VERY TRUE

The Reader claims that the great trouble with America is that she falls upon any cure as hysterically and neurotically as she does upon the drug inducing her disease. We go mad over the simple life. We sit on a green divan and babble of green fields. With a Watteau fan in one hand and a glass in the other, we tell each other what a splendid thing it is to go a-shepherding, to dwell close to the earth to live a sweet natural life. We even hire men and women to come and talk to us about these things to chant to us, to lecture to us about them. Sometimes we even try to practice, hurriedly and hysterically, some of these things which we have in pure self-hypnosis persuaded ourselves that we ought to like. Some time ago we mentioned the growing tendency toward true philanthropy among people who had honestly acquired great wealth.

Another striking instance has just come to light and this time the philanthropist is a woman. No words of commendation are too great for daily changes. Mrs. Wm. Ziegler, who will shortly publish, at an expense to herself o $60,000, a magazine for the blind printed in raised characters. It is the intention of this good womanwho, by the way, is carrying out the generous suggestion of her blind son—to distribute this publication, free of cost, to 70,000 blind persons throughout the country. Such acts as this should all the more strengthen one's admiration for the noble qualities of American women of great wealth.

It looks as though the people of the country were going to have a show after all. The Ohio jury has declared the Standard Oil Company guilty, the New York Central R. The fact that out of four days, during which the Fair was on, three of them were rainy, did not seem to deter the people. It is thought that had pleasant weather prevailed Wednesday and Thursday there would have been a record breaking attendance. On Friday the attendance was very small as the hard rain of the night before had made the grounds very muddy. Exhibitors were allowed to take their stock and displays away early in the day. "If you'll watch my feet you'll see how I do it," said she, and lifting her skirt above her dainty ankles she glided across the floor on tiptoe as lightly as a fawn at play. But Sidney Trove was not a graceful creature. The muscles on his lithe form, developed in the school of work or in feats of strength, at which he had met no equal, were untrained in all graceful trickery. He loved dancing and music and everything that increased the beauty and delight of life, but they filled him with a deep regret of his ignorance.

The impassioned utterances of James Otis, Daniel Webster and Patrick Henry were heard in house and field and stable. Every evening women were busy making costumes for a likes you here. I wish we could have play, while the young rehearsed their parts. Polly Vaughn, editor of a paper to be read that evening, searched the countryside for literary talent. She found a young married woman who had spent a year in the State Normal school and who put her learning at the service of Polly in a composition treating the subject of intemperance. Miss Betsey Leech sent in what she called "a piece" entitled "Home." Polly herself wrote an editorial on "Our Teacher," and there was hemming and hawing when she read it, declaring they all had learned much, even to love him. Her mother helped her with the alphabetical rhymes, each a couplet of sentimental history, as, for example:

A is for Alson, a jolly young man; He'll marry Miss Betsey, they say, if he never be able to dance with me."

They trimmed the little schoolhouse with evergreen and erected a small stage where the teacher's desk had been. Sheets were hung for curtains on a ten foot rod.

A while after dark one could hear a algebra and arithmetic and those sound of sleighbells in the distance. dreadful things," said she. Away on drifted pike and crossroad the bells began to fling their music. It seemed to come in rippling streams of sound through the still air, each with its own voice. In half an hour countless echoes filled the space between them and all were as one chorus, wherein, as it came near, one could distinguish song and laughter.

Young people from afar came in cutters and by the sleigh load; those who lived near, afoot with lanterns. Trove called them to order and made turning, with a smile.

A few remarks. "Remember," said he, "this is not our exhibition. It is only a sort of preparation for one we have planned. In about twenty years the Linley school is to give an exhibition worth seeing. It will be, I believe, an exhibition of happiness, ability and success on the "I hope you will love me some time." great stage of the world. Then I bope

Ringing salvos of laughter greeted the play and stirred the sleighbells on the startled borses beyond the door. The programme over, somebody called for Squire Town, a local pettifogger, who flung his soul and body into every cause. He often sored his knuckles on the court table and racked his frame with the violence of his rhetoric. He had a stock of impassioned remarks ready for all occasions.

He rose, walked to the center of the stage, looked sternly at the people and addressed them as "fellow citizens." He belabored the small table; he rose on tiptoe and fell upon his heels; often he seemed to fling his words with a rapid jerk of his right arm as one hurls a pebble. It was all in praise of his "young friend," the teacher, and the high talent of Liniey school.

The exhibition ended with this rare exhibit of eloquence. Trove announced the organization of a singing school for Monday evening of the next week, and then suppressed emotion burst into noise. The Linley schoolhouse had become as a fount of merry sound in the still night; then the loud chorus of the bells, diminishing as they went away and breaking into streams of music and dying faint in the far woodland.
