"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."

DR. G. C. OSGOOD, Lowell, Mass.

"Casteria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it.' THE MAINE MOCCASIN.

By No Means Handsome, but Esteemed by Lumbermen East and West.

"Everybody who has been in Maine during the winter among the lumbermen and backwoods farmers knows the blown up looking muddy yellow boots and shoes these useful and picturesque citizens wear," said a veteran leather dealer in the swamp. "They call 'em moccasins. The first pair was made by a shoemaker in Bangor, and their fame long ago spread to the west. The shoe factories of Bangor now turn out annually something like 100,000 pairs of moccasin boots and one-quarter as many shoes, and there are factories out in Minnesota and Wisconsin that make almost as many. "A person on first seeing this yellow and baggy footwear would suppose that it was made from some strange leather, but it isn't. The material is just common leather, but leather tanned in a way that is known to only a few. All we know is that salt, alum and some kind of an out of the way oil are the principal agencies that give the leather its peculiar color and flexibility. This leather had been made years and years before any one thought of using it for boots or shoes. The only use to which it was put up to 1851 was to make lacings for mill belts. It was made only at Pawtucket. One day a man named Baldwin, who was a shoemaker in Bangor, made up his mind that the leather was just the thing for winter moccasins, and he made a few pairs. They were tried by lumbermen, and Baldwin proved to be right. Nothing had ever been offered to the Maine lumbermen that filled the bill like Baldwin's yellow moccasins, and in less than a year a Lig factory for turning out these queer boots and shoes was started in Bangor. Other factories sprang up in Maine, and the tanning of the belt lace leather made those who knew the secret of it rich in a short

"Until 1871 the boots and shoes were made just as Baldwin made his first pair 20 years before. Then machines for cutting and fashioning the moccasins came into use and revolureached the far western lumber regions, a Bangor firm received an order for a pair from some one in Dubuque. The order was filled, and this led to other orders, until, when the war broke out, the eastern factories were shipping thousands of pairs of Maine moccasins to the west. | you to thay who ith the thecond." The war almost killed the business. tanning capacity tenfold.

"The value of the moccasin lies almost entirely in the peculiar way in which the leather is tanned. The tanning renders the leather absolutely waterproof and a perfect nonconductor of heat and cold. The color of the moccasin is a golden yellow, and fashion has made them in the shape of shoes as popular in the town these days, especially in the summer, as they are in the wilderness where the snow is thigh deep." -New York Sun.

Difficult to See Maurice Barrymore, Who

Never Curtails a Visit. The difficulty and length of time it takes in communicating with distinguished members of the theatrical profession may be well illustrated in the person of Mr. Maurice Barrymore, and after perusing the followwhy he, at all events, would be accessible to but few.

A playwright, intending to produce a play at a matinee on trial, concluded Barrymore was the most desirable man for the leading role, and accordingly deputed an agent to make an appointment with him. When it did, although Mr. Barrymore's delightful powers of conversation were more than appreciated, the playwright felt assured that once located it was as difficult for the actor to go as it was to come. It happened to be a bitter cold day in winter, and after three or four hours of reading and discussion Mr. Barrymore rose, carelessly observing, "I think I'd better be going, as I left a friend of mine, Gus Thomas, outside, who walked over with me." And half smiling he added, "I told him I shouldn't stop but a moment."

The horrified playwright exclaimed: "Poor man! Why didn't you ask hotly. him in? By this time he must be quite frozen.'

"Oh, no," observed Barrymore; "I fancy not. By the way, I had a terrible scene with him last night." the actor spoke he reseated himself. "Thomas has a play he wants me to 'star' in, 'Reckless Temple' by name. I am averse to starring at present, but he's been urging it on me nearly the whole night, telling me it will afford him his one chance to rise in the world," etc.

Mr. Barrymore remained fully half an hour longer recounting the prevailing condition of affairs, and despite the playwright's anxiety upon the subject it was made evident later on that Mr. Thomas did actor was displayed as well, for ance on the boards in due time, with Mr. Barrymore in the leading role. Though ultimately a failure, the
