Mummy Paint.

Ground up mummy makes a brown of a certain rare color that nothing else can give. It is on account of the asphaltum in the mummy that this is so. The Egyptians wrapped their dead in garments coated with asphaltum of an incomparably fine and pure quality. This asphaltum as the centuries passed impregnated the tissues of the dead themselves. It turned them into the best paint material in the world. Being exceedingly expensive, it is used only by portrait painters in depicting

In pathos and deep affection no love letter ever eclipsed the one found in the knapsack of a Confederate soldier after the battle of Atlanta. It told all about home and concluded with this poetic effort:

Rousseau's Affectation. Rousseau lived long on his fifth floor in Paris, forgotten by the world which he affected to despise and from affectation really shunned, when an accident happened to him in one of his solitary walks. He was met in a narrow part of the street by M. de Fargeau, driving very fast in his carriage, and in his attempt to get out of the way was pushed down by a large Danish dog running before the horses. M. de Fargeau immediately stopped his coach and hastened to assist the person whom his dog had thus knocked down, but when he saw it was the author of "Emillus" he renewed his apologies and attentions.

The next day he sent to ask after "Tell your master to chain up his dog," was the only answer.

A Royal Clock.

There are nearly 250 clocks at Windsor castle and about 170 in Buckingham palace. One of the most interesting of those at Windsor is in a gilt metal case given by Henry VIII. to Anne Boleyn on the morning of their wedding. It is ten inches high and is engraved with the royal arms of England quartered with those of France. The lead weights are engraved with true lovers' knots and "H. A. Dieu et Mon Droit" at the base. This clock, which at one time became the property of Horace Walpole, was bought by Queen Victoria. It has survived four centuries, but four years only marked the duration of the royal love of Henry and Anne Boleyn.

In the French Capital. Some of the old stories told of the aming tables can hardly be believed nowadays, though they are related in such a cool, matter of fact style by writers of the time as to show that in the eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries the practice formed a part of high class social existence. Captain Gronow relates that, having been appointed to the staff of General Picton, who was then starting for Brussels my agents, "which," he continues, "I took with me to a gambling house in St. James' square, where I managed, by some wonderful accident, to win £600." With this sum he subsequently provided his necessary outfit. When the allies marched into Paris after the battle of Waterloo, Gronow found the Palais Royal a hotbed of dissipation." "There were tables for all classes. The workman might play with 20 sous or the gentleman with 10,000 francs. The law did not prevent any class from indulging in a vice that assisted to fill the coffers of the municipality of Paris." The English visitors were not slow to participate in the play, one officer of the guards obtaining leave of absence and never quitting the Palais Royal till the time came for his return to the regiment. Large fortunes were often lost at gambling in those days, the losers disappearing never more to be heard of. Lord Thanet, for instance, who had an income of $250,000 a year, lost every farthing at play and, concludes Gronow, "I do not remember any instance where those who spent their time in this den did not lose all they possess-

FLOWERS IN MEXICO.

Great Public Decorations. As a people the Mexicans are very fond of flowers, and every village, town and city has its place where flowers are sold, and many of the larger places have extensive flower markets. Often the flowers brought to the market are wild specimens found in the woods and the fields, but all are beautiful. In many of the smaller towns and villages the public parks and the sidewalks of the streets are used as places for the sale of flowers. Everywhere they may be bought at surprisingly low prices. So plentiful are flowers they are used for great public decorations. Sometimes whole parks and the fronts of buildings for many streets are covered with floral decorations on a feast day. Intermarrying Among Rooks. Among the odd habits of rooks is the way that members of the same rookery have of intermarrying generation after generation. The males always choose their wives from their near neighbors, and if one should be so bold as to bring home to his rookery a bride from a distance the other rooks will invariably refuse to receive her and will force the pair to build some way off. In the neighborhood of big rookeries outlying nests of this kind may always be found.

This had to be done at night also, the fire then being detected by its light, and the boys would come from every direction, striking the line of fire at many different points almost at the same time. If the fire had spread much, the men from the different camps would sometimes be many miles from each other, those from the same station going in a squad together. If it was at night the scene would be one of wild and weird grandeur-the great line of fire, the galloping horses as the cowboys approached it, some from camps on opposite sides, their forms and those of their horses standing in relief in the bright glare of the burning grass. Herds of bellowing, frightened, stampeding cattle made the scene more terrible and exciting as they ran before the pursuing, crackling, roaring flames. Above the din could be heard loud shouts of command from leaders of the assembling

The men were not standing still on their horses. The fire was traveling, and they were going with it until ready to begin their attack. Cattle must be sacrificed to save cattle. As soon as an animal fell four cowboys dismounted, and sharp knives and hatchets were at work, and in less time than it takes to tell the slain animal was cut in twain. It is not known definitely how this odd custom originated, but probably some ancient innovator, observing the preservative power of salt in keeping meat sound, reasoned that it would be a good thing to salt down young babies for a few hours and thus impart something of the strengthening and preserving qualities of the salt to the puny offspring of man.
