Dynamiters Must Go to Jail.

Former President Frank M. Ryan, of the Bridge and Structural Ironworkers union, and twenty-three other members of that organization, convicted at Indianapolis in the dynamote conspiracy cases, exhausted their last legal resource in their fight to escape prison when the supreme court of the United States declined to review their cases.

Under the criminal appeals act, a criminal case may not be appealed from the federal courts of appeal to the highest court without a writ of certiorari, which the court refused. Only a pardon can now keep the convicted men from the penitentiary.

Scalds Two Furnacemen.

William Callahan, aged thirty-two years, an engineer, and Dominick Burloa, a fireman, were killed at the Worth Brothers' blast furnace slap dump in Coatesville, Pa., when a traveling crane, known to mill men as the "Black Maria," turned over.

The two men were terribly scalded and the fireman was killed instantly and Engineer Callahan died in the hospital.

The men were dumping flue dirt when the crane went over. Before dumping it is customary to chain the while flying at Salisbury plain, in Wilt- crane down to the rails, but these men neglected to do this.

George W. Vanderbilt, of New York,

George Washington Vanderbilt, multi-millionaire, philanthropist, art collector and owner of Biltmore, the largest country estate in America, was born at New Dorp, Staten Island, New York, Nov. 14, 1862. He was the third son of William Henry and Maria Louise (Kissam) and the brother of William K. Vanderbilt and Frederick William Vanderbilt, and the uncle of the Duchess of Marlborough.

Mr. Vanderbilt's tastes were entirely different from his brothers. He cared nothing for any kind of sport, but was literary and artistic to a degree. From 1888 to 1898 he spent the greater part of his time in traveling in Japan, India and nearly every portion of the civilized globe.

About 1892 Mr. Vanderbilt purchased 30,000 acres of land in western North Carolina, near Asheville, to which he subsequently added until he possessed 100,000 acres, which he Friends of the president admitted named Biltmore. Much of the ground was bought for less than $50 an acre, and $200,000 was spent in mapping and laying out the grounds, through which two rivers flow. The beautiful Swananca cuts off one corner, while the French Broad traverses the estate for ten miles. In one direction Mr. Vanderbilt's ownership extended for twenty miles.

13th—"John Bear" Tomato is the off-spring of two marvelous Tomatoes—one great specialist having devoted 10 years in selecting and improving one parent and another expert devoted five years in selecting and improving the other parent. The "John Bear" Tomato is, therefore, the result of Fifteen Generations of Improvement and selection for Earliness, Quality, Shape, Fruit, Color and Shipping Quality.

14th—As a Packing Tomato "John Bear" is a miracle, they all pack fancy, no seconds, and all pack whole. Peelers can prepare three bushels "John Bear" Tomatoes to one bushel of any other tomato. A large Baltimore Tomatoe Packer had all the "John Bear" Tomatoes he could secure packed separately, running them through a special process for his fanciest trade and his own private use.

FREDERICK COUNTY.

Frederick is next to the largest of the counties of Maryland. In population and wealth it ranks next to Baltimore county. In the fertility and productiveness of its lands it ranks among the first in the Union, and especially in the production of wheat. The area of this great county is 633 square miles. The great body of the people are of German, English and Scoth-Irish descent, the progeny mostly of the early settlers. The land is mostly of fine limestone quality, and the greater part of the county is a valley of rolling lands lying between the Linganore Hills and the Catoctin Mountain. This splendid valley is drained by the Monocacy river, and is one of the best farmed and most highly improved and productive areas of the Union. The great crops are wheat and corn .- Maryland Manual issued by Board of Public Works.

That the memory of Thomas Johnson, first governor of Maryland, has not been honored long row, Senator works to the consince by a creditable statue is difficult to conceive. Is it that Maryland is prone to forget those who ing-especially those in his headshed the greatest lustre on the piece. pages of her history, yet quick to honor others of her sons whose fame was ephemeral? Or is it that the people of the State are as yet ignorant of the important. most important part which this pioneer in the cause of independence, this friend of the "Father of his country," played during the formative period of these United States.

Had Johnson done nothing, had he been a nincompoop, he would have been entitled to some memorial-simply to mark an era in history if nothing else. But as of all the sons of Maryland," and "Feds." as such his memory should be signally honored.

THE CHRONICLE is proud to have been the pioneer in the movement for the erection of a statue to this illustrious man and we trust that the bill for that purpose now before the Legislature will be passed without a dissenting vote.

The Assassins

The Assassins were a religious and military order who came into existence during the eleventh century in Persia and who devoted themselves to the destruction after stealthy approach of all who opposed the Moslem faith in any way. The crusaders met with a branch of these desperate zealots in Syria, and many of the warriors of the cross were slain relentlessly and with mysterious suddenness in consequence. The Tartars exterminated the Persian Assassins in 1256, and feurteen years later the Syrian band of murderers was wiped out by an Egyptian ruler. But the name they bore remains as a designation of dread.

Speed of Birds.

According to C. A. Mitchell, the speed of birds is often greatly over-The swift, for instance, has been credited with a speed of 150 miles an hour, and the popular imagination compares the flight of a sparrow hawk with that of a cannon ball! Independent of aid from the wind, Mr. Mitchell thinks forty miles an hour is about the full speed of a good pigeon flying a long distance. The homing pigeon can be relied on under fairly easy conditions to make sixty miles an hour, or considerably more. On a short course a sparrow hawk can outfly a homer, to catch smaller birds that form its prey.-London Express.

Not an Ardent Lover.

Dr. Brandes, the Danish man of letters, tells a curious story of himself. At the very moment he had appointed to keep a tryst with his sweetheart he was deep in Hegel. "With a passionate desire to reach a comprehension of the truth I grappled with the 'system,' began with the encyclopedia, read the three volumes of 'Aesthetics,' the Phenomenology of the Mind,' then the 'Philosophy of Law' again and finally the 'Logic,' the 'Natural Philosophy' and the 'Philosophy of the Mind' in a veritable intoxication of comprehension and delight." The lamentable sequel was that he forgot all about the young girl to whom he had to say goodby-time, place and promise.

Old Time Newspapers.

The earliest English newspaper, Nathaniel Butter's Weekly News, had several predecessors aboard. The first of these in point of time was the Ordinarij Avisa, the publication of which began at Strassburg in 1609, fourteen years before the appearance of Nathaniel Butter's venture. In 1620 Abraham Verhoeven founded the Nieuws Thij dingen at Antwerp, and this continued to appear weekly for 227 years. The oldest existing newspaper is apparently the Swedish Official Gazette, which dates back to 1644.-London Opinion.

Stories Told About Good St. Patrick

LTHOUGH England, Scotland, France and Wales each lays claim to having been the country of St. Patrick's birth, he belongs to the Irish and no one else. for all his good works were accomplished among them, and all his traditions are associated with them. He loved Ireland, and Ireland loved him and still adores everything connected with his name. He has done more for the spiritual uplift of the country than any other one who has ministered spir itually to it, and, while there may be many myths and legends associated with him in which he had no part, yet they go to add to the romance and beauty of his character and charm and veneration to his name.

St. Patrick was born about the year 372. When he was sixteen years of age he was stolen by pirates, who sold him into slavery in Ireland, where his master employed him as a swineherd in the mountains of Celeamish, in the county of Omstreth. Being warned in a dream by God to run away, Patrick set out for a town on the continent.

Advancement In the Church. Having already passed seven years in Ireland, where he had become per fectly familiar with its language, its manners, habits and customs, he was of course, well qualified to become sattart or theologian abroad, which he and bishop, and then once more, by the authority of the pope, he returned to Ireland to preach the gospel to the people he had come to love so well.

A popular legend relates that the saint and his followers found them selves one cold morning on a mountain without a fire to cook their breakfast or warm their frozen limbs. On heed ing their complaints Patrick desired them to collect a pile of ice and snow balls, which having been done he breathed upon it, and instantaneously it became a pleasant fire—a fire that long after served to point a poet's conceit in these lines:

St. Patrick, as in legends told, The morning being very cold, In order to assuage the weather, Collected bits of ice together,

Then gently breathed upon the pyre, When every fragment blazed on fire "Oh, if the saint had been so kind As to have left the gift behind To such a lovelorn wretch as me Who daily struggles to be free, I'd be content—content with part-I'd only ask to thaw the heart, The frozen heart of Polly Roe!"

The greatest of St. Patrick miracles was that of driving the venomous rep tiles out of Ireland and rendering the soil forever after so obnoxious to the serpents that they instantaneously die on touching it. Colgan seriously re lates that St. Patrick accomplished this feat by beating a drum, which he struck with such fervor that he knock ed a hole in it, thereby endangering the success of the miracle. But an angel appeared, mended the drum, and the patched instrument was long exhibited as a holy relic.

Legend of the Shamrock

The shamrock, or small white clover, is almost universally worn in the hat over all Ireland on St. Patrick's day The popular notion is that when St Patrick was preaching the doctrine of the trinity to the pagan Irish he used this plant, bearing three leaves upon one stem, as a symbol or illustration of the great mystery. To suppose, as some absurdly hold, that he used it as an argument would be derogatory to the saint's high reputation for orthodoxy and good sense. But it is certainly a curious coincidence, if nothing more, that the trefoil, in Arabic, is called "shamrath" and was held secret in Iran as emblematic of the Persian triads. Pliny, too, in his natural history says that serpents are never seen upon trefoil, and it prevails against the stings of snakes and scorpions.

It is said that in the Galtee or Galtic mountains, situated between the counties of Cork and Tipperary, there are seven lakes, in one of which, called Lough Dilveen, it is said St. Patrick when banishing the snakes and toads from Ireland chained a monster serpent, telling him to remain there till Monday.

The serpent every Monday morning calls out in Irish, "It is a long Monday, Patrick!"

That St. Patrick chained the serpent in Lough Dilveen and that the serpent calls out to him every Monday morning are firmly believed by the lower orders who live in the neighborhood of the lough.

St. Patrick is commonly stated to have died at Saul on the 17th of March, 493, in the one hundred and twenty-first year of his age

St. Patrick's Footprint. One of the fond traditions of Ireland points out the impression of St. Patrick's foot upon the hard rocks of the main shore at the entrance to Skerries harbor. About the time this foot. print is supposed to have been made it is told that St. Patrick was journeying toward Slemish, when he was met by a chieftain named Dichu. Dichu. drew his sword and was about to strike St. Patrick when the chieftain's arm became as rigid as a statue and continued so until he declared himself obedient to St. Patrick.

Named For St. Patrick. According to official records, every city in the United States having more than 75,000 population now boasts of a church named after the patron saint of Ireland.

* Snakes In Ireland

Inquisitive Man Wanted to Test Truth of St. Patrick

Legend. TN 1831 Mr. James Cleland, an Irish gentleman, being curious to ascertain whether or not the climate or soil of Ireland was naturally destructive to the serpent tribe, according to the legends related of St. Patrick, purchased half a dozen of the common harmless English snakes in Covent Garden market and took them to Ireland and turned them out in his garden at Rath-Gael, in the county of Down. A week afterward one of them was killed at Milecross, about three miles distant. The persons into whose hands this strange monster fell had not the slightest suspicion that it was a snake; but, considering it a curious kind of eel, they took it to Dr. J. L. Drummond, a celebrated Irish naturalist, who at once said the animal was a reptile and not a fish. The idea of a "rale living sarpent" having been killed within a short distance of the very burial place of St. Patrick caused an extraordinary sensation among the country people

The most absurd rumors were freely circulated and credited. One farseeing clergyman preached a sermon in which he cited this unfortunate snake as a token of the immediate commencement of the millennium, while another saw in it an omen of the approach of the cholera morbus. Old prophecies were raked up, and old parties and sects for once united in believing that the snake foreshadowed "the beginning of the end," though they very widely differed as to what that end was to be. Some more practically minded persons subscribed a considerable sum of money, which they offered in rewards for the destruction of any other snakes that might be found in the district. And three more of the snakes were not long afterward killed, within a few miles of the garden where they were liberated. The remaining two snakes were never very clearly accounted for, but, no doubt, they also fell victims to the reward.

St. Patrick Among the Great.

St. Patrick, even apart from his sanctity and missionary zeal, deserves to rank as one of the great characters of history because of his wonderful energy and success and of the lasting impression that he made upon the earts of the people.-Mgr Lavelle. iem Yerk.

 THE Ancient Language of Ireland

By PATRICK O'SHEA

~ ~ ~ [Copyright, 1914, by American Press Association.] EFORE the Saxons and other Teuton tribes had effected a permanent settlement in England the ancestors of the Irish nation were enjoying the blessings of a Christian civilization. A few centuries before the English language, even in the crudest form, was spoken, Gaelic had blossomed into poetry and Gaelic is admitted by philologists to bear a closer resemblance to the original language of the race than any of the other Celtic dialects. That it has remained unchanged in some respects during more than 2,000 years is evident from the fact, among others, that place names extending from the strait of Dardanelles to the western coast of Europe mean in Gaelic today what they meant to the ancient Celts. It is now generally admitted among linguists that the Celtic languages stand in a much closer relationship to Latin than any other group.

The features that differentiate the Brythonic dialects, comprising Welsh, Breton and Cornish, from the Gaelie dialects, Irish, Scottish, Gaelic and Manx, are supposed to have first appeared after the Romans had left Britain in the year 410. At the beginning of the Christian era the differences between the two groups were probably but slight. Of the Gaelic dialects, to old Irish must be assigned the priority, as both Scottish Gaelic and Manx can be traced back to that original source. Even now the differences between the Gaelic spoken by the Irish and the Scottish Gaels are scarcely greater than those local variations which distinguish the language as spoken in Munster, Connaught and Ulster.

There has been a continuous Gaelic literature from the seventh century, nearly all of it produced in Ireland, though some manuscripts written in that language by Irish missionaries and scholars during that and succeeding centuries are to be found in various European libraries. It was the language which St. Patrick used with such surprising and beneficent effect in converting the ancient Irish from druidism to Christianity. Gaelic was probably a familiar speech to him. even previous to his capture and enslavement in Ireland. That St. Patrick was a thorough master of the language might be inferred from the surprising result of his apostolic la-

The Gaelic of St. Patrick's time was not the rade, uncultured speech of savages, but a highly developed exponent of thought and feeling, capable of expressing abstract notions as well as ideas limited to the daily exigencies of life. The literary and intellectual activity displayed in Ireland, in a period not long removed from the days of St. Patrick, seems to be only exolicable upon the assumption that me tal activity and in a certain sense cholarship were not exotics in Ireland, even at the time when St. Patrick labored there.

During the past three decades the Irish have become keenly alive to the importance of preserving their venerable language from complete extinction. Gaelic is now taught in many of the national and parish schools, and an appeal to Irish patriotism in its behalf has not been in vain. Gaelic professorships have been established in Trinity college, Dublin, in the College of St. Patrick at Maynooth and in the University of Edinburgh, while in Oxford, the University of Paris and other prominent seats of learning professorships of the Celtic languages have been established. In the United States Gaelic chairs exist in Harvard university, in the Catholic University of America at Washington and in Notre Dame university of Indiana.

A PERSONALS.

It is the aim of THE CHRONICLE to publish as many personal and social items as possible, but it frequently happens that those who have guests visiting them, and those who entertain, fail to send a list of their friends, or an account of these events, to this office. Readers who live at a distance are always interested in what is going on "at home," and for that reason, if for no other, this column should be filled every week. It is of course understood that anonymous contributions will not be published. Names of persons furnishing items will be withheld.

The Postoffice Building, the handsome structure of white marble, was formally opened for business by Postmaster C. Wm. Beales on Monday morning, March 2nd. The first mail to be received at the new building came over the Reading railway on the 9.05 train last Saturday evening, Feb. 28. The first sent out from the new office was a closed pouch on the Sunday train, March 1st, the first mail to go out in care of railway mail agent was on the 5.55 train Monday morning. The first piece of mail posted was a post card by little Sarah Black, tenyear-old daughter of George Black, of the postoffice force, addressed to Hon. D. F. Lafean. Last Saturday afternoon a number of lock boxes were rented to patrons of the office. The removal of all postoffice effects from the old place were hauled to the new building Saturday evening and the force was busy for many hours arranging the

An entertaining and very instuctive lecture was given in Xavier Hall on Thursday evening by Mr. John O. Beam of York. The subject was "The Growth of a Great Utility," and Mr. Beam, who is the local manager of the Bell Telephone Co. of Penna. handled the subject in an interesting manner.

For the first time in many years the Eagle Hotel, Gettysburg, is without a proprietor. This famous hostelry was closed Monday when all guests were and the help, with the exception of a watchman and fireman, was discharged. According to advice of the administrator William Hersh, this action was necessary because there are no funds on hand to meet current expenses.

On Thursday evening while Charles Timmins was examining some repairs that are being made at the City Hotel in moving a plank he accidentally fell through an opening from first floor into the cellar. The heavy piece of lumber falling on top of him broke several ribs, causing painful injuries.

The Civil Service Commission has issued a schedule of examinations for fourth class postmasters in all offices where the salary is over $180, and where the incubents were not appointed in accordance with civil service regulations.

Examinations will be held at Gettysburg on April 18, 1914, and the Adams County offices effected are those at Ab bottstown, Aspers, Bendersville, Cashtown, East Berlin, Fairfield, Hampton, Idaville, McSherrystown, Orrtanna, Virginia Mills and York Springs.

Mrs. Sarah Sanders, widow of the late Daniel Sanders, died at the home of her son-in-law, William Heyser, near Gulden's Station on last Wednesday from the effect of a stroke aged about 80 years. She is survived by the following children, Cornelius Sanders, of Fairfield; Calvin, of Hamiltonban township; Robert, of Liberty township; James, of Sibley, Iowa; Mrs. Annie Sanders, of Franklin Grove, Ill.; Mrs. Laura Wag-ner, Mason City, Iowa; Mrs. Wm. SYNOPSIS.

Book I.

CHAPTER I—Rudolph Van Vechten, a young man of leisure, is astonished to see a man enter No. 1813, a house across the street from the Powhatan club. The house has long been unoccupied and is spoken of as the House of Mystery.

CHAPTER II—Several persons at regular intervals enter No. 1313.

"Anarchists!" Tom yelled. A thought had but to enter his head to emerge at his mouth. The other two diners looked up, startled; but perceiving the source of the outburst, they returned to their meals with expressions of patient endurance.

"Yes, anarchists," Van Vechten agreed; "even so. And you would have a nice, pleasant time getting in -or, once in, getting out again."

Van Vechten, picking daintily at his sayomelette souffle, "that a person who identity hidden from the rest of the world, is stimulated to do so by some powerful motive. In a moment they saw and understood. The young man who had acquitted himself so vigorously but a few short seconds previously, was lying at their feet-dead.

CHAPTER IV.

The Face in the Crowd,

Up to the present moment the two young men had been confronted only by a series of mystifying incidents, baffling, to be sure, but bearing nothing sinister upon their face; and unless Van Vechten's more recent perturbation (at sight of the veiled lady) late, was a good deal more indicative be taken into account, neither had the morning's queer events borne any especial significance whatsoever. But here, in the twinkling of an eye, was tragedy stark and grim. Only a minute or two ago and this man was pulsing with the perfect vitality of young, vigorous manhood; now the spark of life was flown-extinguished, as one might puff out the flame of a

Both were profoundly sobered by the shocking end of their brief chase, and even Van Vechten's more active mentality was slow to accept realization. As for Tom Phinney, he merely stood gaping at the still form, his brain for the time being utterly benumbed.

The spell of horror was in a measure broken by a policeman's belated arrival. He stooped and turned up the man's face, and a thin crimson line could be seen staining the left temple. The features were composed, as if death had been kind and mercifully

"Slugged," was the officer's sententious conclusion. Standing upright, he shot a glance round the crowd. "Who

It was at about this juncture, Van Vechten forever afterwards remembered, that he first became aware of the face. He was standing behind Tom, a bit to his left, and opposite the alley mouth. His entire attention, naturally enough, up to this time had been absorbed by the ugly scene at his feet. It was all the more strange, therefore, that his mind should have been attracted and held elsewhere, even temporarily. But nevertheless, all at once he experienced an indefinable, irresistable impulse to glance upward at a certain point in the ring of onlookers. And his regard came to rest upon a particular face.

Straightway he became sensible of an unfamiliar thrill, an abrupt quickening of the pulse, for which he could not in the least account.

Perhaps he would have looked away circumstances might in a measure ac- Both had vanished. count for the horror mirrored there, but not for the despair, the terror, the face's owner into a statue of ice. something beyond and behind the lifeless figure.

It was a girl's face. It was refined and delicate of contour, and was framed in a nimbus of wavy midnight hair. It was, moreover, a strikingly beautiful face-even hauntingly beautiful, for it was a face which the beknew that he had never seen the girl before: still there was something about her that teased and perplexed

He knew dimly, later, that she must have been slender and not very tall. But by the time they turned into for she was standing in the paved alley, on the crowd's outward edge, and it was only an accident of relative po-signify to her more than it gid to anyone else here present?

To one such as Van Vechten, accustomed to reading the all but imperceptible indices of schooled features, this vision was like a naked human soul. Terror and despair parted the delicate pink lips and widened the lustrous dark eyes, they blanched her cheeks and held her breathless, utterly oblivious of aught else save the dead

And now he discovered, suddenly, that he was not the only person interested in the agitated girl. His attention was somehow drawn to a man standing a half dozen or so feet from her; a tall, raw-boned fellow with a powerful frame and a sullen cast of countenance—a countenance just now scratched and bruised, as if its owner had recently met with a severe accident of some kind.

This man was staring angrily at the girl. He too seemed to be oblivious of to seeing things." the dead man, and intent only upon catching her eye. And then the magnetism of his look had its effect; her eyes were drawn to his, and she came to herself with a start. A tinge of color appeared in her cheeks; but Van Vechten observed that the terror and despair still lingered in her eyes.

Van Vechten turned his attention to the man with something like resentment stirring in his bosom, for the fellow's manner suggested a proprietary relationship toward the girl, which, for a reason he did not attempt just then to explain, made him angry. As far as attire went, the man was presentable enough; but Van Vechten was not favorably prepossessed by the sullen, battered countenance, the coarse, sandy hair, nor the big, loose-jointed, powerful body.

Then the cautioning glance was of a sudden accounted for: the man, satisfied that the girl had caught his meaning, showed that he had noted Van Vechten's more than casual regard, by a vindictive look from a pair of steely gray eyes—a look at once so keen and truculent and challenging that its recipient was for the moment dumfounded.

However, Van Vechten's puzzlement over this strange bit of byplay, his engrossing admiration of the girl's beauty, was broken rudely in upon by a sudden confused movement of the crowd. With clanging bell and a noisy clatter of iron-shod hoofs upon the asphalt, a police ambulance drew up at the alley. Phinney and Van Vech-ten were jostled with the others, and the latter's attention was distracted from the girl and the sandy-haired man. He watched a second officer and the young surgeon leap nimbly down; the first to join his comrade in holding the crowd in check, the other to render such aid to the stricken man as any faint indication of life might call for. The motionless figure, however, was beyond the reach of any surgeon's skill; it required but a cursory inspection to determine this. Van Vechten saw, hazily, the young physician indicate the mark on the man's temple, and lay the tip of a forefinger upon another spot behind the left ear, the while he talked in undertones to the two policemen. Then the crowd quieted, and he had an opportunity to look at the girl again. It was with something of a shock

"Why the dickens didn't you want to tell him what you know?" he demanded.

The answer was uttered softly. "Tom, whatever reasons I may have I couldn't put into words. At least, I sha'n't attempt to just now. You surely know what a 'hunch' is; your scheme of life seems largely to be governed by them."

"Huh!" grunted Tom, without understanding, but inadvertently hitting upon a part of the reason for his friend's reticence. "It is the veiled lady in the taxi; you think you are on the scent of an adventure. Rats! No adventure there. She was a lady, I can tell you that."

The other gave him a sharp glance, as if estimating the degree of his perspicacity. How much could Tom tell?

"Tom"-after a moment, "if you must talk-and I know your limitations as compared with your intentions-promise me that you will not mention the lady in the taxi-to any-

Van Vechten's manner was so deliberate and grave that Tom favored him with a questioning stare.

"Why, sure, Ruddy," was the prompt ous as all that. You know her-what?" "No, I don't. But I think that I should-which is quite a different thing. He knew that one phase of the morning's happenings would not be too much for Tom to keep to himself, and for some unexplained reason Van Vechten wanted it to be the mysterious lady of the taxi-cab.

As they were turning into the Powhatan's granite archway, Van Vechten bent an inquisitive glance toward Number 1313. His curiosity was now immeasurably augmented by a fresh interest. And he received another shock—one that fairly staggered him.

For the first time in all the months that he had surveyed the silent facade, he caught a movement at one of the blinds. It was drawn aside, and he was afforded a momentary glimpse of a girl's face-the face of the girl in

But it was not this circumstance alone that stirred him. She was gazing directly at him with a look that was both bitterly scornful and accusing. In this new mien the face was even more beautful than he had dared hope for. But why should she be withering him with a look of contemptuous disdain and rebuke? He had never in all his life seen her face before this

He was actually stung to an involuntary expression of protest.

"My God! Don't-don't look at me

"Er-what?" Tom jerked out, slewing around and following Van Vechten's set gaze.

But the blinds were again closed. "You need a cocktail," Tom counseled pithily after a pause. "This thing of not going to bed at night so as to be up before noon has got you

"My dear fellow," was the composed reply, "you can't imagine how eminently correct you are in that conclusion." And as they passed inside: "No cocktail, though, thanks. And if you do not mind, go talk to somebody else;
