TRAMPLED TO DEATH. During the performance at the Front Street Theatre, in Baltimore, last Friday night, some person cried "Fire," and as soon as the cry of "fire" went up, a great wail swept through the house, and everybody tried to get out at once. Women shrieked and men cursed and fought to reach the exit. Several of the players who were dressing for their parts ran to the foot-lights and implored the people to keep still, assuring them that there was no danger, and that everybody would be able to get out without much trouble. This satisfied some of those in the orchestra, but the people in the galleries continued their struggle to get outside. The cry of fire was a great mistake, but a greater one followed-the gas was turned out in part of the house, which caused the crowd to become wild.

Under the influence of their fright men and women seemed to hear the roaring imaginary flames and to see death reaching cut after them. Every human instinct appeared to have left them, and they fought each other like wild beasts in their efforts to reach the outer air. Strong men tore women and children aside and took their places, not caring for the cost to others of the few inches they had gained. Women screamed, implored and prayed by turns, and then, maddened by their fear, plunged into the crowd and fought with the rest, striking here and there, scratching, tearing one another's garments and tramping over the fallen.

The panic occurred just as the orchestra had finished the overture and the curtain had been rung up. For some time the odor of gas had been noticed in the building and employes had been sent over the entire place trying to locate it, but had not succeeded. Several persons in the extreme left-hand side of the balcony or second gallery had noticed that the odor was particularly strong where they were sitting, and it is said that a man in the audience struck a match and ran it gladly received by Secretary Car- rupted the disagreeable results of along the wall under the edge of the ceiling of the gallery with a view to finding the leak.

Burned by a Thief.

The mystery surrounding the burning of the large stable on the Ginn farm, in first district of Cecil county, on the night of December 9, is being solved. Nine horses perished in the flames and one horse could not be accounted for.
The supposition was that the thief had fired the stable to cover up his work.
It so proves, as detectives who were put on the case have found the missing horse. It was discovered missing horse. It was discovered at Townsend. The animal's tail had been docked and his mane trimmed and oth track of the person who had the horse in his possession.

Quiet New Year's Day.

New Year's Eve in this place, noted for its quietness until after 10 o'clock. Before that time few reports of firearms were heard, but as the year 1895 music, and whilst the bells rang merrily the New Year was ushered in, and 1895 became a thing of the past.

New Year's day was unusually quiet

Surprise Party at St. Anthony's.

On New Year's Eve a large party gathered at St. Anthony's parsonage, at Mt. St. Mary's, and installed the sumed. Lawyer Sebold made a very happy and appropriate address, refer-ring to the Saintly DuBois and Bruté as ounders of the parish, and the courtly McCaffrey as one of the most illustrious of the long line of distinguished pastors. He also spoke of the Brawners and Elders as the pioneers of catholicity in this part of Maryland.

The great surprise of the evening was on the part of the gathering, for in the midst of their preparation, Father ury.

The report of the comptroller shows a balance of $704,568,19 in the State treasury. Manley surprised the surprise party by appearing unexpectedly in the neighborhood. A strong suspicion rests upon the good natured John Tom, as playing traitor in the camp. He had better soon prove his innocence, otherwise the ladies will be after his scalp.

Union Services.

The Week of Prayer, January 5-12, 1896, will be observed as usual by the Protestant Churches of this place. Services will begin Sabbath evening, Jan. 5th in the Presbyterian Church, and continue every evening during the week. From Sunday till Wednesday Let there be a full attendance

Topics for the week: Sunday, Jan. 5th, Sermon; Monday, "Humiliation and Thanksgiving," Rev. W. Simonton, D. D.; Tuesday, "The Church Universal," Rev. C. students who remained over for the holidays were not altogether so unfortunate as some of their more favored companions thought they would be. Christmas opened up very joyously and although we had not the frost and snow to make it the ideal Christmas, still the air was clear and bracing and the old Mountain presented a real festive appearance. First Mass was celebrated in the Mountain church with Rev. Dr. Mc-Sweeney as celebrated; Rev. Fr. Manley deacon; Mr. T. Howard, sub-deacon, and Mr. James McCafferty as master of ceremonies. The church was tastefully decorated with evergreen and flowers, fine. Rev. Dr. McSweeney preached a very eloquent sermon appropriate to the day. The ten o'clock or childrens Mass, was celebrated by Rev. J. B. Manley. The music at this mass was furnished by a choir of parish children, and from the way they acquitted themselves both as to harmony and general excellence in music, reflect much credit on their director.

At twelve o'clock all the students sat down to a sumptuous feast, and after them. Mass, was cerebrated by Rev. J. B. It waved its sceptre o'er the beautiful—And they are not. It laid its pallid hand Upon the strong man—and the haughty form Is fallen, and the flashing eye is dim. FREDERICK, January 1.—The date of FREDERICK, January 1.—The date of this letter and the circumstances of the last twenty-four hours are forcibly reminders of the flight of time. The year 1895 which was welcomed with such joy just twelve short months ago, is now a thing of the past, forever. The occasion recalls the words of one of America's thoughtful, sweet poets. America's thoughtful, sweet poets, George D. Prentice, and they bear repeating here :-

For memory and for tears. * *

But from these sad reflections the mind turns to the future, bright with hope. The bells were ringing at midnight, first sadly, for the old year was lying, then merrily, for a hopeful 'Happy New-Year' was ushered in. All who heard them ringing, in their hearts were repeating Tennyson's lines :-

"Ring out the old, ring in the new, Ring, happy bells, across the snow; The old year is going, let him go; Ring out the false, ring in the true."

Thus the world, repining for a moment at the past but resolving to do better for the future, "heart within and

SURIAL ALIVE.

Popular Fear of It and Devices to Prevent

Its Occurrence. "When once the dread of being buried alive takes hold of a man, he usually becomes a maniac on the has been notified to appear with his less of the schoolroom is a matter of subject. The terror of the awful players or singers for the royal small importance if a boy has learned possibility of the thing seems to become a sort of second nature to him, and he spends the rest of his life in devising ways and means to prevent such a calamity happening to himself or to other persons."

The speaker was a man connected with one of Chicago's largest cemeteries, and the incident which brought out the remark was a remarkable one. A man in walking through the cemetery had seen a grave which was not filled in, although the coffin was deposited in it. Instead of the earth being thrown in the grave was covered with boards. On these boards were the flowers that had been used at the funeral. The men connected with the cemetery seemed disinclined to talk about the incident, but finally one was found who was willing to tell what it meant.

"There is a woman in that grave," he said. "Hor husband is a prominent Chicagoan and is what might be called a crank on the subject of being buried alive. When his wife died, he delayed the funeral as long as possible, but even then the idea that his wife might yet be alive seemed to haunt him. At his request tests were applied, and he was assured there was no possibility of any spark of life remaining. But he had read of cases where even the doctors had been mistaken, and he resolved to take no chances. So he made arrangements with the cemetery management to allow the grave of his wife to remain open a certain length of time. He comes here every day, but this morning he said that the grave could be filled in tomorrow."

Then the man talked of some of the schemes and ideas that possess the minds of some men and women who are filled with the dread of being buried alive or of fearing that some of their friends might meet such a horrible fate. He told of some of the devices that have been invented with this motive in view and of the time spent by managers of cemeteries in listening to the inventors.

"One man," he said, "has a scheme by which he would fix a wire in the coffin of a person when it was buried. This wire is to be carried into the office of the cemetery, and the thing is to be arranged so that with the slightest movement in the coffin an alarm will be set off in the office or wherever the wire leads. Then the idea is for all haste to be made in disinterring the coffin and if possible save a life.

"Another man would place chloroform in the coffins of all persons. would be released in such a way as to quickly end the matter and prevent the unlucky victim from enduring any of the horrors of the sitnation. In this case there is no way of knowing whether the person was alive or dead when buried. "Another way to insure death is by means of the old dagger plan. Like the chloroform idea, it merely provides for death in case it has not taken place before burial. This dagger idea is from the Italian, and the plan of it is that as soon as a certain weight of earth rests on the coffin
