MT. ST. MARY'S FINISHES ANOTHER YEAR Brilliant Exercises Mark The One Hundred And Sixth Annual Commencement Week at The Mount.

Surely did Nature provide a week of proverbially rare June days for the one hundred and sixth annual commencement at Mount Saint Mary's College. The threatening sky of Sunday, coming after a several weeks' drought, suggested a downpour but there was no precipitation and by Monday the air was clear as a crystal and remained so until "Exi" was over.

It was probably the most largely attended closing ever held at Mount Saint Mary's. Two weeks before the exercises guests began to arrive and by the first of the week friends of the students literally poured in from the North, East, South and West. Many large touring cars brought parents and relatives of the boys from distant cities.

The Baccalaureate sermon by Dr. James F. Callaghan, of St. Malachi's Rectory, Chicago, Ill., marked the opening of the Commencement programme. Dr. Callaghan spoke, in part, as follows:

Baccalaureate Sermon.

I wish to thank the faculty of the College for the honor conferred on me in inviting me to speak to you and hope that I may repay them in some manner by expressing some thought or even one word that may be of benefit or service to you.

This morning I offer my congratulations to you young men of the class of 1914, on the fact that you have successfully completed your College Course, and are thereby entitled to have your names enrolled on the list of graduates of this grand old Mountain College. Surely you have joy in your hearts these days because you have gained this honor, yet you are not alone in your joy. The fact that you are about to be crowned with this distinction and privilege is testimony in itself that you deserve it, and to have deserved it implies that you have labored in a greater or lesser degree for some years. Because you have worked, because you have shown character, you are now about to receive your reward, and because of the reward resulting from years of application and labor and study in the arts and letters and sciences, and because of the constant progress you have made in building up those virtues, which make a real gentleman, every former graduate, your companions, your friends, your professors and above all your parents, are partakers in your joy. But while this joy and happiness is filling your hearts these last few days of your college life, there must come into your minds the question, the most serious question to you now, what of the future? The past whatever it may have been, while it must stand as your individual history, is a closed book; never can it be changed, never can it be amended, and the only question now is of the future. As a matter of fact, in your case, every effort which was made for you by your professors, by your advisors, every sacrifice of your parents, during your college days was made with one purpose in view, of preparing you for the future, of securing for you strength of character to lead an upright, honorable, serviceable life. Hence that question must impose itself on your joys these days, and when the intensity of your present joys shall have waned, the question of your future will fill your every thought.

Of course, you like every graduate before you, have had your dreams and ambitions for a great career; you have had some determination of striving for lofty ideals, and when those dreams were vivid, and when your ambitions were absorbing, and when your determinations were strong, you vowed to your inner self that you would some day make those dreams come true, and some day realize those ambitions. And if you have never so dreamed, and if your ambitions have never been so strong as to cause you to vow to yourself, then you have missed some of the joys of youth.

However, in all one's thoughts of the future, in all one's dreams, in all one's ambitions, there is always one thought dominant, and that is the thought and desire in some, and the determination in others to achieve success.

And what is success? The general acceptance of its meaning is, the having accomplished the end one has in view. We call him a successful man, who has acquired prominence and standing in his profession, in his chosen business, in civic and public life. But I have in mind a different idea of what real genuine success in life means; I believe that man is a real success, who has honestly, energetically and persistently utilized every talent of mind and body and soul with which God has endowed him, and I believe that when all is said and done, when our span of life is ended, that it is this rule which is to be the measure of real success with each of us, and it is the rule which even the least talented among us may and can follow.

Many a college graduate has the unfortunate delusion that because he has a diploma, the great world which he imagines he knows, but not whose sorrows and failures, as of whose opportunities and glories he is ignorant, is waiting and longing for him. He has the delusion that all he is obliged to do now is to show his diploma and the world will place him in a commanding and eminent position. My dear young men, nothing is farther from the truth. Outside of a very small, limited number of people, the world knows nothing of you, cares less about you and instead of waiting and longing for you, it will almost completely swallow you up. Rather will it battle you, and it will baffle you; it will turn a deaf ear to you, it will cruelly hurt you in your every delicate sense of heart, because it will laugh at and antagonize all those high ideals and those great basic principles that have been instilled into your character during all these college days. I do not say this to discourage you, God forbid, for you need every atom of courage in this fierce life's struggle, greater courage than was a distinguishing mark of the valiant knights of old. Rather do I say it to you to give you courage, so that you may know beforehand what the struggle is to be, and that knowing these things, you may start out with a determination to make the battle; I say it to you to induce you to fill your hearts and souls with Christian courage so that you may use to your very best, every talent with which God and Nature has endowed you. In other words, that you must start now as you started your college career, at the very bottom and compel the world about you, your great world, or your small world, to recognize you by your constant, persistent and earnest work. Work—that is the word and that word alone is the talisman of all success and contains in itself the full idea of what I am striving to place before your minds. It may be a very easy road for any of you to quickly gain a certain kind of success, the success that in later years will bring shame to you; for there are those who will welcome you to their fold if by your association with them, you with your education may lend some shadow of respectability to their shady schemes. But the work this college has been doing for you, the constant vigilance maintained over you in everything that pertains to your well being; the at one time severe discipline she may have dealt out to you; the many kindly acts she has bestowed upon you, all have but one aim in view, not that you may be great men, but that you may be good men. While her human side might take some pride in the fact that any one of you or all of you might rise to greatness in the world, if that greatness be acquired at the price of the sacrifice of any of those virtues with which she has endeavored to imbue you, her real side, her loyalty and constancy to the fundamental principles of justice and right, of the true and the good and to God himself, would make her blush with shame rather than rejoice in her unworthy child. Men have become great in the eyes of the world and men will continue to achieve this same quality of greatness by selfish ambition, by trampling on all human rights, yes even by sacrificing the lives of their fellow men, and the world will applaud and admire. It is true, that certain circumstances may require that the most drastic measures be employed by leaders of nations and peoples, for the real lasting good of their people, but the really great men use these measures only as a last and most necessary means. If, however, we examine the reasons and the methods of many of those whom the world calls great, we will find that this greatness consisted of an absolute disregard for any right, for any principle, for any benefit, save their own selfish ambition to possess power. And therefore, knowing these things well, your Alma Mater has taught you those principles whereby she hopes you will regulate your lives, and prays that should you become great, you may become so by the practice of these same principles, and thus you may be not merely great men but good great men. Again there is but one way to accomplish this and this is contained in the magic word "Work—Work" in the material as well as in the moral order.

There is one danger against which I would warn you,—you have been warned times without number of the usual dangers of various temptations,—but this one of which I wish to speak of is rarely ever brought to your attention. It is not a danger against morals, but a danger to the accomplishment of great things, and I might style it the "Aristocracy of Education." Many college men are too apt to hold themselves aloof from those who have not had the same advantages that they possess. They are prone to keep themselves apart from the poor, the unfortunate in this world's goods, the uneducated and the ignorant. When some degree of prosperity comes to them, they join University Clubs and associate only with other club members of their own educated set or with those of this world's wealth. I remember once sitting at a table at which there was a number of university men, some just entering on life's struggle, others who had already made some stir in the world, and one other man—a man of keen mind, of convincing logic, of deep thought, of strong character, a highly successful man who has made his way in the world lacking the advantages of any education except the very rudiments. He said to the others—all college men—that the greatest fault he found with university men was that "that they were out of tune with humanity." Namely, they kept their own associations, kept themselves apart from their less fortunate fellows—except when a law case or a medical case or a political contest came to them, and then the association was merely—professional, theoretic, and for the fee or victory in the case. I have often thought how much deep truth there was in that statement. For if one does not intimately know, by association and contact, the poor and the unfortunate and the ignorant, he will fail in many of his efforts, he will fall in those things, I have been speaking of, he will miss those opportunities of developing and working out some talent that is in him. He cannot lead the people of his own community; he cannot serve them as he should and might, unless he knows his people in their struggles, in their sorrows in their ignorance, in their ambitions and in all those affairs that go to fill up human life and action.

If faithfully, and energetically, with steadfastness of purpose, with undaunted courage, following the truths that have been taught you here, you spend your self in every blessed talent of your mind and soul in your work, with the thought of righteousness and justice and mercy always before you, with God in your hearts, the necessities and failings, the sorrows and the joys of his human creatures a part of your lives, then, while the spirit of the world will have no call for you, will scoff at you and mock you, humanity, that ever blessed, though fallen humanity, will be waiting for you, will be longing for you, with its mighty arms stretched out in a wondrous welcome for you. Every heart beat of that humanity will throb for you; the blood, the rich red blood of honest men, will course more rapidly through their veins at the very mention of your name, and forever after your name, your life and your example will be a Benediction to humanity. And although this should fail, though humanity as some times happens, should be fickle and should not give you that reward you deserve, your hearts and souls and consciences within you will give you even a more glorious reward, the reward that conscience alone can bestow, and every talent so utilized for God and humanity will be but an embellished letter spelling in the word success. The best wish that I can offer you today, the choicest blessing that is in my soul for you, and not only in my soul, but in the souls and hearts of your professors, and even more in those hearts of hearts the hearts and souls of your fathers and mothers, is that when the roll call of Mountaineers comes for each of your men of 1914, you may have so used your talents, whether they be mighty or meager, that as loyal Mountaineers you may be able to stand along side her other devoted, earnest and faithful sons, not only those who have been prominent in the affairs of life, but those thousands of others humbler, but maybe even more noble sons, and that fearlessly and steadfastly you may stand erect, you may raise your heads, and with flashing eyes and clear accents you may conscientiously answer that call and say "here": And even greater blessings still, that on that day of days, He who is justice itself, though infinitely merciful, may greet you whose youthful years have been spent under the patronage and protection of his Blessed Mother, Mary of the Mountain, and may he joyously say "those talents which I bestowed upon thee, those powers of mind and heart and soul which I entrusted with thee, and which were fostered under My Mother's Care, thou hast used well, therefore, 'because thou hast been faithful over few things, I will place thee over many, enter thou into the Joy of Thy Lord.'"

The Ordinations.

The solemn rites of ordination were performed in the College Chapel Tuesday morning. Right Reverend Owen B. Corrigan elevated to the priesthood two seminarians of the College, Messrs. Edward A. O'Neill, of Ashland, Pa., and William J. Hafey, of Baltimore, and three graduates of St. Joseph's College, Baltimore. Father O'Neill will celebrate his first solemn Mass in St. Joseph's Church, Ashland, Pa., on Sunday, June 21st, at 10 o'clock, and the same day at 10.30 Father Hafey will for the first time be celebrant of a solemn Mass in Chicopee, Mass., in the Church of the Holy Name.

Elocution Contest.

The annual contest in Elocution, one of the most popular features of Commencements at the Mount, was held on Tuesday evening in the gymnasium building and was largely attended. The speakers and their subjects were as follows:

Robert J. Donovan, New York, "Jacqueline's Sacrifice," by Ouida; Daniel I. McDermott, Norristown, Pa., "A Reasonable Doubt," by Edward Bushnell; Ralph Keating, New York, "The Ballad of Reading Gaol," by Oscar Wilde; Joseph R. McGee, Carlondale, Pa., "The Rebirth of Erin," John E. Haldi, Louisville, Ky., "The Gold Louis," Adapted; Lawrence P. Dailey, McAdoo, Pa., "The Prisoner's Plea," Adapted.

Before the declamations and at the close of the speaking the College Orchestra rendered selections that were thoroughly enjoyed.

The Programme.

The programme of the exercises was as follows: Coronation March, "Le Prophete," G. Meyerbeer, Orchestra; Opening Prayer, The Right Reverend Owen B. Corrigan, D. D., V. G.; Overture, "Schauspiel," Chr. Bach, Orchestra; Speech, "Agriculture and the High Cost of Living," Ralph Keating; Chorus, "Honey Town," Wilson, Glee Club; Speech, "Our Inland Waterways," Edward T. Hogan; Quartette, "Rigoletto," G. Verdi, Orchestra; Speech, "The Value of College Athletics as an Educational Element," Daniel F. Costello; Chorus, "Katy Did," Ashford, Glee Club; Conferring of Degrees; Speech, "The Work of the Catholic Church Extension Society," John F. Cogan, Jr.; Selection, "The Serenade," Victor Herbert, Orchestra; Valedictory, John Daniel Boyle; Chorus, "Good Bye," Hatto-Nevin, Glee Club; Awarding of Honors; Address to the Graduates, The Reverend Joseph D. Budds, A. M.; Blessing, "The Right Reverend Owen B. Corrigan, D. D., V. G.; Exit March, "Hero of the Isthmus," J. B. Lampe, Orchestra.

The music was of the same high order that has characterized such programs in the past. The Glee Club selections were unusually well rendered. The entire musical program—vocal and instrumental—was under the direction of Professor Frederick A. Braun, and the success of the members was due to his untiring efforts in rehearsing with his pupils.

The decorations of the hall were most tasteful, the class of '14 colors—green and white—predominating.

SIGNS MUST COME DOWN.

Beauty of Natural Surroundings To Be Preserved By Legislative Enactment.

Sign Board Day, Saturday, June 20th, is going to be a great day. State Forester Besley reports that up to June 15th, 1500 responsible people scattered over the State had enlisted in this movement and had been commissioned as Volunteer Wardens, each receiving a badge of office, a letter of instruction, and a copy of the Roadside Tree Law. Every mail is bringing in new applications and before Saturday, the eventful day, arrives it is believed there will be more than 2,000 people enlisted in this work.

The Legislature has decreed and public sentiment has proclaimed that the advertising signs within the highways of the State must come down.

Any one who attempts to restore these advertising signs to the public roads after June 20th will be liable to a fine and prosecution, as it is now a misdemeanor under the new law.

This movement for the elimination of sign-boards is an expression of the interest of people generally in preserving the beauty of natural surroundings unmarred by hideous signs and posters, not only unsightly in themselves but often obscuring the most beautiful landscapes. We take pride in the fact that we have so many miles of improved roads in the State, and we are also coming to realize that the attractiveness of these good roads is immeasurably increased by shade trees, with the sign-board nuisance eliminated.

Sign Board Day should mark an epoch in the State, made so by the hundreds of public spirited citizens who will go forth on Sign Board Day with the determination to blot out as much of the unsightliness from the roadsides as is possible under the new law.

MOUNT SAINT MARY'S COLLEGE—PREPAREDNESS.

Vice President Marshall, in his address to the graduates at the University of Maine, said, "Our institutions of higher learning may not be expected to furnish a philosophic view of life, but they can be expected to instill into the minds of young men intellectual courage."

This process of instillation has been going on at Mount Saint Mary's College for over a century. During that length of time has the old institution on the hill, dear to hundreds of alumni scattered far and wide, been preparing young men to solve the problems of life, to do battle in the ranks of the whirling throng that seeks success and strains every nerve to attain it.

Every feature of the curriculum aims at strengthening the foundation for whatever structure the future may design. The discipline of the institution also tends to enforce this thoroughness by excluding that which would not be essential. The close cooperation of preceptors and pupils, working for a common end insures determination and definiteness of application, and inspires a real live interest in study; the athletic training and contests develop the students physically and curb "temper," inspire fair play in sports; the ideal location, secluded as it is, the democratic demeanor of the student body; the thorough moral training—all these are potent in instilling into the minds of its students "intellectual courage."

The results of such conceptions and the application of such principles have been apparent. Old Mount Saint Mary's counts her sons among the leaders in every walk of life. Some of them have made their mark athletically; practically all have gained recognition as earnest capable young men.

Mount Saint Mary's needs no apology for her course. "Sane progressiveness" has been her motto, not in word, but in work. She has done great work, is at present doing great work, and is prepared and preparing to do still greater work in the future.

To him, the President of Mount Saint Mary's, signally honored by the Pope for the splendid work he has done at the Mountain, to him, Monsignor Bradley, and his ever faithful associates must be ascribed the credit for continuously enlarging upon and developing the plans laid years ago by the illustrious and far-seeing founders of the College.

And by no means should, truly, with no justice, could the influence and loyalty and solicitude of the alumni be overlooked. "The alumni of a college is its backbone," aptly says a noted educator. A staunch and sturdy backbone and vertebrae, then, has Mount Saint Mary's. In pulpit, in market place, in studio and office each alumnus, holding in his heart the memories of the "Mount" and acknowledging the worth of the preparation there received, year by year encourages others to follow in his footsteps and by his presence at recurring commencements supports his former preceptors in their laudable ambition of inciting their charges to the attainment of "intellectual courage"—preparedness.

PERSONAL INFLUENCE.

"The only responsibility that a man cannot evade in this life is the one he thinks of least—his personal influence."

To bear in mind and to apply this truth would seem particularly worth the while of those who, having graduated, now enter upon their life concerns.

From his own character, be it good or bad, man cannot escape. He is the sole custodian of it, and for its influence upon others he alone is responsible.

Fortified with intellectual courage, strengthened by religious and moral training, compassed about by high ideals, each graduate of the Mountain should determine that his influence in the world shall be for good, only; that his character shall at all times reflect credit upon himself and upon his Alma Mater.

"Now that the schools have closed," says an exchange, "the problem in many families is what to do with the children." The parents in any family in which this is a problem ought to go to school themselves.

STRIPPED of its academic phraseology the advice contained in every sermon and address thus far delivered to graduates may be summed up as follows: "Go to it."

THE Philadelphia Public Ledger is the bell wether of calamity howlers against Wilson, and yet it hands out this: "The President is right."

"Not a single umpire has been mobbed this season." Washington Herald.

We know a bunch of Federal "fans" that would like to make a nomination for the death chair.

ITALY still seems to be lying over the Alps.

John Marshall's Eloquence.

Chief Justice John Marshall was not an orator of the "spellbinder" type, but after he began practice at the Richmond (Va.) bar, he was recognized as a convincing speaker. William Wirt, one of the great lawyers of the day, though several years younger than Marshall, said of him: "This extraordinary man, without the aid of fancy, without the advantages of person, voice, attitude, gesture or any other ornaments of an orator, deserves to be considered as one of the most eloquent men in the world, if eloquence may be said to consist in the power of seizing the attention with an irrepresible force, and never permitting it to elude the grasp until the hearer has received the conviction which the speaker intends."

Not Without Honor.

William Phelps Eno, who devised the system of traffic regulation now practiced in New York and who has been called the "father of street traffic regulation," had a hard time at first impressing his ideas on public officials. Foreign cities appreciated them more than American cities. Paris, threatened with a strike of the cab drivers unless the system Eno were put in effect, adopted it. Then Buenos Aires sent for Mr. Eno, asked him to work out a plan for its traffic and agreed to every suggestion he made.

A year or two later Mr. Eno was introduced as a traffic regulation authority to a much traveled resident of Washington.

The globe trotter shook hands with him and then said in a rather patronizing manner: "If you want to know what's what in a street traffic system, Mr. Eno, you ought to see the way they do the trick in Buenos Aires."—New York Post.

The Fungous Plant.

All the energies of the fungous plant seem to be directed to the production of germs for propagating its kind. Their number is often almost incalculable. You have doubtless observed that the common puffball when mature is filled with a fine dust, and this consists entirely of spores corresponding to seeds, which are eventually diffused in the air by the bursting of the puffball. In a single puffball more than 10,000,000 of them have been counted, and when these minute bodies are once set afloat in the atmosphere they are distributed abroad over an indefinite space, being so small that it is difficult to conceive of a place from which they could be excluded. Their astonishing fertility and rapidity of growth are among the most remarkable characteristics of this vegetable tribe.

Real Shaves in India.

The natives of India go in a great deal for shaving and do not confine themselves to merely shaving the chin, but on occasion will shave the eyebrows as well, and in the case of certain rites and ceremonies the head, too, is completely shaved. No soap is used, but the beard is softened by being rubbed over with a little cold water. The razors employed are generally of native manufacture and have fixed handles that do not fold. Moreover, they are very much heavier than those of European make. The strop consists of a small piece of leather the size of a man's palm and is held in the open hand during stropping. The recognized cost of a shave is 1 pice, which is the exact equivalent of 1 farthing.—Cleveland Plain Dealer

Repeating the Text.

A little girl heard a sermon from the words "My cup runneth over; surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life." On returning home she was asked if she could remember the minister's text and replied: "Yes, indeed. It was 'Mercy! Goodness! My cup's tipped over!'"

Atop of Mount McKinley. Archdeacon Stuck in his account of his climb to the summit of Mount McKinley. "The Ascent of Denali." gives this description of his impressions upon reaching it: "Immediately before us, in the direction in which we had climbed, lay—nothing; a void, a sheer gulf many thousands of feet deep, and one shrank back instinctively from the little parapet of snow basin when one had glanced at the awful profundity. Across the gulf, about 3,000 feet beneath us and fifteen or twenty miles away, sprang most splendidly into view the great mass of Denali's Wife, or Mount Foraker, as some white men misname her, filling majestically all the middle distance. * * * And never was nobler sight displayed to man than that great isolated mountain, spread out completely, with all its spurs and ridges, its cliffs and its glaciers, lofty and mighty, and yet far beneath us * * * Beyond stretched, blue and vague to the southwest, the wide valley of the Kuskokwim, with an end of all mountains. * * * It was, however, to the south and the east that the most marvelous prospect opened before us.

The Salt Sea Legend.

There is a legend in the Norse scalds which explains why the sea is salt. The "bountiful Frodi," whose mythical reign was a golden age indeed, possessed a quern, or hand mill, which would grind out stores of anything desired by its owner. Two giant maidens, ruled over by Frodi, were the grinders. In an evil day a sea rover came upon the scene, slew Frodi and carried off the quern and the two giant maidens who worked it. When the sea rover's vessel was right out at sea he ordered the maidens to grind salt. At midnight they asked if they had not ground enough. The sea rover, angry at being awakened from his sleep, commanded them to grind until morning. Now, the giant maidens naturally enough worked very quickly, so as they went on grinding the load of salt grew so heavy that it sank the ship, and now the sea will continue salt forever.

Magnificent Voracity.

One of the most noteworthy importations in the slaughter of the gypsy moth has been an active green beetle, a tiger in the moth world. Here is a terrible creature indeed—a creature of intrepid ferocity and magnificent voracity. Beside him the hog is a beast of most delicate appetite. The green beetle would devour ten times his weight in gypsy moth caterpillars in a single day and be ready to duplicate this performance on the morrow. His nominal two seasons of active life are a wild orgy of slaying and feasting. His span of mortality includes a mere fortnight of larval life and two brief summers of adult existence, representing less than five months of activity altogether, but during this time he will normally devour nearly 650 gypsy moth caterpillars or pupae as big as himself. A single pair have been observed to eat 2,000 caterpillars within eight weeks gluttony almost beyond belief.—Century.

Making Sure.

Lord Sutfield went with the then Prince of Wales to India in 1875. At one place the governor felt nervous because among his people there were a number of political and religious fanatics who might be expected to make trouble when the prince passed through. He was strongly tempted to lock them all up, but this would have been a somewhat high handed action, and the governor hesitated to enforce it.

He mentioned his difficulty to one of his daughters.

"But why not give a garden party, papa?" she replied at once. "Invite them all and keep them entertained until the prince has passed through."

So a fanatics' garden party was given with great success—in the grounds of the jail.—London Express.

A Pious Advertisement.

The following advertisement was printed in the Pennsylvania Gazette for June 23, 1787. The author of this little masterpiece is supposed to be no other than Franklin himself. "D. F., then, stands for Deborah Franklin: "Taken out of a pew in the church some months since a Common Prayer Book bound in red, gilt and lettered D. F. on each cover. The person who took it is advised to open it and read the eighth commandment and after ward return it into the same pew again, upon which no further notice will be taken."

Thick and Thin. "It's a funny thing," remarked the observing man, "that particularly stout and particularly thin people can discover insinuations in regard to their size where absolutely none is meant. Now, tonight in the car there were two good examples of this within a few minutes of each other. One was a little thread of a woman who glanced contemptuously at two well meaning persons who moved apart and made a space between them which looked wide enough for her to seat herself with comparative comfort.

"Thank you," she snapped, "but I prefer to stand rather than sit where there is scarcely room for a small child."

"We had not proceeded far when an extremely stout woman entered the car. She was carrying two huge bundles and looked tired. Three men in a row sprang to their feet as she began to lurch about as the car started. She administered a savage glance at them and said, quite audibly:

"Well, I never! I guess if it's got to the point where I take up three seats I'd better stand up awhile!"—Buffalo Express.

Earned It.

A stranger was hunting quail in the mountains of Georgia, where by reason of the wild peas they are very numerous. One day his dog flushed a flock of wild turkeys to the rage of a native youth who had been creeping toward them. The boy promptly brought his old fashioned six foot rifle to his shoulder, and the bullet cut up the dirt under the dog's feet. The next instant the boy disappeared in the brush. Later in the day the hunter came across a mountain cabin and saw the same boy in the yard with a man whom he took to be his father. He hailed the man and angrily gave an account of the morning's incident. "He wasn't forty yards away when he shot at my dog, I think he should have a good thrashing," he continued. "Misses a dawg at forty yards?" the mountaineer asked in astonishment. "Yo' needn't worry 'bout that lickin', stranger; he sho' will git one all right!"—Argonaut.

An Elixir of Life.

"An annuity is the best elixir of life I know of," said the examining physician of an insurance company. "It sometimes seems as if annuitants never die. We have lots on our books who top eighty, ninety and even ninety-five years. I have passed many a sickly and decrepit old fellow as a good annuity risk—the sicker they are, you know, the better risk they make—and the next year he has turned up to collect his annuity rejuvenated, rosy, spry as a boy. The secret? The secret is that financial worry, fear of the poorhouse, ages and kills off more people than all the deadly diseases combined. Release an old man by means of an annuity from all this worry, and he throws off his years and walks erect and happy and fearlessly young."

Shakespeare's Birth.

The exact date of Shakespeare's birth is not known, and the accepted date of April 23 is based on circumstantial evidence. There is record evidence that he was baptized on April 26, 1564, but no record evidence of the date of his birth. He died April 23, 1616, and the inscription upon his monument is evidence that he had already begun his fifty-third year, but does not give his birth date. From these data and other such information as they could obtain, antiquaries in the eighteenth century, 100 years after his death, fixed the date of his birth as April 23, 1564, three days before his baptism. Though not proved beyond doubt, that date is universally accepted.—Philadelphia Press.

Buoyancy of Fresh and Salt Water. A Chinese lad dropped his ball in a narrow hole and could not get it out. So he poured water in the hole, thinking that he would float the ball to the surface. As the ball was slightly heavier than water, it remained on the bottom. Then he thought of mixing salt with the water, as he knew that salt water would float denser objects than fresh. This he did and was rewarded with the floating ball.

This particular fact is demonstrated at the mouths of rivers. Objects rolling along the bottom of a fresh river, too heavy to come to the top, will rise when they are carried out to sea. The general rule also applies to floating bodies. For instance, a ship with a cargo on the sea will sink sometimes a foot on entering a fresh water port. On the other hand, if she leaves a fresh water port with her cargo she will rise when entering the ocean. So a ship may be loaded apparently too much at a wharf and still be all right on the waves.

In building a dam the fact of salt water's being heavier than fresh must be taken into consideration, and the dam for the same head must be a good deal stronger; this, too, without taking into consideration the beating of waves, etc.—St. Louis Republic.

Britain's Civil Service.

Life in a civil service office is a very drab affair today. But sixty years ago it appears to have had its compensations. Sir Algernon West, who entered the admiralty in 1851, recalls, in his "Reminiscences," the figure of an official "always dressed in a black and snuffy suit." It was the chief clerk. This gentleman "occasionally came to the office in the morning dressed in a great frilled shirt front and evening clothes and announced that, as he was going to dine out that evening, he should not be at the office the next day. Frederick Locker, who always wore kid gloves in the office for fear he would dirty his hands with ink * * * was evidently not impressed with the dignity of the man or the office, for on my asking him what his duties were he said, 'All I know is, that whenever I want a clean towel or a piece of fresh soap, I always ring the bell and send for the chief clerk!'"—London Citizen.

An Unfortunate Phrase.

"Franz der kaiser." Napoleon's father-in-law, who was a rather weak and silly ruler, had nevertheless a thoroughgoing belief in absolutism and in the divine right to rule of even the most incompetent of the Hapsburgs. His abilities, such as they were, were best displayed in catechisms that he wrote and printed for the use of his humbler subjects and in peevish criticisms of those of superior intelligence. According to the author of a recent life of Archduchess Maria Louisa of Austria entitled "An Imperial Victim," the emperor once raged against his doctor for remarking that he had "a good constitution."

"Never let me hear that word again!" he said. "Say robust health if you like. There is no such thing as a good constitution."

Switzerland's Navy.

Long before Germany was to be reckoned with as a sea power Switzerland possessed a fleet equipped for warfare. Eight hundred years ago on all the larger Swiss lakes armed galleys were maintained by the rival cantons. Skilled shipwrights had to be imported from Genoa for the construction of these vessels, some of which carried crews of 500 men. The largest Swiss flotilla was maintained on the Lake of Geneva, when the inhabitants of Geneva were at war with Savoy. Since the neutrality of Switzerland has been guaranteed by the powers there has been no need for warships on the lakes. The Swiss, however, possess a mercantile navy, which carries a considerable amount of trade over the 342 miles of navigable waterways in the republic.

Farmers' Day Proves a Great Success

Farmers and Their Families Five Hundred Strong Inspect Their Agricultural College and Experiment Station in Person—What They Saw and What They Learned.

Weather conditions were perfect for the second annual celebration of "Farmers' Day" at the Agricultural College. The first visitors to arrive were members of the Patapsco Farmers' Club of Howard County, which is one of the most progressive organizations of its kind in the State. From eight o'clock on, automobiles and carriages continued to arrive, the bulk of the crowd, however, coming on the ten o'clock express from Baltimore, which brought representatives from northern counties and the Eastern Shore.

The inspection of the experimental plots began promptly at ten, the visitors making short work of the strawberry patch which for one day in the year was free to all comers for tasting as well as observing. Much time was spent on the grass experiments where the farmers saw actually demonstrated before them why one field will grow twice as much hay as another because of the kind of fertilizer used. Special spraying demonstrations were given for the benefit of the members of the Horticultural Society who were holding their summer field meeting as a part of "Farmers' Day." Neither were the farm women and children neglected. While their husbands and fathers were inspecting the new hog plant and the dairy barns, the women folk descended on the poultry establishment to see the latest things out in chicken styles and houses.

DEDICATION EXERCISES.

At noon, the entire crowd gathered on the college campus for lunch where for an hour or two everyone was busy getting better acquainted with new friends from every part of the State. Grangers, particularly, were present in goodly numbers, a newly-organized Grange from La Plata, in Charles county coming in a body to attend the celebration. They, with many other guests, attended the dedication exercises of the afternoon. These included addresses by the Hon. James F. Monroe, Henry H. Holzapfel, Jr., Congressman Wm. P. Borland from Missouri, and others, all of whom paid glowing tributes to Chas. B. Calvert, one of the founders of agricultural education in Maryland and after whom the new building, Calvert Hall, was named. Representative Borland, particularly, interested his audience.

The closing event of the day was the formal dedication of the new building. President H. J. Patterson on behalf of the Board of Trustees naming it Calvert Hall. The tablet commemorating this dedication was unveiled by Mrs. Charlotte Calvert Spence, representing the Calvert family. No one present could doubt the success of the occasion as a real day for farmers and farmers' wives or the benefits they found in the instruction and social gathering together that went with the day at their Agricultural College.

BACHELORS' HEADQUARTERS.

ROY H. WAITE,
Maryland Agricultural Experiment Station.

On many farms all the eggs are fertile because the males are allowed to run with the flock. Such eggs are often held in a warm room for a week or more and then carried to town in the boiling hot sun. The germ starts to develop, then dies, and the egg spoils very quickly. Is it any wonder that there are so many bad eggs spoiled every year?

Sterile or infertile eggs keep much longer than do fertile ones, especially during the summer months. This being the case, let's put the better product on the market. We may not get much extra money for our trouble because as a rule, in most sections, an egg is simply an egg, but at the same time we will be helping to get eggs in better repute.

It's a simple matter to get rid of the "rooster" and the hens will lay equally as well, if not better, without him. If you have a valuable male that you wish to keep over for another breeding season, pen him up in a separate enclosure or if you have no extra pen, build a cage 3 feet by 10 feet or larger in which to keep him. If you don't put any special value on him, make a meal of him, and save one of your oldest, strongest and most vigorous cockerels for next season's breeding.

THIN YOUR FRUIT FOR BEST PRICES

Get Rid Of Your Culls Now—Should Not Cost More Than Ten Cents Per Tree.

HERMAN BECKENSTRATER,
Maryland Agricultural College.

The melon grower who would allow ten plants to grow in one hill would be considered an incompetent by his neighbor, who at the same time expects his peach trees to mature peaches as close together as they can possibly hang on the tree. Nothing, in fact, will better bring out the excellent qualities of the fruit and give it good size and fine appearance, than the finishing touches of thinning the young fruit on the tree. Yet this highly remunerative operation is quite generally omitted.

Present indications point to a heavy fruit crop the coming season. Culls will be plentiful and worthless. Therefore, avoid them and increase the size of your salable crop by thinning them early. For best results this thinning should be done immediately after the June drop. It is only reasonable to expect that the sooner the remaining fruit has the entire support of the tree, the better the results will be. Broken limbs may be avoided if the thinning is done in August, but other benefits will not be so pronounced.

As to what extent the fruit should be thinned is largely a local problem. Generally, thinning fruit to a minimum distance of 4 to 6 inches gives satisfactory results.

Bulletin No. 159 of the Maryland Agricultural Experiment Station says of thinning peaches, "If there is a heavy set of fruit left after the June drop, it should be thinned so that the fruits left are evenly distributed over the whole tree, and average from 4 to 6 inches apart on the bearing wood. Thinning should be done just before the pits begin to harden, when the fruits are about three quarters of an inch in diameter. It is the maturing of the pits which exhausts the vitality of the tree and the ripening of pits in excess of a good crop is a useless strain on the tree itself."

Our fruit must all be picked at sometime, and the culls are more quickly and more easily removed at thinning time than at the harvesting of the crop. The average cost of thinning is about ten cents per tree.

THE TOMATO WORM.

TOMATO WORMS are the larva of moths and can readily be controlled by the use of an arsenical poison, as the worms chew their food. Turkeys are voracious feeders on these worms, and a flock will keep a large field free of them.

TOMATOES SHOULD BE WELL CULTIVATED.

Start Working the Rows As Soon As Possible To Preserve Moisture In the Soil.

J. F. MONROE,
Maryland Agricultural College.

As soon as possible after setting out your tomato plants, start the cultivation. It is a good plan to cultivate fairly deep, and throw a little soil to the young plants. This cultivation loosens the soil, where it was tramped incident to setting the plants, forms a soil mulch to check evaporation, and if the plants were set in furrows, it will fill these up level. It is generally considered the most important work, therefore, great care should be exercised.

Subsequent cultivations should be frequent and shallow and slightly farther from the plant with each successive working. The frequency of these cultivations will depend somewhat on seasonal conditions. The grower should work the tomato field at regular intervals, and after rains, in order to retain the maximum amount of soil moisture for the plants, because the tomato is a rampant grower, and requires large quantities of water.

Stop cultivation when there is danger of injuring the plants in passing through the rows. This will ordinarily be when the first fruit set is about the size of a walnut. The plants will be sufficiently large to shade the ground and check evaporation, thereby removing the chief reason for cultivation. Be sure to seed the tomato field to crimson clover with the last working. The weather is ordinarily quite reasonable at this time, and the condition of the soil is such as to generally assure a good stand of clover. Of course, if the tomato field grown is to be sowed to wheat, the clover will not grow sufficiently large to warrant sowing. All tomato growers should have a copy of Maryland Agricultural Experiment Station Bulletin No. 180 on tomatoes and their care.

The time has come to undertake the study and teaching of secondary agriculture seriously, and not merely as a means of glorifying country life, and arousing enthusiasm for the possibilities of farm endeavor.

PERSONALS.

It is the aim of THE CHRONICLE to publish as many personal and social items as possible, but it frequently happens that those who have guests visiting them, and those who entertain, fail to send a list of their friends, or an account of these events, to this office. A REMARKABLE AUTO TRIP

Two Men From California Arrive in Emmitsburg on Sunday.

Over mountains and across deserts and plains, David R. Locke and a companion, have travelled all the way from Los Angeles, Cal., to the capital of the Nation from which point they will wend their way westward again.

These men have made the trip of forty-one hundred miles in a Ford automobile—a four passenger car equipped with every appliance for comfort and with every means for successfully overcoming anything untoward that might happen.

The Lincoln Highway has been the route mainly followed but at times they have been diverted from their course in order that they might take in points of historic interest. Their course was changed in order to reach Gettysburg hence their pilgrimage to this good old town.

Mr. Locke and his chum said that they had enjoyed every moment of their novel journey and recounted many amusing and dangerous incidents of their travels. Being unlimited in time many opportunities were afforded for leisurely studying the topography of the vast territory covered and of making side excursions to many places of unusual interest. Nor have they been dependent upon hotels for accommodation, their tents affording shelter in any spot they elected to stop and their complete cooking facilities being available for the preparation of any game or fish secured by them en route.

These tourists are making this extended tour but the assumption is that they will eventually publish their experiences either in a series of magazine articles or in book form.

THE WEEK AT THE COUNTY SEAT

Chronicle of Happenings at Frederick City and in the Courts.

With eleven alleged law-breakers confined within the walls of the Frederick County jail, the result of a midnight raid among the colored population of this city, Sheriff Conrad and his two deputies think they have inaugurated a campaign which will finally round up the largest band of law-breakers to whom justice was ever dealt in a single case in this city.

With the increasing hot weather the concern of the public over the large number of vagrant dogs roaming the streets since the abolition of the office of dog catcher increases. Each day Mayor Fraley is receiving complaints from representative citizens.

In the Baltimore Sun's review of political affairs in the State, Mr. Emory L. Coblenz, of this city, was mentioned as an opponent of Senator Smith.

Speeding at a moderate rate, James Turner, of Martinsburg, W. Va., was hurled from an automobile at Bolivar, about 3 miles west of Middletown, on Saturday and probably fatally injured, with a fracture of the skull. Turner was taken to the office of Dr. Beckley and shortly afterward to the Frederick City Hospital in an unconscious condition.

Children's Day services were observed in the Methodist Episcopal Church, the Rev. E. A. H. Lamar, pastor, on Sunday morning. The program was considered the best ever given in the church.

Supt. of Water Works, George A. Burek has begun the overhauling of the reservoir property.

The case of E. E. Padgett vs. B. & O. Railroad Company for $30,000 damages was suddenly concluded Friday in court at Hagerstown.

The little court room in the City Hall was packed to the corridors on Monday by persons eager to see the eleven alleged negro law-breakers, surrounded and captured in a notorious speak-easy, arraigned for a trial before Justice Fabian Posey.

The thrilling story of the alleged kidnapping by John T. Bellison and Mrs. Nona Grubb, of Mrs. Grubb's three-year-old son, on September 30, 1913, was rehearsed in the Leesburg court at the trial of Bellison for burglary and kidnapping. Attorney Leo Weinberg, representing Bellison, declared that he hopes to free his client by proving an alibi.

The Frederick Board of Trade is earnestly besieging the Western Maryland Railroad officials to put back several trains, which the officials have sent in another direction, namely via Gettysburg and other points. The residents of Westminster are also up in arms concerning this late change of trains.

The safe and sane fund for the Fourth of July is slowly increasing. On Tuesday it aggregated $55.30. $250.00 is the amount needed.

After a telephone conversation with the Mayor of Roanoke, Va., and being thoroughly convinced that J. M. Wilson, of Roanoke, Va., a blind man, was the girl's father, Judge Glenn H. Worthington gave the ten-year-old girl, who had been acting as collector for the two blind beggars, who excited sympathy in this city last week, into the custody of J. M. Wilson, her father.

The year book of 1914 of the Evangelical Reformed Church has been published and is now being circulated. It was compiled by the Juniors' pastor.

Frederick county will be represented in the big convention of the International Sunday School Association, which will be held in Chicago from June 23 to 30, by W. W. Doub, of Middletown.

Wood's Seeds

Seed Potatoes FOR FALL CROP.

The planting of Seed Potatoes in June and July is increasing to a wonderful extent. A great many farmers claim that they give better crops planted at this time than they do when planted in the spring. Potatoes planted in June and July mature in the cool weather of the fall, at a time when they can be harvested to best advantage.

The Seed Potatoes we offer are put in cold storage early in the season, so as to keep in first-class, vigorous condition. "Wood's Crop Special" giving prices and full information about Late Seed Potatoes and all other Seasonable Seeds, mailed free on request.

A BUSH OF CRIMSON CLOVER SEEDS SOWN ON four acres of ground will increase the succeeding yield of Corn or Cotton about the same amount as would a ton of complete fertilizer applied at the rate of 500 lbs. per acre. A good stand of Crimson Clover turned under will ordinarily double the yield of the crops which follow. The physical condition of the soil is also materially benefited. The Sandy Soils are increased in Humus and Nitrogen Contents. The Stiff, heavy clay soils are rendered more open and friable.

Crimson Clover makes an excellent grazing crop, hay, ensilage and pasture for all classes of live stock. Milch cows make considerably more milk, when pastured on Crimson Clover. It is also valuable as a honey plant, furnishing an abundant supply of nectar in the spring.

Crimson Clover is valuable as a Winter Cover crop. It is especially valuable in Orchards where it is generally plowed under as a green manure crop. The plants retain for the use of the trees the following season much of the plant food, which would otherwise leach out of the ground during the Winter and early Spring. A good stand of Crimson Clover not only reduces the erosion and the gullying of the fields, but on sandy fields, the blowing of the soil by the wind is greatly lessened. The Plants also serve to hold the snow to a greater extent than if the field was left bare during the Winter. More and more each year farmers are realizing the importance and great value of Crimson Clover.

Book III.

CHAPTER I—Tom Phinney gets a job as master of Brownlow's yacht Kohinur which has been chartered for some mysterious mission.

CHAPTER II—The charterer and his friends board the yacht at night and Tom hears the voice of the unknown girl and also of a man involved in his adventure of a few nights previous.

CHAPTER III—Tom finds the girl more beautiful than he had anticipated. The charterer turns out to be Max Willard.

CHAPTER IV—Willard assures Tom that his mission is honorable and intimates that a great wrong is about to be righted. He gives orders that no one is to leave or board the yacht without his permission. Della, the girl of the voice, insists upon going ashore and while Tom is explaining his orders Callis jumps overboard.

CHAPTER V.

Della Goes Ashore.

The boat was quickly guided by Mercer's shouts to the point where the two men had drifted down-stream. With one arm hooked over a life-buoy, he was sustaining with the other hand the limp form of John Callis, who appeared to be unconscious. A minute or two later both bedraggled figures were upon deck.

The first officer, finding that his captain was obdurate in the matter of "just one jolt" to drive out the chill that had entered into his vitals, spat out an oath and reminded Tom that he might have swum ashore instead of wasting his energies upon a surly beggar like Callis.

"I take it for granted," was the sharp retort, "that you have more sense of your duty than to do such a thing—or to stand here rag-chewing with your superior, either. What's the matter with the fellow? He hasn't had time to drown."

Mercer cast a scowling look at the limp form outstretched upon the deck.

"I don't know," he replied, "unless he struck his head upon something floating in the water—a plank, likely. He's bleeding like a stuck pig. I hope to hell he broke his neck!"

After the expression of this kindly sentiment in behalf of the injured man, Mr. Mercer hastened away after a dry change, and Callis was carried to his berth, where an ugly scalp wound was neatly dressed by Hewitt's adept fingers.

Della had already retired to her own room, and Tom stood watching the steward.

"I don't like the looks of it, captain," said the latter. "He ought to have a doctor. His skull may be cracked."

"If Mr. Willard doesn't show up pretty soon," announced Tom, "I'll take the liberty of fetching one."

But at that very instant a shout from above told him that the charterer had been sighted upon the landing, and a few seconds later he heard the launch chugging shoreward.

As he re-entered the cabin a door opened and Della came toward him, still wearing her hat. She knew nothing of the seriousness of Callis' injuries, and Tom considered it unnecessary to tell her.

"Since the excitement has passed without tragedy," she said, her manner and utterance extremely formal, "there is no reason why I shouldn't proceed with my errand—unless I am a prisoner."

"Please don't talk that way," he protested, hurt to the quick by her tone. "You are not a prisoner. And you can't be so unreasonable as to blame me for doing my duty. Even now the launch is fetching Mr. Willard off; he'll be on board in a minute."

She colored. In spite of her outraged feelings, she could not deny that this big, blundering, stupid, simple-hearted man—the adjectives are all her own—affected her in a way that filled her soul with an extraordinary commingling of gladness and terror. She was stirred by the strangest discord of emotions—a joy that was incomprehensible, and a powerful something within her that instinctively rose up and strove mightily to drive it forth. She looked wonderingly upon the man who had wrought this miracle; then an imp of perversity seized her, and she wanted more than anything else to punish him—wound him—make him smart and writhe.

Tom stood watching her with a look of grave concern.

"Surely," he said presently, "you are not thinking of going down-town alone at this time of night? It is past eight o'clock."

She turned upon him pettishly. "Captain Phinney, do your responsibilities as master of the Kohinur extend beyond the length of her anchor hawser? I am not entirely helpless; if necessary I can appeal to Mr. Willard."

He winced. And at this moment Willard entered the cabin. His mien was anxious and troubled.

"What's this about Callis?" he demanded. Manifestly he had received some sort of account of the occurrence on the way to the yacht.

Tom briefly told him and, to avoid further agitating the girl, suggested that he see Mr. Hewitt at once.

"Before you do," he added, "I would like to know whether the order about going and coming includes this young lady?"

Willard brushed back the strayed lock of white hair with the same tired gesture that Tom had witnessed before. He sighed profoundly.

"No," he said, "it does not. I made no exceptions because I wanted to avoid explanations. Callis is the only one of my party at whom the order was particularly aimed. . . . Lord! What a source of anxiety he has been! . . . The other three men will cause you no trouble on that score; they understand that they are to remain on the yacht. Of course no stranger is to be permitted to come aboard."

"Thank you, sir," returned Tom, stiffly. "I wish I had known this; I can follow orders only as I receive them."

He faced the silent girl with a challenging look. Willard was leaving them—he disappeared. And she had not appealed to him.

"I will order the launch," he said quietly.

Without a word she preceded him up to the deck, where he summoned Mercer. He had just notified the first officer that he was leaving the Kohinur in his charge, when Della interrupted in her most agreeable manner. She addressed the mate.

"I couldn't think of taking Captain Phinney away from his duties," she said sweetly. "You were saying this morning that you wanted to go down-town, Mr. Mercer; if you care to accompany me, now is your opportunity—of course, with Captain Phinney's consent." And she gave that discomfited individual a look from beneath her lowered lashes that was at once smiling and enigmatic.

Naturally enough Tom was taken completely off his guard, as he was expected to be; but after one involuntary start of surprise he rose to the occasion, accepting it with apparent equanimity.

Mercer's pale, dissipated features glowed with pleasure; it had been a long, long time since any gentle girl had imposed a confidence in him. He glanced doubtfully at his skipper, who was regarding him meaningfully.

"Mr. Mercer may be depended on not to lose sight of you," Tom said pointedly, "and he'll see you safely back to the Kohinur." And he added to himself: "—or I'll break his teeth!"

Mercer laughed and helped her down the steps to the launch. Tom watched it glide away, a black blot in the golden reflection of the shore lights; he saw Mercer appear upon the landing, then stoop down and catch the girl's hands and draw her up beside him. Next he noticed, that instead of backing out, turning and heading for the yacht, the sailor in charge of the launch made her fast and himself climbed upon the landing, where he was soon lost to sight in the moving throng.

This maneuver was observed by Tom with a grim smile of comprehension. It could mean only one thing—Miss Della's errand would not consume much time; she was not going any considerable distance—certainly not all the way down to the city; and Mercer had ordered the man to wait.

So the Kohinur's master filled and lighted his pipe, and defining a course from gangway to stern and back again, fell to pacing it with pendulum-like regularity and patience.

Meanwhile, no sooner was the launch away from the yacht than the girl's mood underwent a sudden change. Mercer had entered into the apparent gay humor of the adventure; he was even casting ahead, hoping that the opportunity would present itself of acquiring indefinite quantities of liquid refreshment; but his hopes and the illusion of gaiety were dispelled at one stroke when his companion addressed him in a tone of deep concern.

"Mr. Mercer," she said, "my errand is one of pressing importance, or, rest assured, I should not have undertaken to go down-town alone at this hour. Thanks to your kindness, I do not have to go alone, and my destination is the city only because I know of no nearby telephone station where I may be certain of privacy."

"If that's all you want," he returned, "we need go no further than the Claremont. But, I am disappointed—"

"Mr. Mercer," she interrupted, "please bear with me and forgive me for having persuaded you to come with me under false pretenses. I have reason to be greatly worried and anxious."

"Believe me, I am only too glad to be of service," he gallantly assured her. "Isn't there something more definite that I can do for you?"

"No, no—thank you. Only conduct me to the nearest telephone and wait a few minutes for me."

With this she lapsed into silence. Mercer watched her while she adjusted her veil so that it rendered her completely unrecognizable, and marveled at the circumstance not a little.

He saw her enter a telephone-booth; then he took up his station outside and waited. More than one acquaintance hailed him, or boisterously invited him to join them; but he was not to be persuaded.

Minutes passed. He reflected that the telephone conversation was becoming uncommonly long drawn out, when he was attracted by the booth door opening behind him, and a moan that could signify only intense agony of mind.

He slewed round to behold the girl clinging unsteadily to the door-knob. She had not troubled to readjust her veil, and he could see that her mouth was drawn in lines of suffering and her lips were colorless. He sprang promptly to her assistance, and she instantly transferred the sustaining hand to his wrist, which she clutched spasmodically.

"What is it?" he demanded solicitously, yet with a restraining thought of the ease with which any crowd's attention is attracted. "What has happened?"

"Mr. Mercer"—her voice, pitched low, was tense and vibrant with something that he could not understand. He reflected that the telephone conversation was becoming uncommonly long drawn out, when he was attracted by the booth door opening behind him, and a moan that could signify only intense agony of mind.

launch. Something in their haste quickened his faculties, and he took up his station at the gangway, and waited.

When the launch touched the accommodation-steps, where the sailor held it secure with a boat-hook, the girl got out first, and, Tom noted, without a word to Mercer. Holding tightly to the hand-rail, she came rapidly up to the deck.

He heard her utter a little sobbing gasp; then her knees doubled under her, and he caught her as she fell. He was filled with a sudden blinding rage. "You damned cur!" he roared at Mercer. "You'll answer for me for this!"

But the limp form in his arms was not unconscious, only weak. "He's not to blame," she whispered tremulously. "Take me to Jessie. Carry me."
