American Plan Goes to Mexican Delegates.

GARRANZA REPLY ON WAY

U. S. to Demand No Indemnity, De spite Great Cost of Vera Cruz Occu

Plans for the pacification of Mexico took a spurt in the mediation race and a working agreement between the Huerta representatives and the Amer ican delegates in the "A. B. C." confer ences at Niagara Falls, Ont., is expected within a few days.

Optimism was as prevalent as was the gloom before Huerta countermand ed his order for the blockade of Tampico and the halting of the rebel am munition on the steamship Antilla.

That affairs were actually "progres sing satisfactorily," as Secretary of State Bryan has been accustomed to describing the situation, was indicat ed by a statement made by Frederick W. Lehmann, one of the American del egates, after a private conference with Ambassador Da Gama, of Brazil chief of the mediating envoys.

"We are getting down to the definite things in our discussions," said Mr. Lehmann. "Minister Naon has said that he thought we could get through within a few days. I hope that we

Several developments have contributed to this feeling that mediation may yet prove successful. First, of course, was the claring away of the war clouds that overhung the harbor of Tampico.

Now comes the delivery of the American pacification plan to the Huerta delegates, with the forecast that it will be welded with the plan already outlined by the Mexican delegates into a substantial form of agree ment.

Then came the authoritative announcement that the United States would exact no indemnity from Mexico company be strict in the use of safety as a result of the occupation of Vera devices and strictly recommended that

The mediators are insistent on their original termsdeclaration of an armistice and broadening the discussion from international to internal questions. The Constitutionalists are willing to meet the mediators on a satisfactory basis as to the latter point, but they are absolutely determined against declaring any armistice.

The Constitutionalists undoubtedly will have a voice in the selection of the man to be provisional president, and at least two of their number would occupy the principal portfolios of the new cabinet. The land and educational questions are simply declarations of principles on which reforms later may be undertaken and do not commit the new government to any definite program.

OFFICE OF 'FURIES' WEALTHY MEXICANS RAIDED BY POLICE

HIGH WAGES FOR BURNING

and Criminal Prosecutions May Be Started.

Scotland Yard raided a secret headquarters of the militant suffragettes in Tuthill street, London, from which the "furies" have been directing their campaign of destruction and retaliation since the offices of the Woman's Social and Political Union was placed under police surveillance.

As the result of evidence discovered in the raid four women were arrested and were arraigned on the charge of conspiracy. They are Emmeline Hall, Nellie Hall, Helen Arnes and Julia

During the hearing they attacked the wardresses and policemen, biting, kicking and scratching them. They howled at the judge and had to be restrained from upsetting the counsel table.

The detectives seized many papers and books, some of which contained the names of those who have been contributing to the militant campaign fund. It is said that criminal prosecutions will be started at once against these persons.

Documents were also found containing plans for burning buildings and committing other outrages and showing that high rewards were being paid for carrying them out.

Fifty detectives took part in the raid, surrounding the building so that none of the occupants could escape. The women had cleverly disguised the nature of the offices and it was only by accident that the Ssotland Yard men found the place. They were on theil of a well known militant leader, who was suspected of being in a plot to do personal violence to the king, when she led them to the building.

The police did not act at once, but waited until a number of women were in the offices. Word had reached the police that the militants had planned a desperate demonstration at the state ball at Buckingham Palace, with the intention of disrupting this aristocratic function. It is believed that deplot were worked out at the Tuthill street place.

Ravages of the "furies" have arous ed public feeling to such an extent that it is expected the session of parliament, which has just begun, will take action designed to curb the growing violence of the women.

One of the peculiar features of the suffrage situation is the attitude now adopted by many clergymen. U. S. AUTHORITY ABOVE STATE'S Federal Power Over Interstate Railroads Upheld.

BOARD BEATEN STATE

Interstate Commerce Commission Is Paramount Where There Is Conflict,

The supreme court of the United tates upheld the interstate commerce commission's orders in the Shreveport rate case, thus placing interstate railroads more under the commission and less under state commissions. In holding that the rate making powers of the interstate commerce commission takes precedence over the jurisdiction of state commission in situations where the reasonableness of interstate rates is called into question, the recision is believed to be one of the most sweeping declarations in favor of the dominant authority of the federal government that the supreme tourt has yet made.

The interstate commerce commis sion found that class and other rates from Shreveport to Texas points were unreasonable and ordered rates to be equalized, so that Shreveport would not be discriminated against in favor of Dallas and Houston.

Justice Hughes announced the decision of the court. He spoke of the unrestricted power of the interstate commerce commission over interstate commerce, saying the commission was expressly created to prevent conflicting state legislation.

Justice Hughes pointed out that congress and not the states had the power to prevent the instruments of interstate commerce from being used so as to injure interstate commerce.

Justice Hughes said that congress, not the states, might prescribe the rule when state and national interests conflict. "Congress is entitled to keep open the highways of interstate commerce in the interest of fair treatment to all persons," said Justice Hughes. He indicated the government must control rates in the interest of interstate commerce. Whether congress reduces intrastate rates to conform with interstate rates, was not material, the court said. Referring to the noted Minnesota rate case, Justice Hughes said that decision was expressly reserved in those cases as to what the outcome would including revolvers and razors, were Mme. WARM WEATHER FAVORS SPREAD OF HOG CHOLERA

Those Wishing To Protect Their Hogs From This Disease Should Take Precautions Now.

The season most favorable to the spread of Hog Cholera is now at hand. Every hog owner who wishes to protect his herd against loss from this disease, should secure serum prompt-ly and have it administered before any sign of contagion becomes evident. It should be known that hog cholera serum is not a cure, but a preventative, and as such should be administered before an outbreak is likely to

The cholera was so prevalent last year that the demand for the serum was greater than either the State Laboratory or the commercial laboratories throughout the country could supply and their output in some cases was bought up and contracted for months in advance. Many hog raisers in Maryland availed themselves of the serum manufactured at the Experiment Station, and a number of reports have been returned from time to time indicating satisfaction, par-ticularly where the serum was used before the diseases had actually appeared in the herds.

The tested serum supplied by the Experiment Station should be used at the rate of 35 c.c. per 100 pounds of live weight, the cost price being 2 cents per c.c. or 70 cents for a 100-pound hog. The serum must be admin-istered by or under the direction of a licensed veterinarian or doctor of medicine. If you have any idea of pro-tecting your hogs against cholera, have them attended to promptly. Do not wait until some are taken sick and the serum can do only partial good in saving those still unexposed to the disease. Write now to the Experiment Station at College Park for a full de-scription of the disease and precautions you should take.

Our Country Children Should Be Edu cated In The Needs Of The Life About Them.

J. E. METGZER, Maryland Agricultural College. The successful school is that one in which the teaching is in terms of the child life. Doubtless the decline of the rural school may be laid to the fact that both the preparation of the teacher and many of the textbooks used are foreign to the common things of helped greatly in keeping the cows in the farm home and life. Teachers who have come to the rural schools and tried to teach the things they were taught in the city schools have found their work a drudgery and the pupils apparently dull and listless. Parents and school officials excuse this deficiency on the part of teachers by saying that they are from the city and are not expected to be familiar with country life.

INEXPENSIVE AIDS IN PRODUCING SANITARY MILK

How the Average Dairyman Can Pro duce a Better and More Profitable Milk At Little Additional Expense.

R. W. LAMSON, Maryland Agricultural Experiment Station.

Recent experiments have proven that the number of bacteria to be found in the average milk product, can be reduced considerably by the use of a few simple precautions while milking. This insures a purer milk to the consumer and a better price to the producer. This result was secured by dis carding the first streams of fore milk mitted. at each milking, and by substituting the small top milk pail for the common open pail, which is quite as easily cleaned and prevents any filth from falling into the milk. The milker wil soon learn how to handle the small to pail, and will find it indispensable is producing a high grade of milk. The tests proved this pail superior as well to several makes of so-called sanitary pails, both in the ease with which it could be cleaned and in cutting down the number of bacteria.

Still more satisfactory results were secured when in addition, the udders were kept clipped and before each milking rubbed with glycerine, sweet oil or vaseline. Clipping by itself a sanitary condition and in reducing the cost of cleaning the animals. A combination of these various methods had the result of reducing the number of bacteria in one case to one-third and in another, to one-tenth of the original count. A more detailed account of the tests may be found in Bulletin No. 186 just issued by the Experiment Station and to be had for the asking.

HEAVY DRAFT HORSES COMMAND TOP PRICES.

See That Your Colts Have Every Chance To Make a Strong, Sturdy Growth

R. H. RUFFNER. Maryland Agricultural College.

The class of horses that pay our farmers best to raise are drafters. A number of good draft stallions are to be found scattered over the State, but the great complaint of the farmer is that when he breeds his mares to a large draft horse, the colts when grown are very little larger than their dams. In spite of this, if our colts were properly fed and cared for from birth, we a class of horses large enough to do our farm work in a more economical way than the thousand-pound horse is do ing it today.

It is far better not to try to raise draft colts if we do not feed them well.

If a mare with a foal at her side, is fed plenty of nutritious and milk produc tained in any suitable size. Further, they hold a good volume of water and are very easily filled. For young second month, the colt should be allowed access to a little grain, from which time on until three years old the colt use its grain feed to the very best advantage. Fully, balf, its growth advantage. Fully half its growth should be made in the first twelve months of its life. About half as much gain is made the second year as the first and half as much again the third year as the second. The time to think then of putting weight on a draft three years of its growth, not after it has finished making an under-sized to be $5773.84. colt is during every month of the first three years of its growth, not after it

The effects of constant or intermit tent semi-starvation are to be seen in every county in the State, yet we have ick County. an abundance of farm feeds in Maryland by a few persons in putting down this nuisance, if some neglect to do their part, for a single pile of horse manure allowed to stand in the open will further orn in the colt that makes the raise of draft board in the corn in the colt that makes the raise of the corn in the colt that makes the raise of the corn in the colt that makes the raise of the corn in the colt that makes the raise of the corn in the colt that makes the raise of the corn in the colt that makes the raise of the corn in the colt that makes the raise of the corn in the colt that makes the raise of the corn in the colt that makes the raise of the corn in the colt that makes the raise of the corn in the colt that makes in maryland from which a suitable selection could be made.

Too much emphasis cannot be put upon this method of avoiding human sickness and suffering from the deadly diseases that the house fly carries.

A bushel of Crimson Clover Seed sown on four acres of ground will increase the succeeding yield of Corn or Cotton about the same amount as would a ton of complete fertilizer applied at the rate of 500 lbs, per acre. A good stand of Crimson Clover turned under will ordinarily double the yield of the crops which follow. The physical condition of the soil is also materially benefited. The Sandy Soils are increased in Humus and Nitrogen Contents. The Stiff, heavy clay soils are rendered more open and friable.

The Stiff, heavy clay soils are rendered more open and friable.
Crimson Clover makes an excellent grazing crop, hay, ensilege and pasture for all classes of live stock. Milch cows make considerably more milk, when pastured on Crimson Clover. It is also valuable as a honey plant, furnishing an abundant supply of nectar in the spring.
Crimson Clover is valuable as a Winter Cover crop. It is especially valuable in Orchards where it is generally plowed under as a green manure crop. The plants retain for the use of the trees the following season much of the plant food, which would otherwise leach out of the ground during the Winter and early Spring. A good stand of Crimson Clover not only reduces the erosion and the gullying of the fields, but on sandy fields, the blowing of the soil by the wind is greatly lessened. The Plants also serve to hold the snow to a greater extent than if the field was left bare during the Winter. More and more each year farmers are realizing the importance and great value of Crimson Clover.

CURB THE TEMPER.

The peculiarity of ill temper is that it is the vice of the virtuous. It is often the one blot on an otherwise noble character. You know men and women who are all but perfect but for an easily ruffled, quick tempered or "touchy" disposition. This compatibility of ill temper with high moral character is one of the strangest and saddest problems of ethics.

Carmens of Seville.

The most astonishing building in the Calle de San Fernando, Seville, is the immense two story baroque edifice that covers more ground than the cathedral plus the court of oranges and serves the purpose of a tobacco factory. The portal is adorned with busts of Columbus and Fernando Cortes, and I wish very much that we had had time to go inside and see these many cigarette girls at their work. As we passed I thought again of Carmen and the story of Bizet's fantastic Sevillian opera, for about 5,000 Carmens or "ci garreras" like Carmen are employed in this factory and attire themselves gowns and fascinating mantillas, with flowers tucked under their ears and coquettishly placed in their hair, very much like the heroine of the opera. Like the opera also, adjoining the factory are the artillery barracks, and one imagines it to be quite possible that some impressionable Don Jose should be fascinated by some of these piquant and pretty Carmens.-From "Royal Spain of Today," by Mrs. Tryphosa Bates-Batcheller.

CONFIDENCE

Merchants Spend Money to Gain It and Hold It

By HOLLAND.

YOUR confidence is an asset that every manufacturer of reputable goods seeks. He spends money to gain it and will take all necessary pains to retain it. Your confidence in the integrity of a manufacturer, your belief that goods bearing a certain brand are always up to standard, is one of the intangible assets known as "good will" and which is regarded by a business man as essential to his success.

Manufacturers spend millions telling you about their goods. They cannot hope to get this money back by the first transactions. They must make you a customer and keep you a customer. To do this they must make honest goods at an honest price.

This accounts for the fact that advertised goods are always of high class. It would not pay to advertise goods that will not bear rigid test.

ADVERTISING CREATES CONFIDENCE.

FREDERICK COUNTY.

Frederick is next to the largest of the counties of Maryland. In population and wealth it ranks next to Baltimore county. In the fertility and productiveness of its lands it ranks among the first in the Union,"and especially in the production of wheat. The area of this great county is 633 square miles. The great body of the people are of German, English and Scoth-Irish descent, the progeny mostly of the early settlers. The land is mostly of fine limestone quality, and the greater part of the county is a valley of rolling lands lying between the Linganore Hills and the Catoctin Mountain. This splendid valley is drained by the Monocacy river, and is one of the best farmed and most highly improved and productive areas of the Union. The great crops are wheat and corn.-Maryland Manual issued by Board of Public Works.

OF COLUMBIA.

Why the time-honored and appropriate custom of making District of Columbia appointments from the ranks of District men was ever ignored still puzzles the Covington to the Chief Judgeship once more renews the query.

Until a few years ago, comparatively, every position of trust, every public office dealing with District affairs, had as its incumbent a man who, through long residence in Washington, was acquainted with District people, familiar with local traditions and cognizant of the needs as well as the desires of the people whom he represented.

District Commissioners in time past were men indigenous to Washington soil, so to say-heavy tax payers; men of affairs, identified with every progressive movement.

The Marshall of the District, the Collector of Taxes, the Recorder of Deeds, the District Attorney, the Clerk of the Court, the Postmaster,—all these were and a perfect justification for going citizens of Washington and men of whom Washington was proud.

District judgeships were filled from the ranks of the local Bar, the Chief Justice often being the high it all he full before!" one time dean of the local Bar.

The Weekly Chronicle These were honors appropriately given to men who earned them, whose capabilities were unquestioned and whose political convictions were not asked.

Gradually and insidiously politics and partisanship crept in and the old order was changed. District people, having no political franchise, began to be ignored and all local appointments became political plums.

As long, however, as the pre-Entered as second-class matter January 1, 1909 at the post office at Emmitsburg, Md., under the Act of March 3, 1879. a new order of things inaugurated the people of the District will welcome the appointment of Mr. Covington. They will clasp hands with the people of Maryland and each congratulate the other that one who has been so closely associated with the citizens of Washington and one so familiar its laws with has accepted the high office of Chief Justice of the District Supreme Court.

JUDGE BUFFINGTON.

A judicial advancement that naturally interests the people of Emmitsburg is that of Judge Joseph Buffington who upon the retirement of Judge Gray has become presiding Judge of the circuit of Western Pennsylvania.

In chronicling his promotion the Pittsburgh Dispath pays Judge Buffington this well-deserved tribute:

Since the time, years ago, when Judge Buffington entered upon judicial service, he has grown in public and professional estimation. His services as Judge have been industrious and earnest. His judicial rulings have not only respected the law, but have nearly always represented the law as harmoniously construed in accord with the need of the people and the advancing spirit of the age. His devotion to the duties of his one and a half fluid ounces of spirits of profession obtained proper notice in his turpentine. Put all in a bottle, cork advance from the District to the Circuit Court, and they are worthy of further notice, when he is advanced to the presiding position in that court.

The people of Western Pennsylvania will take satisfaction in Judge Bufflington's rise. They regard him as worthy APPOINTMENTS IN THE DISTRICT of still further advancement and generally entertain the hope that things may shape themselves to favor another pro-

When the Trouble Started. Slagg had lived all his life in the city. Never had he seen anything in the vegetable line except factory made grass until he decided to spend the summer working on Cousin Hiram's farm. Not knowing much in the way of driving a hoe or a harrow, the new farmhand was put to work whitewash ing the outbuildings, while the rest of the staff took to the cornfields. When Cousin Hiram returned to the house at noon Slagg was sitting on the woodpile looking as if he had been crawling on his face through ten acres of sand burrs.

"Give me my money, boss," said he in a mournful voice. "I'm going back to town.'

"What have ye been doin' ter yerself?" asked Cousin Hiram, wonderingly sizing up the new hand. "What's happened? "I don't know exactly what happened," was the dejected reply of Slagg. "but it started when I tried to whitewash that thing they call a beehive.' -Philadelphia Telegraph.

Drilling Holes In Steel. When holes are drilled and then reamed in soft steel bars the metal materially increases in strength, the average limit of elasticity improving 12.3 per cent and the average tensile strength 9.2 per cent. This phenomenon is explained thus: In putting to gether the parts of a test piece broken under tension it is found that the two ends do not coincide and that, while the edges make a good contact, the central parts do not, thus indicating that the rupture begins at the center and that the edges have a higher ten sile resistance than there is along the axis of the bar. Therefore, if several holes are drilled so as not to injure the material too much, as might be the case with punching, the average ten sile strength of the section across the holes per unit of metal will be higher than before the holes were drilled. since each hole creates, so to speak

A man, a new acquaintance, once told Dr. Joseph Parker of London that he had put a five pound note in the plate instead of the half sovereign he had intended.

"Indeed, no," said the guest. "Because," said Parker, "I remember that one of my congregation once did It was a woman, and she came to the vestry after service one Sunday morning to tell me that a week before she must have put a sovereign in the plate instead of a shilling, because she could not account for the loss other wise. But she didn't get the change from me," said the doctor, with a smile. "I told her it was too bad, of course, particularly as God would only give her credit for the shilling."

To Transfer Printing. Anything printed on paper with ordinary printer's ink can be transferred to a clean sheet of paper in the follow ing manner: Take three drams of common yellow soap and dissolve it in one quart of hot water. When cool add it and shake well together. Take a sponge or soft brush and apply some of the solution to the printed surface. Let it soak for a few minutes. Lay it face down upon the paper on which the transfer is required and press both together evenly between the leaves of a thick book placed under weights. In a time varying from half a minute to several hours, according to the new ness of the printed original, it will be transferred in reverse.

marrying his whole family," said a bride the other day. Yes, but you are. When you get married you do come into relationship with his whole family, and you can't help yourself. I have known a number of cases in which some "sniffy" bride or bridegroom tried to ignore certain mem bers of the "married into" family and later had to be closely connected with them. There was civility on both sides, but the early break could never be quite covered up, though the one who made it would have given any thing to have it forgotten. When you get married, unless there are actual eriminals there whom duty would forbid you to recognize, accept cordially all of the family into which you are going. Don't be mean and airy about it. The Caspian Sea Puzzle.

Should the tideless Caspian sea be really drying up it is only continuing the process which has been puzzling scientists for the past hundred years. The great dried up salt lakes to the east, south and north of the Caspian no doubt once formed part of the great lake that remains, and Russia may yet be able to build a railway across her inland waterway. But, if inland seas dry up, land elsewhere is sinking under them. Where are the ancient ports that Agrippa used? Under the waves of the Mediterranean. No place in the world seems to have suffered so much from the sinking of the land as the bay of Naples, that paradise of the submarine archaeologist, who is even now making fresh discoveries of buried suburbs and massive blocks of masonry with the stone rings for mooring the Roman galleys. But he has to dive to get at them.-London Citizen.

Home Comforts at Sea.

The circumstances in which one travels on the ocean have vastly improved during the past twenty years. Spring mattresses and brass bedsteads have replaced the old wooden bunks, improved systems of heating and ventilation have been introduced, sanitary arrangements are greatly superior, both in quantity and in quality, while the furnishings of the public apartments and the attractions of the dining saloon vie with those of the finest hotels on shore. Third class passengers have now separate cabins for four, six or eight persons each in place of large open 'tween deck spaces filled with tiers of iron beds and accommodating hundreds. In place of benches and ta bles along the sides of their sleeping quarters separate dining saloons smoke rooms and music rooms are pro-

It Gets the Criminals. According to the Chinese method of criminal prosecution, a man is responsible for the crime he may have com mitted personally, but if he chooses to escape justice by running away from the place where the deed was committed then the remaining members of his immediate family are held and punishod in lieu of the real culprit. This may attracting real criminal back to the scene of his crime, but it appeals to the religious side of the man's superstitious nature. According to their religion, the man who forsakes his parents when in peril will find his soul sailing around through hades without chart or compass for all eternity. In view of this, compliance with the law is very prompt, for John Chinaman does not care to take the desperate chance.

Rain Catches In Bermuda. Notable among the landscape features of Bermuda is the "rain catch." There is no other good water. All the water gained from wells is brackish. So the people either use their whitewashed roofs as a means to catch rain water or they build a big open "catch" on the hillside, with a covered cistern at its foot, into which the rain thus collected runs and is stored. The soil is scraped away from a large surface of the white coral rock that underlies all the island. This surface is cemented and whitewashed, and a low wall built on three sides with the reservoir or tank at the bottom.

Piano Strings. The tone of a piano or of an individual string of the same will be higher in a cold room than in a warm one. The reason is not far to seek. A stretched string gives out a certain pitch only when it is of a certain length and a certain tension. This is shown in the laboratory by hanging weights on a string and plucking it. The more weight hung on the string the higher the note given out. Now. the strings of a piano are metal wires, all of which contract when cooled. As they are fastened at both ends, however, they remain the same length, but just tighten up-that is, the tension in creases just as if an extra weight were hung on the end. Of course, the effect is not great save in a very cold room, but even a small variation in tone may be detected by a good musician. This is probably one reason why certain prima donnas always insist on singing in a room of a certain temperature, which, of course, is the temperature at which the plano was or ought to be .- New York World.

Cyrus a Canal Builder.

In speaking of the river regulations of the ancients Sir William Willcocks, the noted English engineer, said: "Cyrus the Great controlled the Gyndes, a tributary of the Tigris, in a truly original manner. Babylonia was already peopled and lands were needed for his Persian troops. The Gyndes discharges 40,000 sectional feet and runs thirty feet deep in a sandy and mobile bed. He could build no regula tor, so he dug thirty canals, divided the waters of the river among them, closed the river by an earthen dam and completely controlled it. As he could never have induced his wild soldiers to dig these canals for any useful purpose, he took advantage of the fact that his fa vorite horse had been drowned in the flood and urged his soldiers to dig the canals and dissipate the waters of the river in such a fashion that it could never again drown a horse.-Engineer ing Record.

Then follows an introduction to Jim who declares with emphasis, "Yes, sir. I am within just three feet of a mil lion dollars." A year later, happening into camp again, our engineer encounters Jim, sitting dejectedly on a bench in front of the same dispensary. After a drink in reply to an inquiry about the great ore body Jim stated with sad emphasis, "Partner, I'm a million feet from $3!" - Engineering and Mining

THE MAN WITH THE WOODEN LEG

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1913, by Associated Literary Press.

Of the six passengers who alighted from the stagecoach at the Acorn inn, n Blissfield, one April evening, one was a man with a wooden leg. The stranger registered as John Gordon of Chicago, and, when he gave out that he might remain in Blissfield for several weeks, everybody wondered what business could have brought him there. After three or four days it leaked out that the man was a government agent who had come to watch the men who had been stealing timber off certain lands. That gave him increased respect, and yet even I, a schoolboy, noticing the man's steel gray eyes, firm set jaw and thin lips, could have told that he was cruel, if not bad hearted.

He had lost his left leg at the knee, and the substitute was not a cork leg, but a crotch and a stick-the plainest and cheapest sort of an affair. His dress was also very plain, his speech that of the common order.

"The man with the wooden leg," as he came to be generally spoken of, had been in town about a week when one of the leading merchants was robbed of about a thousand dollars in cash. The local constable did a great deal of talking, but struck no clew, and in his desperation he asked Gordon to assist tomers who have bought them him, believing no doubt that a government officer of any sort ought to be more or less posted in detective work. Gordon seemed to think the matter over for awhile and then replied:

"The case is as plain as the nose on your face. The merchant's son took the money, and after this thing quiets down he will go off to St. Louis to have a good time. I'd stake my life he's got every dollar of the missing cash securely hidden away somewhere."

Ten or twelve days passed, and then came a terrible tragedy.

The richest man in Blissfield was Squire Higgins. He owned the woolen mills, a store and several houses and had money to lend. He was a widower, but lived with his son and wife. His room was on the ground floor, while all others slept upstairs. He had no safe, but kept his money in a tin box on a shelf in a closet. He had a bank account over at Medina, ten miles away, but often had $1,000 or more in the house. One evening when the others were ready to go to bed he announced that he had some business to attend to and was seated at his desk in the sitting room when the others retired. About midnight the daughter-in-law heard a fall and a groan downstairs, and when her husband went down to investigate the squire was found dead on the floor, having been stabbed no less than five times in the body

House and grounds were searched, but the murderer had escaped, and he had also taken with him the cash box, which contained about $700.

Gordon seemed to take a lively interest in the murder. No outside help would have been called in and the murderer might have gone his way but for the arrival of another stranger. He was, as it happened, a first class detective, who was just then employed in tracing a missing man. The crime was a day old when he reached Blissfield. He heard all the particulars from the loungers at the inn and then volunteered to look the ground over. This was a courtesy on his part which the sheriff could not refuse, and after supper he was taken to the

The tracks in the garden were still fresh when the detective took hold of the work, and in three minutes he had made up his mind to something. He had little to say to any of the men, explaining that he had not yet completed his investigations, but as he left the house to return to the inn, while I followed at a respectful distance, he turned down a quiet lane, beckoned me to follow, and when we were alone he lighted his pipe and asked:

"Boy, do you know any man in town who is lame in the left leg?" I answered in the negative, but added that there was a man with a wooden leg at the inn. He at once began to question me about this man, not yet having seen him himself, and I told him all I knew and all I had heard. Of course he told me nothing in return, though I heard him chuckling to himself, and his face betrayed the fact that he was pleased about something. I acted as his guide to the jail, and when in the presence of the sheriff he

"I want you to go with me to overhaul the man with the wooden leg at

The sheriff, detective and constable. with two or three other citizens, proceeded to the inn and to Gordon's room. He was cool and quiet and offered cigars all around, but those who were watching him saw him grow pale as the sheriff began by begging his pardon and hoped no offense would be taken, but would he let them look at his wooden leg.

Gordon faltered and bluffed and was reaching for his pistol under his pillow when the detective seized him. When they had him securely bound they unstrapped his wooden leg, and, lo, his left foot was there as right as any

Yes, he was the man who had robbed the merchant and the postmaster, and he was also the murderer of Squire Higgins. On the evidence worked up by the detective in a couple of hours' time Gordon was tried, convicted and hanged, and every dollar of the stolen money went back to the rightful own-

AT 99 CENTS You can get here a wonderful House Dress. Many styles to choose from and such styles as you have never seen for such little money. The making alone would cost the price, to say nothing of the good material. Checks, Stripes, Plain Colors. Just what you want to save labor. Think of it-99c.

MEN'S NEWEST NECKWEAR Are having a time of their own in our south window. We question if you ever saw so much quality and style for 50 cents. They are just fresh from the creating section and are crisp with newness. The folks who keep in close touch with the best yet, say they are just right. Select yours early.

A PERSONALS.

000000000000000000000000 It is the aim of THE CHRONICLE to publish as many personal and social items as possible, but it frequently happens that those who have guests visiting them, and those who entertain, fail to send a list of their friends, or an account of these events, to this office. Readers who live at a distance are always interested in what is going on "at home," and for that reason, if for no other, this column should be filled every week. It is of course understood that anonymous contributions will not be published. Names of persons furnishing items will be withheld. Misses Ruth Linn and Ferne Snook

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I—Rudolph Van Vechten, a young man of leisure, is astonished to see a man enter No. 1313, a house across the street from the Powhatan club. The house has long been unoccupied and is spoken of as the House of Mystery.

CHAPTER II—Several persons at regular intervals enter No. 1313.

CHAPTER III—Van Vechten expresses concern to his friend, Tom Phinney, regarding the whereabouts of his cousin and finance, Paige Carew. A fashionably attired woman is seen to enter the House of Mystery. A man is forcibly ejected from the house. Van Vechten and Tom follow the man and find him dead in the street.

CHAPTER IV—Van Vechten is attracted by the face of a girl in the crowd of onlookers surrounding the body. Later he discovers the girl gazing at him with a look of scorn from the windows of the mysterious house.

CHAPTER V-Detective Flint calls on Van Vechten to get his version of the chapter VI—Tom Phinney goes alone on a yachting trip. He recognizes among some persons in a passing motor boat two men whom he had seen enter the House of Mystery. He sees one of them, a Mr. Callis, on shore later and follows him. Tom is seized, blindfolded and taken to a house. He hears a girl named Jessie, evidently the daughter of the man in authority, question his captors. A sweetvoiced girl later protests against the roughness of his captors.

Book II.

CHAPTER I—Van Vechten calls on his uncle, Theodore Van Vechten, big man in Wall street and known as the "Man of Iron," in search of information regarding the whereabouts of Paige Carew.

CHAPTER II—Detective Filint shows Van Vechten a gold mesh purse found in the House of Mystery. Van recognizes it as belonging to Paige Carew.

CHAPTER III—The sweet-voiced girl helps Tom Phinney escape, but refuses to disclose her identity. Tom declares he will meet her again.

CHAPTER IV—Detective Fifth twife van Vechten he has a theory that Paige has been kidnaped. Van goes to lay the case before his trade CHAPTER V—Messages are sent to Europe in an effort to trace Paige. Tom tells Van Vechten he is in love and relates his adventure.

CHAPTER VI—A message from London reports that two ladies resembling Miss Carew and her companion. Mrs. Devereaux, sailed for New York some time previously. A reward of $2,500 is offered ladies visited the English home of Ten-ple Bonner, owner of the Front of Wys-tery. Flint has a theory that they are connected with the mystery of No. 1313.

CHAPTER VIII—It is recalled that Temple Bonner was in love with a daughter of Compton Schuyler, who married Max Willard. The other daughter married a man named Devereaux. Bonner and Willard were intimate friends. A search is started for Willard.

CHAPTER IX—Van Vechten enters the House of Mystery by the back door in time to hear John Callis threaten a girl. He interferes and helps the girl escape, but is rendered unconscious in the struggle with Callis.

CHAPTER I—Tom Phinney gets a job as master of Brownlow's yacht Kohinur which has been chartered for some mys-terious mission.

CHAPTER II—The charterer and his friends board the yacht at night and Tom hears the voice of the unknown girl and also of a man involved in his adventure

CHAPTER III—Tom finds the girl more beautiful than he had anticipated. The charterer turns out to be Max Willard.

CHAPTER IV.

An Interlude.

As Tom thus voiced his astonishment at the disclosure of the old man's identity, there was a sudden swish of skirts, and the girl disappeared down the companionway. She left with a marked haste that might have been significant to the skipper, had be been in any state of mind to be impressed by such suggestive occurrences. In a moment a series of feminine exclamations, indicative of surprise, came dully to his hearing; but his attention was still held by the penetrating re-

'Your manner, Captain Phinney," remarked Willard in a quiet voice, "implies that you are familiar with my

The statement concluded with a note of interrogation; but Tom stood tongue-tied. What should he say? He could not tell this man that at the present moment a detective was exceedingly anxious to find him-at least, not without entering into Van Vechten's concern in the search. So he moodily shook his head.

After a pause-'Have you any place we may retire to for a quiet talk?" Willard inquired in the same tone. "The chart-house," vouchsafed Tom, uneasily moving in that direction. Once seated, there followed a long silence in the course of which Tom grew more and more restive beneath the keen look of the magnetic eyes. Never had he been more uncomfortable in his life. By and by Willard spoke, deliberately, but none the less without my express permission-nor earnestly.

"Look here, captain, frankly, are you spying on me?" "Moses and green spectacles, no!" blurted Tom. His astonishment at the question was so unmistakably genuine that the other continued for a time to watch him in silence. It would have been plain to an outsider that the old- ably. er man was deeply perplexed and troubled, and was trying to hit upon a means of coming to some sort of understanding. Presently he drew a sigh and leaned back in his chair. "I can believe that," he said wearily. "You are not the sort of which spies silent again, and for a space pondered; then abruptly leaning forward, he once more fixed Tom with his keen look.

"You thought—last night," he began, "that I didn't recognize you. But I did; I possess certain unusual powers, an ability to see distinctly in the faintest light being one of them. You are the young man who followed Callis at Rocky Cove Monday night. Now why did you do that? I have a right to know."

In the face of the older man's direct manner, Tom's nervousness left him. The powerful personality was not without its influence; but Tom was not the sort of chap that any man could overawe, and his discomposure was chiefly owing to his ticklish position, and his ready recognition of the fact that it was not the sort of situation that he was equipped to cope with.

However, he was strongly attracted in spite of his oddity, distinctly likable about the man.

"Look here, Willard," he began, meeting the other's regard with a level look and addressing him with a plain bluntness, "your name is not at all familiar to me. I'll tell you just why I followed that chap Monday night, and why I was surprised when you handed me Brownlow's note. You'll see then that there are some things I'm entitled to know as well as yourself. So we'll understand one another right here and now.' Willard nodded, but said nothing.

"Do you know the Powhatan club?" Another silent nod; but the eyes betrayed a light of dawning comprehension.

"I'm a member," pursued Tom, "and the mysterious way in which you people acted in that old house across from us made us all curious. Why shouldn't it? We talked about it and wondered, time and time again-who the tenants were; what they were up to, and all that sort of thing. Candidly, it didn't look right.

"Now, I've seen you come and go at that house; I knew that you belonged and continued on his way. there. I saw the chap who was killed last Sunday come out of the same house. I recognized you in the motorboat Monday evening, and when I aftterwards saw the fellow you call Callis, why, of course I followed him. Anybody would.'

Willard sat watching him with disconcerting intentness. He now said:

"Then your love of justice overbalances your sense of caution?" "I like to see a square deal, if that's what you mean." Willard now rose to his feet.

"Thank you for your frankness, captain Phinney," said he with an air of for him mightily. relief. "That explains matters. I am sorry I can not be so frank with you in return. But I can't just at present; too much is at stake." With a tired gesture, he brushed back a lock of so time hung heavily upon the skipwhite hair that had fallen upon his

If you betray me, if you disclose anything you may discover on board this yacht, you will be the instrument of such a miscarriage. I must remind you that you deliberately accepted the unusual conditions of your employment, and that as a man of honor you can not do otherwise than remain loyal to your employer."

Tom himself was now standing. "Dashed if I don't believe you!" responded he in his impulsive fashion. 'But-say-Mr. Willard-hang it all! That poor chap who was killed: that sort of thing, you know, sticks in a fellow's crop.'

The jet eyes were as steady as jewels upon the masks of a graven

"Again I shall have to ask you to take me on faith for the time being," responded Willard, unmoved. "I'll give you my word—should you ask me one week from tonight, I shall tell you exactly how that regrettable affair happened. You will hold me blameless.'

"Did you do it?" "I did not."

"That's enough as far as you and I are concerned. Now then, on my part, I haven't the least desire to meddle in your affairs. I know my place and my duties, and I have enough to keep me pretty busy without bothering about anything else. But if I can't help seeing that things are not strictly straight-wrong, you know—it will be a part of my duties to interfere. Satisfactory?"

'Perfectly so. It's good that we had this talk. Good morning." Tom had only begun stoking his pipe when the Kohinur's charterer reappeared in the doorway. Said he: "By the way, I forgot to say that I to go ashore. I have to go down into the city myself. Will you give the necessary orders for the launch to take me to the landing?"

"I understand, sir. I'll have the launch manned at once.'

"It's uncertain when I shall returnlate this afternoon or evening, prob minating.

Reflection prompted action, and action made him forget his own dejection. He walked forward, and in a moment his regard fell upon the ungainly form of John Callis sprawled against the rail, motionless, his eyes staring sullenly cityward.

There was something in the fellow's attitude that made Tom eye him narrowly. He too seemed dejected; in his bearing there was nothing bellicose now; he suggested to Tom the idea of a prisoner gazing upon the freedom that is not for him. Three other men, identified as members of Willard's party, were mingling with the crew in a friendly fashion and enjoying themselves; but John Callis seemed apart, isolated, utterly oblivious-perhaps scornful—of his surroundings.

Wondering not a little at this cirsumstance, Tom would have passed toward Willard; there was something him by without a word; but just as he got behind the man, Callis stood upright with a sudden movement and struck the rail a resounding blow with his clenched fist, at the same time spluttering an oath. He favored Tom with a baleful glare.

"How far," he remanded rudely, "is it to that landing?"

Tom coolly looked him over. He had no reason to be favorably disposed toward the fellow, and he frowned at his present manner; but he had a measure of dignity to maintain and could not afford to quarrel with him now. So he replied curtly:

"Not over a hundred fathoms." Then all at once he understood. "If you're thinking of swimming it, don't try," he added. "Orders are that nobody's to leave the boat without Mr. Willard's consent.

"I know it cursed well," he snarled. "But I'd show you what his or anybody else's orders amount to if I could swim."

Whereupon he slouched back to his former attitude, completely ignoring Tom's presence, who merely remarked: "Good thing you can't then,"

The three other men-all husky young chaps-were civil enough and respectful of his authority. He spoke to them only briefly and in a general way.

He sought out his first officer, who, save for his one failing, was not only All the time Tom had been speaking a first-class navigator, but decidedly a companionable fellow. Of an excellent and wealthy family, his idea of making amends for the wretched episode that had occasioned his disgrace, was to foster and encourage its cause in secret. 'Winnard will do." "O. K. Break him in."

They talked in a desultory way until the steward announced luncheon. Once seated at table, and immediately he was given an illustration of the general fickleness of feminine nature. surdly vain pinnacle of joy. "Were you?" he cried ecstatically.

'Now I call that bully! Where are the other ladies?"

At any it might be that they were unfamiliar rate, he thus accepted the conclusion, with customs on shipboard, and here was an opportunity to make them feel at ease. "Police!" she exclaimed in a shocked voice. "Is it really as bad as that?"

"Shows," said Tom sagely, "just how much one thoughtless girl can turn things topsy-turvy. . . . But, hang it all; I'm sorry you're not enjoying your luncheon. Feeling ill?"

The girl had pushed back her plate, and she now sat silently contemplating her hands clasped upon the tableedge.

"I-I-believe I am not feeling very well," she replied faintly, meeting his anxious look with eyes so somber that Tom was alarmed. "A touch of headache-don't let me spoil your appetite—it will be gone in a minute." And she mustered up the ghost of a smile.

Tom, though, continued to watch her, his own countenance reflecting his suddenly awakened concern, while her smile grew until presently she was apparently her normal self again. "There!—it is gone!" she lightly de-

"Permit!" she exclaimed uncomprehendingly. Tom's fears were realized; she had none, and he groaned inwardly-"I don't understand."

He all at once felt as unhappy as Mercer looked. Wheeling upon that light. gentleman, he snapped in an undertone: "Beat it!" and the first officer and the two sailors vanished with astonishing agility. "You see," once more addressing the girl, "it's this way: Last thing Mr. Willard told me before he went downtown himself was that nobody was to come aboard or go ashore without his express consent. Mr. Brownlow instructed me to the same effect. Now, if you haven't something to show that it's all right, you see what a fix you are placing me in, don't you?"

The girl straightened, and Tom could feel the angry glance that swept him. He looked helplessly off toward the landing, conspicuous under the blaze of electric bulbs, with a faint hope that Max Willard would appear and end the situation; but there was no sign of him.

"Captain Phinney"—her tones were now biting-"am I to understand that you will not allow me to go to-go ashore simply because I haven't a scrap of paper from a person who has no control whatever over my movements? It's too absurd! You are downright insulting to demand such a thing when you have my word that it is perfectly proper for me to go."

Tom squirmed miserably. "Maybe I didn't express myself very well—" he began. "You did not, indeed!" she indignantly agreed. "It's highly important -but I'll not trouble to explain. I want to be taken over to the landing at once."

The unfortunate skipper's predicament, as they say in newspapers, "can be better imagined than described." During a silence that seemed age-long, his mind remained an utter blank; he was sensible of a numbness stealing over him, and of a most outlandish desire to swear. To tell the truth, he so nearly let slip a shaft of heated profanity that his tongue was at last loosened.

"Delia," he pleaded in desperation, "listen to me a moment. On shipboard orders are orders, and they are meant for just one thing-to be obeyed. The practice is so ingrained in every seafaring man that he never even thinks of shirking or compromising. Can't you at least wait a little bit until Mr. Willard comes? I don't doubt but that it will be all right."

She was now angry through and through.

"Then why do you stand there talking like a simpleton?" she flared at him. "It's not a question of whether can or cannot wait—I don't propose her, quite beside himself once more. "Dear girl, listen to reason." Gradually he was drawing her to him. Then both were stricken motionless and silent. There is no way of ascertaining how this episode would have ended had it been permitted to continue its natural course. Perhaps it had already ended. As far as this irate young lady was concerned, perhaps it was all over with Tom, and he was properly branded an outcast and a pariah. However that may be, right at this juncture or Night. there came an interruption sufficiently startling to jolt both of them from present one. From somewhere forward, without the slightest warning, there broke He descended to the main deck and forth a noise of scuffling and of a man cursing. The intent behind the tumult was so sinister and so wickedly purposeful, that, in terror, the girl instinctively shrank close to Tom. He passed a protecting arm about her, and both stared intently forward, try-pointed down toward the water. "There, sir," he replied. "A fellow wanted to jump overboard—the blame fool-and Mr. Mercer tried to hold him. Before anybody could help him, the man knocked him down and went over the rail. Mr. Mercer went right over after him."

Already life-buoys had been tossed to the struggling pair in the water, and a boat was being rapidly lowered. Tom glanced over the faces in the dim star-

"Who was the man?" he asked. A moment's silence, then some one spoke up: "The big fellow called Callis, sir.

"Lively, men!" Tom shouted. "He can't swim!"
