THE SONG OF THE TWIN LAKES.

The students of the various ecclesiastical colleges in Rome have country houses on the adjacent hills, where they spend two or three months every Fall. These villas, as they are called, occupy situations of enchanting beauty, commanding the city of Rome; the Tiber; the sea; the mountains, whence came the founders of the world's capital, and where their descendants still live; the campagna, that now seems a desert-waste crossed by five of the twenty-five aqueducts which once brought water to the Eternal City, but that once for fifteen miles in every direction was like these hills too, covered with the palaces, gardens, lakes and ancestral tombs of Rome's earth-conquerors.

In their tramps over the hills, the students are constantly meeting with classic reminders, indeed, are surrounded by and immersed in memories of the past. The Americans have a villa, lately purchased, which once belonged to the Orsinis, a family that had great power in the Middle Ages, and which adjoins the delightful summer-house of the Popes, Castel Gandolfo; Irish enjoy their vacation near Horace's beautiful Tivoli; the English are at Cato's home Monte Porzio; the South Americans, Scotch, Greeks, Germans, etc. etc., each of the dozen national colleges possesses some romantic, historic, classic spot.

Cicero's villa at Tusculum lies near the field which was sold at its full value even while Hannibal was encamped on it, and having conquered all Italy, was threatening Rome. Right below and near Tusculum is the Villa Albobrandini, occupied by the Propaganda Students, who represent all the nations of the globe. Italian and Latin are their house-tongues, but thirty-five languages, on an average, are spoken within their walls, and every shade of complexion from ebony to ivory, is to be found in the faces of its students.

One of the grandest excursions made by the Propagandists is the annual climb up the Mount of Jove, now called Monte Cavi. The students rise betimes, and, carrying a plain lunch, walk up the steep and rocky roads until they reach the top, enjoy sunrise, a sight to be forever remembered, go to Mass in the Passionist Monastery up there, then breakfast in the open air, and enjoy themselves in a manner suiting their holy calling and their classic tastes.

I accompanied a band of students of this my old College on one of those picnic-pilgrimages, and it was while we were enjoying the beauty of the scenery at the base of this ancient volcano, and especially the two famous lakes Nemi and Albano, that the spirit of the place rushed upon one of the party, and he poured forth his soul as follows:

THE TWIN LAKES.
How wearily the traveller
His dusty way urged on!
How steadily the midday sun
On his slim figure shone!
And peace and beauty filled his soul,
Who thus down Cavi's side
With lighter step and hopeful heart
So cheerfully did stride.

"Mont' Alto" in the poem is the villa occupied by the Propagandists in 1864, when these verses were written and when the Pope still ruled in those parts.

The temple of "Latin Jove" on the steep called Mons Albanus, but now Monte Cavi, has been ever since the triumph of Christianity, replaced now by a convent, now by a monastery; while the Shrine of Diana in the grove on Nemi's shore, long since gave way to a chapel dedicated to the Mother of God.

Whoever wishes to realize, as far as may be done without a visit, the fascination of the locality described, may turn to that faithful and charming picture of Italian life and scenery, the "Improvisatore" by Hans Christian Andersen.

The Farmer and the Birds.

We give space to the following expression of the views of Mr. Geo. D. Penniman, president of the Maryland State Game and Fish Protective Association, in order that our farmer friends may carefully read this gentleman's views on the protection of partridges, and draw their own conclusions on the subject. The farmers are asked to care for and protect the birds in every possible manner during the present winter. They are asked to pay particular attention to the propagation of the birds in question; to see that they are properly sheltered from the winter's blasts, and that they receive the required amount of food, to keep them in a thriving condition, so that they will be in a plump condition for the sportsmen next season. The majority of the farmers pay more attention to the protection of game than any other class of people, and yet they receive less sport and benefit from the game they have protected and cared for in the winter, than any other class of people. In the fall of the year when the farmers are busily engaged in storing away the fall crops and preparing for the spring planting, the sportsmen with their fine guns and dogs invade the farmer's premises and kill or cripple the game that the farmers so humanely cared for and kept alive during the winter months, and when the farmers have finished their fall work and they would have time to enjoy the fascinating sport of hunting partridges, there are none left for them to shoot at. The sportsmen made their rounds while the farmers were working their crops, and captured the game. Surely this state of affairs should not be allowed to exist any longer. The farmers, in conjunction with the birds, should be protected. The Game Association will look after the propagation of the birds and the interests of sportsmen, and there their work stops. Farmers look after your own interests, for the Game Association will not have your interests in mind while trying to secure legislation for the birds and themselves.

As there is a great scarcity of birds in this State, due partly to the severe winters and partly to the sportsmen's guns and dogs, we believe it would be well to shorten the hunting season. Under the present laws for Frederick county the partridge season in this county is open from Nov. 1, to Dec. 31. Make the hunting season one month shorter, and let the open season be Dec. 1 to Dec. 31. This will be a great help toward increasing the stock of partridges, and it will also give the farmers a chance at the birds.

This is what Mr. Penniman has to say:

"Admitting that the extreme cold of the last winter has seriously decreased the number of partridges in many places in this State, I think that there are two methods by which the number can be increased: One is by prohibiting shooting for a year, and the second is by affording the present stock of birds every protection possible during this winter; by purchasing birds from the West for propagating purposes and by so caring for the birds during this and the following winters by affording them proper shelter and food that a great number of birds now annually killed through cold, hawks, etc., will be saved.

"The only thing in favor of the first plan is that a certain number of birds will not be killed next winter by sportsmen who will obey the law. The experience of our neighbors in Virginia has been that there are a number of people scattered through the country who will not observe the law, and as a result many birds will be killed in spite of the closed season. I do not believe that the number of birds which are killed by shooting seriously affects the sport in the following autumn.

"If the birds are given a closed season for a year it means that nothing more will be done for them. In my opinion, the difficulty in

The Farmer and the Birds.

Maryland does not arise from the number of birds which are killed by shooting, but from the change which has taken place in the methods of agriculture in the State which deprives the birds of cover and protection during both the summer and the winter. At present the nests of large numbers of partridges are destroyed by the mowers and reapers, and probably this cannot be avoided to any great extent; but, in addition to that, by the constantly increasing use of the wire fence throughout the State, the birds are being deprived more and more each year of the protection from hawks, storms, etc., which protection the old post and rail and snake fences used to afford.

"The farmers throughout the State are adopting the practice of cleaning up their old fields in the fall by the use of a mower, and in this way a great deal of cover which would protect the birds from hawks and in cold weather afford them a good, safe feeding ground is destroyed. Now, merely closing the season for a year will not remedy this. The hawks will be as hungry as numerous, the winds will be as cold and the snow as deep in the closed year as during the winter in which shooting is permitted. In addition farmers and all other persons interested in the birds will not have the incentive of shooting within a few months to urge them to protect the birds, but, as in Virginia, they will feel that as the season is closed, the birds can be safely left to themselves, and even if the winter be very severe, few people will take the trouble to feed them. Again, as happened in Virginia, the winter which follows the closed year may be very severe and may again wipe out all the good which the closed year has produced.

"I believe in the second plan because I do not think that we will ever have good shooting in Maryland until the farmers afford the birds protection from hawks and snows. I think in neighborhoods where the birds are now very scarce, if those interested in shooting will feed the birds during this winter, so that the loss of life through cold will be rendered as small as possible; if they will, by placing small traps on the tops of poles through the country, catch the hawks; if in mowing and reaping the nests of the brooding birds are avoided as far as possible; if hundreds of vagrant curs owned throughout the counties are destroyed through some effective law which will protect the farmers' sheep as well as the birds, then the right step will be taken toward a permanent increase of birds in this State.

"Where farmers have constructed wire fences, if they could be induced to leave a strip of land two feet wide on each side of the fences to grow up in bushes, briars and wild grasses, it would afford a good nesting place for many of the birds in the summer and a safe refuge from hawks, as well as a well-stocked larder for the birds during the snows of winter. If the farmers, instead of clearing their lands in the fall as bare as a billiard table, would leave along the streams and in protected places patches of high grass, the birds would find sufficient cover to hide them from hawks and would get seeds for food.

"I also believe that the residents of the city who take advantage of the invitations of their country friends to shoot in the country should assist in the good work by purchasing quail from the West to be turned out for propagating purposes. My experience in Howard county in this line conclusively proves to me two things: First, that a large proportion of the birds which are turned out will breed, and secondly, that every farmer on whose land a bunch of birds was liberated immediately took an interest in protecting the birds, and was willing to do everything possible to assist them in increasing, and from that time became an ardent advocate of protecting and feeding the birds. The residents of the city could also very easily make the necessary pecuniary arrangements with their country friends to have small patches of grain sown in various sheltered spots to be left uncultured for use of the birds. There are more birds in England to an acre than there are here on 10 acres, and their winters are at times even more trying than ours. No one hears, however, of closing a season for a year there, and it is only because the birds are cared for intelligently instead of being left to themselves to struggle for an existence on bare fields, as here.

"This is the spirit which must be aroused through the State before we will have good partridge shooting. I will not say that giving a closed season is a step backward, but I do say it is not the step forward which we should take; it is a temporary makeshift at the best. During the closed season the birds are not any more protected from hawks, cold or hunger than they are now. At the termination of the closed season we will be about where we are now, with the exception of perhaps a few more birds, which may be destroyed immediately by a blizzard.

"I have given these views fully because I do not want the county friends of the game association to feel that the members, as far as they have unofficially expressed themselves to me, are not in full sympathy with their desire to protect and increase the number of birds. It is merely a question of the best way to do it, and I believe that the plan I have outlined is the only one which will place the protection of game in this State on a permanent and satisfactory basis."

"ONE Minute Cough cure is the best remedy I ever used for coughs and colds. It is unequalled for whooping cough. Children all like it," writes H. N. Williams, Gentryville, Ind. Never fails. It is the only harmless remedy that gives immediate results. Cures coughs, colds, hoarseness, croup, pneumonia, bronchitis and all throat and lung troubles. Its early use prevents consumption. T. E. ANOTHER NEW ELECTRIC LIGHT.

In a paper recently read by Mr. A. A. Campbell Swinton before the Philosophical Society of Glasgow an experiment was described in which a light of several hundred candle power was obtained with less than one watt per candle and at a very high pressure, 8000 volts. The light was obtained from cathode rays which are the bombardment of the highly attenuated particles of matter in a highly exhausted tube. These rays were concentrated at one point, setting up there an extremely high temperature comparable with that of the electric arc. By using a disc of thorium, one of the emissive substances used in Welsbach mantles, the high temperature obtained gave a highly efficient light.

BONDS AS SECURITY FOR REVENUE RECEIPTS.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 26.—It was stated at the treasury to-day that the total amount of bonds which have been deposited and accepted by the Secretary as security for internal revenue receipts to be deposited with national banks' depositors is $17,000,000, of which $11,000,000 has been deposited by New York banks. Among the other cities making deposits are the following: Chicago, $600,000, St. Louis $1,366,000, Boston $1,000,000, Baltimore $245,000, Cincinnati $375,000, Pittsburgh $215,000, Minneapolis $100,000, New Orleans $100,000, Buffalo $300,000, Richmond, Va., $100,000, Norfolk, Va. $100,000, Detroit $100,000, and Indianapolis $60,000.

The entire list foots up thirty-one banks, located in fifteen states. The total receipts from internal revenue sources are distributed each day among all of the banks represented in the list, each bank receiving its proportionate share of the whole upon the basis of the amount of bonds deposited by each as security.

It is stated further that the total amount of bonds purchased by the government under the Secretary's recent order was: Fours, $14,244,050; 5s, $5,990,300; total $19,234,350, with about $45,000 additional still under examination.

The permanent depository of the government's money in Baltimore is the Merchants' National Bank. The temporary depositories are the National Mechanics', the National Exchange, the National Bank of Commerce, the Third National and the National Union. The Merchants' National has deposited an additional $150,000 in bonds, the National Exchange $50,000, and the National Mechanics' $45,000, in all $245,000, and these three banks share in the daily distribution of the government's deposits in the ratio of the additional bond deposited by them.

TWENTIETH CENTURY'S DAWN.

"The first people to live in the twentieth century will be the Friendly Islanders, for the date-line, as it may be called, lies in the Pacific Ocean, just to the east of their group," writes John Ritchie, Jr., in the January Ladies' Home Journal, of "Where the Next Century will Really Begin." "At that time, although it will be already Tuesday to them, all the rest of the world will be enjoying some phase of Monday, the last day of the nineteenth century [December 31, 1900]. At Melbourne the people will be going to bed, for it will be nearly ten o'clock; at Manila it will be two hours earlier in the evening; at Calcutta the English residents will be sitting at their Monday afternoon dinner, for it will be about six o'clock; and in London, 'Big Ben,' in the tower of the House of Commons, will be striking the hour of noon. In Boston, New York and Washington half the people will be eating breakfast on Monday morning, while Chicago will be barely conscious of the dawn. At the same moment San Francisco will be in the deepest sleep of what is popularly called Sunday night, though really the early, dark hours of Monday morning, and half the Pacific will be wrapped in the darkness of the same morning hours, which become earlier to the west, until at Midway or Brooks Island it will be but a few minutes past midnight on Sunday night."

IMMENSE PLANS FOR NEW BUILDINGS NEXT YEAR.

NEW YORK, Dec. 26.—There will be $85,000,000 expended next year in Greater New York in the construction of buildings. This estimate is exclusive of the cost of structures contracted for by the city, except that school houses, engine houses and police stations are included, the continuation of work on all semi-public buildings, such as Columbia College, the new Cathedral of St. John the Divine, and the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences.

Plans have been filed for more than 30 residences, each to cost in excess of $75,000 and aggregating a total of $3,000,000. There will be nearly 300 residences whose cost will range between $20,000 and $50,000, and in the aggregate $10,000,000. This latter sum looks big for residences in one year, but is in reality only about three times the sum that totals the cost of the three houses which in the future will be completed here for Mr. Andrew Carnegie, Mr. Marcus Daly and United States Senator Clark. Flats that average in cost $20,000 each will be put up to the number of 300 and twice as many to cost less than $15,000 each will be erected. There are 18 schools building or contemplated, 14 churches, 36 office buildings, 10 hotels, big and small, and more than 700 houses to cost less than $6,000 each in the suburbs. This, with the practical rebuilding of the Grand Central Station, the Soldiers and Sailors Arch for which $100,000 has been appropriated, the $300,000 wing of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, the Botanic and Zoological Gardens, the Hall of Records and the Public Library (Astor, Lenox and Tilden foundations,) insures a year of unexampled growth in the city.

DESSICATED EGGS.

Another Use for the Product of the Hen.

W. O. Stoddard, Jr., representing the Pure Food Company of Newark, N. J., called on me the other day to make some inquiries as to egg production and the location of the most important primary egg market. Mr. Stoddard is interested in a new machine for desiccating eggs, which is said to be an improvement upon the methods formerly in vogue, such as to the quality of the product and to the economy of desiccating. Mr. Stoddard gave me a sample of the product, which, he said, had been made about six weeks before; it is of unusually fine grain, dry, bright, attractive color and smells fresh and sweet. An omelet made from this sample had no peculiarities whatever as compared with one made from fresh eggs; the consistency is the same and the flavor all right. Mr. Stoddard claims that the product can be kept indefinitely under proper conditions, and he expects it to find general use in competition with refrigerator eggs. The desiccated article can be used for every purpose for which eggs are used, except, of course, where the whole egg is necessary or where whites and yolks must be separated. (For. Produce Review.)

Disappointing Returns.

Poultry commission merchants say that one reason why great many shippers are disappointed in the prices they receive on good poultry is that they persist in shipping stock of sizes which are not in demand. Thus enormous quantities of chickens weighing three to four pounds are sent to all the large cities, and as they are neither broilers nor roasters, are sold on the open market at the lowest prices going. Of course the shippers who know that the quality of the stock was good are dissatisfied with the returns. For the city market there is nothing between the broiler and the roaster. Cockrels not marketed at broiler size should be held for roasters, and if possible should be castrated. If this is done they can be held for a favorable market in the country, which have not been castrated must be marketed while soft, no matter how poor the prices are, for after they become hard and "stagnant" they bring no more than old cocks. (Farm Poultry.)

Buff Leghorns.

The appearance of the Buff Leghorn, the latest addition to the Mediterranean class, was in response to the growing popularity of the buff breeds. The color appears to meet the requirements of those who wish a fowl with light plumage and a light pin feather in the cock's caracass, desiring at the same time a richer and more showy hue than belongs to the white varieties.

(Buff Leghorns.)

R. L. Reds, male and female are of nearly the same color, the shades varying from lemon to a true almost brownish red. The dish is a very deep buff. Plumage must not be of a mottled appearance and must be free from black or white feathers. The shape is that of the typical Leghorn; light in build but round and plump, with graceful outline, full breast, a curved neck, upright tail with flowing feathers, long sickle feathers, but close body plumage.

The Old Sitter.

In the meantime the good wife had procured a few old biddies from a neighbor and had them in her hen house. We passed by the first of them every day for all the long twenty-one days. We never looked about the temperature, the moisture or the ventilation. The old biddies didn't either. They just sat there and waited. The stupid things! How did they know what the temperature is? One of them is blind in one eye and has her tail feather pulled out. Four of them had 60 eggs when they began to "pipe," the old biddies woke up and said, "Chin, chin, chin, with an occasional cluck. Forty-seven chicks crawled out of these 60 eggs. The old blind hen hatched every egg, and has not crowded about it, either. She did it with her little "hatchit." Exchange.

How to Get Winter Eggs.

There are at least three things necessary for winter eggs—right kind of fowl, comfortable accommodations and proper food and water. Hens two years old the coming spring, providing they are kept in good health, will lay a large number of reliable winter layers. Pullets that were hatched before the 10th of May should also give us eggs during winter.

Progress in Breeding.

A man need not be very old to remember that from 1,400 to 1,500 pound horse was a heavy draft horse, or a three-minute trotter a speedy roadster. Times have changed, however, and the heavy draft horse must weigh 300 to 350 pounds more and the roadster go a good many seconds faster to be classed as good ones of their kind. It takes a better horse to be a good one today than it did ten or twenty years ago. The ideals of these days will not serve. The breeder must aim to get the kind that ranks high today, and this is the only kind that is going to pay for his care hereafter.

CHRISTMAS WORK.

How Some Useful and Pretty Presents May Be Made.

This is the season when Christmas novelties are displayed in their most attractive forms, says Edith Chester in the Country Gentleman. Distracting little trifles are found in the windows and on the counters. Both needle and pen have cunningly worked to render even more fascinating the numerous articles that are destined to find their way, ere many weeks elapse, into the houses of young and old. Skilled hand labor always finds a large circle of admirers, and those who are adept in the use of needle, brush or pen have it in their power to gladden the hearts of friends at slight expense. Among so many bewitching novelties it cannot but be hard to choose, and the few ideas here offered are mere suggestions that the ready brain of the artist can easily supplement.

For the paper of pins that should hang by the side of every bureau and dressing table may be readily fashioned by covering two pieces of pasteboard, 5 inches long by 1 1/2 inches wide, with linen, upon which holly, with its green leaves and red berries, has been embroidered. One side of the case should be 2 inches wide, so that the pins can be easily attached, with one extra long loop by which to suspend this useful gift. Of course, the paper of pins may be used at any time.

The up-to-date photograph frame is of heavy cardboard, about 12 inches by 10 inches, with a strip of dark gray or green paper has been pasted. Four hearts, pointing to the centre of the cardboard, each with a circular piece cut out, to allow the photograph to be seen, makes an attractive design for such a frame. A few sprays of mistletoe sketched in each corner is all that is necessary to give a seasonable touch to this gift. Of course a square of cardboard should be glued to the back, with openings at the top for the insertion of the picture.

Crape paper is a thing of the past, and its devotees have been obliged to resort to cardboard, or what is better known as egg-shell paper. Candle shades can be made of this, and are very pretty when decorated with gold, silver or colored paper. Little scrap pictures on the outside, and surrounded by gilded wreaths, form an attractive addition.

Bright Christmas tree ornaments are made by dividing the shells of English walnuts in half, and filling the inside with cotton. Upon this cotton bed were baby dollies, that have been dressed in lace and ribbons, are placed, and the half shells are then tied together with narrow ribbons.

Household Hints.

Silk dresses should never be brushed, but should be carefully rubbed with an old piece of velvet kept specially for the purpose.

A nice steam presser can be made of a short length of curtain pole or broom handle. Select a piece ten or twelve inches long, pad it with flannel and cover with old muslin. Good for waist or sleeve seams.

Properly cooked kidneys are very healthy, but as they are usually cooked they are very indigestible. No meat requires more skill to cook properly. They need to be cooked like an egg. Too much cooking is worse than too little. They harden and become indigestible. Five minutes cooking is better than ten or fifteen, if sliced.

A delicate and nourishing dish for an invalid is white custard made as follows: Beat the whites of three eggs and fill them with cotton. Upon this cotton bed were baby dollies, that have been dressed in lace and ribbons, are placed, and the half shells are then tied together with narrow ribbons.

In the Butterfly Business. Mary Yeomans, an English woman, now resident of California, is developing a profitable industry in catching butterflies. She has some knowledge of butterflies when she went to the Pacific slope. One day a flock of Pansy-like butterflies hovered a moment over her and then flew up the mountain side. She thought she recognized a species long known in the higher Alps, which are very rare and consequently valuable. She followed these honey-loving beauties up the mountain and captured a goodly number of them. She copied in the water color and sent a sketch to London.

Salt for Poultry.

Poultry breeders differ radically about the effect of salt on poultry, some asserting it to be wonderful proper for promoting health and vigor, while others hold to the apparently more sensible view that nature has provided all the chloride and all the sodium that fowls need in their ordinary diet of insects, green and grain. The use of salt in food is an acquired habit, and consequently to us food deficient in salt is insipid; but whole races of people have lived and enjoyed health, vigor and longevity without any addition of salt to their food.

SPOOK FURNITURE.

If Not This, Then What Could It Be?—A Peculiar Story.

A singular story is related by the New Orleans Times-Democrat. It was told by a well-known professional man at a stag dinner, and the unusual experience stated in his own words is well worth repeating: "In the spring of 1892," he said, "I was living in a house in North Rampart street, which I had taken on a one-year's lease, expecting to build. Our family consisted of myself and wife, our little boy, then only 5 years old, and my unmarried sister. The house was a two-story brick, which had been built before the war and the interior arrangement was very simple. The front door opened on a hall, which contained the staircase and ran all the way through on the right-hand side, while on the left was, first, our parlor, then the dining-room, and lastly, a small unused apartment not much larger than a closet. Upstairs were bedroom and in the rear was a detached kitchen. We allowed the little room on the first floor to stand vacant for several reasons. To begin with it was actually too small for actual service, and it was badly lighted by only one high, narrow window, besides some of the plastering had fallen from the ceiling, and I was afraid the rest might come tumbling down on our heads. That was undoubtedly a source of danger, and prevented us from using it as we found it—entirely empty. I suppose the room was constructed originally for a pantry. I have been a little particular in describing these details because, as you will see, they have a direct bearing on my story.

We had been living in the house almost a year," continued the speaker, "when one Sunday in June, as nearly as I can remember, I went with my wife and child to see some friends near Audubon Park. My sister was visiting at Blokt at the time, and we let the servant off for a holiday. We got back at 5 o'clock or thereabouts, and as we were walking toward the house I noticed that the night watchman was standing directly in front of the high window opening into the little disused room on the ground floor. That's rather a cordial invitation to prowlers," I said half joking. "Let's see whether we have available ourselves of it." So when we went inside we walked back together to the last door and I pushed it open. "Why! what does this mean?" I exclaimed in astonishment. There was nobody there, but the room, which had been empty, was now filled with several pieces of furniture. A rough-looking table stood in one corner, with an old-fashioned straight-back chair in front of it and opposite was a small bed cot. There were some papers and other things on the table and a religious print stuck on one of the walls. I started to go in, but my wife held me back. "Don't go in," she pleaded, "the plaster may fall. Those things must belong to the cook. It struck me very strange that the cook should move in there without asking permission, but I noticed that my wife was very nervous so I drew the door to and we went into the parlor. A few minutes later I walked outside to shift the ladder, and as I picked it up I noticed the window. The room was perfectly empty.

"I am not superstitious, and the proof of it is that I thought immediately I was the victim of some practical joke. I reentered the house quietly from the rear and again I opened the door. The room was as empty as a drum, and it was evident at a glance that no sort of trickery was remotely possible. I won't attempt to describe my feelings. I was so shocked, so bewildered, so frightened, to tell you the truth that for the moment I was pulled up to the spot. Then I pulled myself together somehow and went back to the parlor. My wife saw at once that something was wrong.

"And immediately I had a case of hysterics on my hands. That's about all there is to the story. Next morning I examined the place carefully, and found daylight, and it was plain from the dust on the floor that no furniture of any kind had been there for years. We left the house before the end of the week, paying a month's rent on the lease, but because we didn't care to stay in a place where unaccountable things happen. It's bad for the nerves. My wife and I have talked the matter over a thousand times, and we know we both saw the same things. My boy must have seen them, too, for when we went back into the parlor he asked his mother 'whether that wasn't Aunt Hattie's chair.' Aunt Hattie is an old relative of ours, who has a favorite straight-back chair, similar to the one we saw in the room. Of course we have never allowed ourselves to refer to the occurrence before the child, so I am unable to say positively what else he observed. What I saw myself was a room, as distinct as you are at this moment. I even noticed that one of the table legs had been mended with a piece of slate, and my wife remarked the same thing. The house is still standing, and has several tenants. As far as I am aware none of them have ever had any unusual experience."

BLACK EYES.

Treatment for the Kind That Are Not Given by Nature.

When the patient is seen early, before discoloration has set in, cold compresses or evaporating lotions are indicated; this reduces the swelling and limits the subsequent discoloration. But if the patient is seen after he has a fully-developed "black eye," hot compresses and massage are required. The affected portion is rubbed over with vaseline and rubbed for 10 minutes several times a day. By frequent massage and continuous hot applications the discoloration may be almost entirely removed within a few hours. For a professional "black eye" artist use a poultice of the scrapings of a root, which is thought to be bryony root.
