling man of the conductor. "Of course it is," was the reply. "I thought so. Would you mind my getting out to see what it is fast to?"

Cautious Customer (who has heard of the high prices charged in retail drug stores): "How much do you charge for ten cents' worth of tooth-powder?" Drug Clerk: "For the best quality, twenty-five cents."

He: "I have figured out this problem of girls and ice-cream on a strictly mathematical basis." She: "How did you get at the facts?" He: "Why, the arithmetic says, you know, that one gal is equal to four quarts."

Owner of Fish-pond (to man who is trespassing): "Don't you see that sign, 'No Fishing Here'?" Angler disputes it. Why, there's good fishing here. Look at this basketful. The man must have been insane who put that board up."

Young Rorty: "What do you mean when you say you are a gentleman because you are not in business?" Old Rorty: "I mean, sir, that, to be a gentleman, I must have no business." Young Rorty: "Ah, I understand now! You mean that you have no business to be a gentleman."
