BOTTLE FLOTED NINE YEARS. After having been tossed about on the Atlantic ocean for nine years a note enclosed in a bottle that had been thrown overboard in midocean by Miss Ada A. Griffith, of Newark, while she was returning from Europe, has just been returned to that young lady from Norway.

The bottle was picked up off the Island of Smoelen, near Kristransund, Norway, early last month by a fisherman.

The note was written on the back of a telegram that W. W. Byington, who was in Miss Griffith's party, had received in Ireland. He gave it to her on the steamer, Barrels Versus Cans For Honey. In a long discussion over barrels versus cans in The Bee Journal E. E. Hasty finds several things apparent. One is that that heavy villain, the barrel, is not about to pull a tombstone over his head right away. Another thing is that those who succeed well with barrels from year to year take more care than average humanity will take until pretty sorely whipped with is that the whim of a big buyer who is got to be yielded to. Weight by Inches.

"Forty and a half," sung out the cutter of a Chestnut street tailoring firm as he passed the tape across a customer's chest. Thirty-eight was registered when the measure girded the customer's waist, and then the cutter stepped back and sized up the patron's height as compared with that of the salesman who was recording the measurements. "Your weight is 165 pounds," he said. "One sixty-seven," spoke up the man who was being measured for a coat.

> Weir Mitchell and Whitman. In Dr. Weir Mitchell's book a pleasant story or two is told of Walt Whitman, the writer, to whom some would deny the name of poet, while others regard him as one of the greatest of all poets. One of the characters in the story of "Dr. North and His Friends" says that Whitman was eaten up by his own vanity, regarding everything he did as of such supreme value that he had lost all power of self criticism and could not tell good from bad or indifferent. Once he was asked if he thought Shakespeare as great a poet as himself. He replied that he had often thought of that, but had never been able to come to a decision. He went to a physician upon an occasion, thinking himself seriously out of health. When he learned that his ailment, whatever it was, could be treated best by living as much as possible out of doors without dosing with American Lever Watches, medicine, he was leaving in all good humor when he bethought himself of the physician's fee. "How much will it be?" he inquired. "The debt was paid long ago," said the doctor, who knew and liked his writings. you who are still the creditor." Whitman thanked him and went out. Another patient, a lady, had taken his place when he returned, put his two great hands on the table opposite his medical adviser—he had not stopped to knock or announce himself-and said,

"That, sir, I call poetry." The lady was scandalized by his abrupt appearance and demeanor and asked as soon as the writer had gone for the second time, "Is the gentleman insane?" but, learning his identity, she wished he had asked for his autograph.

Worth the Difference. In S. L. Powers' story at the Middlesex Bar association dinner the lawyer tried the case for the complainant. She sued a middle aged gentleman for der and in a tone of voice that rang breach of promise. He married another girl. The jury retired, and the defendant also went his way. The jury returned, the defendant did not. The jury found for the plaintiff in $800 damages. The lawyer met the middle aged gentleman a few minutes later in the lobby of an adjacent hotel.

"Squire," said the latter, "how did the jury decide?" "Against you," was the answer. "I didn't think they would do that,"

said the middle aged gentleman musingly. "What's the damages?" "That ain't so bad!" he exclaimed, on being told. "Squire, there's that much difference between the two women."-Boston Herald.
