A long-treasured dream, I believe, is about to come true for this female typewriter jockey. Long have I advocated the removal of that "stump" on the Square, better known as the Blinker. It was unanimously agreed this week at the Town Council meeting that the aforementioned detail must be carried out. The final decision came about as the result of an ultimatum by the State Roads Commission. For some months now the Town Solons have been beseeching the roads commission (my pals) to do something about the wretched condition of our main thoroughfares. Well, after a long interval of uncertainty as to whether any action would be forthcoming, at long last a communication from the commission arrived this week and it contained the compelling stipulation that no resurfacing would be done until the removal of the Blinker had been effected. The commission said its engineering department described the traffic regulator (tangle-ator) would be a more suitable adjective) was a "distinct traffic hazard" and that some 4,200 vehicles daily had to fight their way around the impediment to get to the open highway. That number of cars is going north and south and combined with the 2,000 which daily pass from east to west, has been creating a nightmare to motorists these many years. We are not sorry to see it go. In fact we are very happy about the whole thing. Oh, yes, a cry from certain quarters undoubtedly will be raised in protestation, but then the same wail went up when they took out the old fountain and installed the present device. It is planned to replace the Blinker with a stop-light. There is no other alternative! The Blinker must go or there will be no resurfacing of the streets of Emmitsburg! This is a decree and we feel certain that it will work out to the betterment of our community, as a whole. The horse and buggy era has passed, just as has large fountains located on small squares has become obsolete and now the Blinker has outlived its usefulness and must give way to a better and more progressive traffic regulating system—the traffic light.

The Town Fathers are to be commended on their prudent decision to effect the removal. Not only was Emmitsburg displeased about the situation, but two years ago, when the Route 15 Improvement Assn., comprised of Emmitsburg and Thurmont citizens met, it also made certain that in any platform calling for improvements to Route 15 must contain a section relegating the Blinker to oblivion. Wouldn't be a bit surprised now to see an obituary on the Blinker written by our own local Homer.

While most of us have been complacently going about our daily routines, a group of local citizens, members of the Chamber of Commerce and the Lions Club, has been intensely active in negotiations with concerns with the aim of having at least one of them locate here. It now appears that their work has not been in vain, as the result of developments which occurred here this week. It is felt that a bona fide agreement has been reached between the group and a nearby Pennsylvania publishing concern and that it is pretty certain that it will accept the invitation extended to come here on a permanent basis. The industry selected will, we feel, be a credit to our community and will afford an opportunity for our young folks to obtain good jobs that will pay them a livable wage and therefore will insure their staying right here at home with their parents and friends, not having to wander all over the country and universe seeking their livelihood. Now don't get excited . . . the deal hasn't matured as yet, but the company's representative stated irrevocably that he would give a favorable recommendation to his concern, to establish here and we feel that since they were the ones who approached our group about the setup and the fact that they are favorably impressed, will undoubtedly terminate in their selecting Emmitsburg for their next point of expansion—we hope!

Democrats Hold County Lead In Registration

There are 30,099 persons eligible to cast ballots on Nov. 4, the Election Supervisors reported this week in summing up the results of registrations and transfers since 1950, when the permanent registration system started.

These figures, which may be changed slightly by a more complete check, leave the Democrats with a 2940 book majority. The figures show 16,371 Democrats, 13,431 Republicans and 289 persons not affiliated with either of the major parties.

The peak of the late registration load arrived last Friday when 300 names were added to the rolls in addition to numerous transfers made for persons who have moved from district to another.

About 100 persons were still in line Saturday when the noon deadline arrived. Those in line at noon were permitted to register. The line at one time extended from the supervisors' office to near Court St.

Registration books were closed after the last new registrant was entered. They will remain closed until after the Nov. 4 election. The State law requires that no persons be registered within 30 days of an election and may not be registered until 10 days after an election.

The Democratic majority in '50 was 2853 giving that party a net gain of 87 for the county during the permanent registration proceedings.

Final figures for registration since the new system went into effect, show 1836 Democrats, 1741 Republicans, and 89 unaffiliated names added.

Chief of concern of the supervisors at this time is in trying to educate voters to the correct manner of marking a ballot.

While no accurate figures are available, they say hundreds of ballots are thrown out as "void" in Frederick County at elections every two years.

The principal and most inexcusable cause for voiding ballots cast is because check marks are used to designate the choice of voters. The check mark is barred by law and precinct officials have no choice but to throw out the ballots so cast.

Practically every ballot so cast plainly indicates who the voter wishes to cast a vote for but the officials can't count them.

Check marks are used regularly on ballots in most every precinct in the county, it was explained, and to date no one has devised a method to halt the practice.

It is useless to bother with check marks. The law requires that you use an "X" and avoid any distinctive marks on your ballot.

The supervisors suggest that the clubs, individuals, organizations and party leaders campaign diligently to educate people not to use check marks on ballots.

Not all of the names recorded this year have been entered recently. Many were added before the primary contests last May.

Officials said the new registrants came from all districts of the county. Party leaders figure that most of the new registrants will vote in November. They attribute a large part of the late activity to the efforts of many organizations to encourage everyone to register and vote. Both major political parties were reported active in getting the new names recorded, they said.

Town's Oldest Resident Succumbs To Illness

One of Emmitsburg's grand old ladies passed into eternity Monday afternoon at about 5:30 o'clock. She was Mrs. Sarah Emma Nunemaker, aged 96, and the mother of a former mayor of Emmitsburg, the late Guy S. Nunemaker.

Mrs. Nunemaker, Emmitsburg's oldest resident, died at her home, 530 W. Main St., after an illness of two years. She was born in Frederick County and had been a resident of Emmitsburg for 94 years. Her husband, the late William Pierce Nunemaker, died in 1919.

Mrs. Nunemaker was a daughter of the late Joseph and Sarah Ellen Waddle Smith. She was a member of Trinity Methodist Church of Emmitsburg.

Mrs. Nunemaker's life and memory spanned more than half the period of American history since the Revolution. She could recall the administration of Franklin Pierce, 14th President of the U. S., the birth of the Republican Party, soldiers passing through Emmitsburg for the Battle of Gettysburg, and many other historic events. In Emmitsburg she was one among the last who could remember the pastor of the Presbyterian Church, Robert S. Grier, who died in 1865, after serving the church for nearly 52 years.

She leaves one daughter, Mary Edythe Nunemaker, at home; two brothers, Charles Waddle, Denver, and Howard Waddle, Hutchinson, Kan., and a niece, Margaret Waddle Hipple, Hutchinson. A son, Guy, died in 1946.

Funeral services were held Wednesday afternoon at three o'clock at the late home, her pastor, Rev. Byron Keescher, officiating. Interment in Mountain View Cemetery.

Roads Board Wants Blinker Removed

Concrete action to have the Blinker removed from the Square and a traffic light installed, was taken Monday night at the regular monthly meeting of the Emmitsburg Town Council. A full board was present and the decision was unanimous. Chairman of the Board of Commissioners Col. Thomas J. Frailey, presided at the session.

The action was spurred by the recommendation of the engineering department of the State Roads Commission, which termed device "a distinct traffic hazard" and recommended its removal. In fact the removal was tantamount to an ultimatum served by the Commission in respect to resurfacing the main thoroughfares and the Square. In polite language, the Town Council was told in no uncertain terms that the Blinker has to go or there will be no improvements to the road at all. Just when the removal will be effected is not yet certain, but it is expected in the not too distant future.

In other routine business transacted at the meeting, the Commissioners reported that most of the owners of vacant lots have complied with the ordinance requiring lots being kept clean of weeds. It was pointed out at the session that four local business establishments were in arrears in paying their corporation taxes and that now interest was being added to the bill.

Town Clerk Louise Sebald presented the treasurer's, tax collector's and clerk's reports and all were approved as presented. Chief of Police Robert L. Koontz reported parking meter revenue for September as $314.57. The Board was invited to Hagerstown this month to witness a sanitary land-fill demonstration.

Kent Control Ends Here
Rent control in the Emmitsburg District has been abolished by default, it was learned at Monday's meeting. It is understood that only two towns in Frederick County renewed the control, namely Frederick and Brunswick. It was felt there was no further need for the control here and therefore the Commissioners didn't have the regulation renewed.

Want Natural Gas Here
Acting on the request of a number of local citizens, the Town Fathers have taken up negotiations with a natural gas company in an effort to have the commodity piped into Emmitsburg. It was pointed out that the gas line is in the near proximity of Emmitsburg, about four miles away, and it is felt that the town is ready for such an enterprise. Commissioner Wales E. Rightmire was appointed to head a committee to make the contact with the gas utility and to see if it was at all feasible to pipe the gas into the town.

Gasoline Tax Receipts Set New Record

For the first time in the history of the gasoline tax division of the State Comptroller's Office gross receipts exceeded $30 million in the last fiscal year, according to a report of B. F. Nossell, Chief of the Division to J. Millard Tawes, state comptroller.

The report cited the continuing upward trend of collections in recent years which has resulted in the all-time collection figure of $30.2 million for the past fiscal year. After the payment of administrative expenses and the retention of $75,000 for refund purposes, $28 million was distributed to the State Roads Commission, counties and municipalities and Baltimore City.

The roads commission received $14 million, the counties and municipalities $5.6 million, and Baltimore City $8.4 million.

The report also called attention to the fact that although the cost of administration by approximately $10,000 during the year due largely to salaries, the cost of administering the motor vehicle fuel tax is still less than .3 of 1 per cent. This low cost of administration is inherent in the nature of the motor vehicle fuel tax, according to Mr. Tawes, and he states that this tax continues to be the most economical of all taxes to administer.

During the year the number of sources from which tax revenue was derived showed a considerable increase due to the inception of the motor carriers' reciprocal tax and to an increase in the number of registered Diesel users and sellers.

Despite the substantial increase in the number of sources, however, 98.4 per cent of the total revenue was collected from motor vehicle fuel dealers, with more than 50 per cent being collected from the three largest dealers.

Refunds decreased from $24,000 in comparison to the previous year, dropping from $2.08 million to $2.06 million in 1952. This is attributed to the fact that by 1949 about 95 per cent of the farm in Maryland used mechanized equipment with only a slight increase since, and to the division's "vigorous policy of investigation."

Chronicle Press
EMMITSBURG, MARYLAND

When we cast our ballots on Nov. 4, we will register our choice between two political parties. But this terrifically important step, which no American citizen can afford to neglect, will not automatically solve our problems for us.

In these times, the obligations to vote carries with it the obligation to embark upon a long range "follow-up" campaign such as this nation has rarely if ever engaged in before.

We Americans can never have a genuinely representative government until our representatives in Congress actually represent us in fact. They can never do that until we are able to tell them clearly, until we have made up our minds ourselves.

Now, more than ever, we must remember that political parties do NOT lead. They follow; and they follow what they think the public wants.

So after we have determined which party is to administer our affairs, we must keep on and tell that party very clearly what we want done. To do this we must first get clear in our own minds just what the fundamental national problems are. Then, we must reach our own individual decisions on what should be done about them, and we must make our decisions known to the new President and the new Congress.

Obviously, no matter who wins the election, most of the major problems we face today will still be around to plague us.

For example, the powerful Russian state and the vicious international conspiracies of the Communist Party are not going to disappear just because the U. S. has held an election. Methods of defense and the cost of defense, will still be problems—and much too big to be left solely in the hands of elected officials.

And, as long as defense remains a major concern, we will probably continue to have a distorted economy in which government spending will play an abnormally large part.

These are but a few of the issues we shall have to grapple with.

Moreover, whomever we elect, the fact will remain that both major political parties are so divided and sub-divided that a majority vote for either one of them is not necessarily a clear order from the people. We will vote either Republican or Democratic because we prefer one of the parties on the whole, and not because we accept everything in its platform.

In the next Congress, as in past Congresses, some northern Republicans will continue to vote with the Democrats on some issues, such as international affairs; and some southern Democrats will continue to vote with the Republicans on certain domestic issues.

Consequently, when the excitement of this election is all over, the people of America will still have to grapple with their problems, one by one; make up their minds on definite steps to be taken, one by one; and get action in Congress through steady and continual contact with their Senators and Congressmen, regardless of political affiliation.

We can't preserve free enterprise and make it work at its effective best just by casting a vote to elect some George and then saying, "Let George do it."

We will have to "do it" ourselves. And it will take hard thought and hard work.

Forest Fires On Decrease In State

Maryland showed a decrease both in acreage burned and number of forest fires in 1951, according to a report released this week by American Forest Products Industries. A total of 419 fires burned 2345 acres last year. This compares to 632 fires that burned 2978 acres in 1950. Careless smokers were responsible for 156 fires, and debris burners started 94.

Maryland's excellent forest protection record was mirrored nationally. The nation's 1951 acreage burn was 10.7 million—one-third less than the previous all-time low record recorded in 1949. "An alert public, aware of its responsibilities for being careful with fire in the woods, deserves much credit for keeping the nation's forest fire losses down," says James C. McClellan, chief forester for AFPI. "The increased effectiveness of fire fighting units, expanded use of radio communication and power equipment in the woods, and the extension of organized protection have been major factors in cutting fire losses," Chief Forester McClellan adds.

Maryland's forest protection record is carefully analyzed in a statistical report now being distributed by AFPI, national coordinator of the Keep Green Forest Fire Prevention Campaign underway in 33 states.

The AFPI report, based on U. S. Forest Service figures, lists Maryland as one of 31 states that provide organized protection for all their woodlands.

Urges Prevention Of Colds In Flocks

Do your best to prevent the appearance of colds in your laying flock this fall and winter and you will enjoy more profitable egg production. Colds can practically ruin a whole laying season. Production may fall off 50 per cent within a few days after a flock suffers an outbreak of colds; and the condition may persist for several weeks.

Usually, simple colds result indirectly from errors in management or faulty construction in the laying house itself. When the poultry raiser permits his flock to become chilled, or makes no attempt to plug up cracks in the walls or to replace broken window panes, he is inviting an outbreak of colds. Eliminate these conditions with proper ventilation and insulation.

Infectious Coryza

True infection coryza—which is often called a "cold"—results from a definite germ. Infected chickens at first have a nasal discharge of watery consistency; later it becomes sticky. There may be some swelling of the face, wattles, and skin of the neck. Difficult breathing and coughing may be noted. While mortality is not high, the birds go out of production and often become culls.

Good results are being obtained in controlling infectious coryza (colds) by using sulfathiazole products, which most poultry-medicine dealers can supply. The use of inhalants or nasal washes will frequently give affected birds temporary relief by loosening congestion in the upper respiratory passages.

Separate Carriers

Recovered birds are apparently immune to the disease. However, since they still may carry the infection, it is advisable to keep them separated from younger stock.

Colds and coryza should not be confused with other respiratory diseases, such as infectious laryngotracheitis and bronchitis. With these conditions, there is considerable coughing, gasping, and similar symptoms that more or less distinguish them. These are virus diseases and can be partially prevented by vaccination.

A New Game: "The Shadow"

Here is a new game to play in your home. It could be called "The Shadow." For materials you will want an outline map of the U. S. Be sure you draw in, roughly, the borders of the individual 48 states. Johnny's or Suzy's geography book will be helpful in shaping the states and locating their borders. When the outline map is completed, take a black crayon or heavy black pencil and make a black blotch over the lower two-thirds of the state of California.

Now give your wife (or husband or children) the privilege of guessing the meaning of the shaded area in California. If you want to make it more of a game, let the participants ask 10 questions, like they do on the TV program. "The Name's the Same," to get clues on the correct answer. If they guess it, fine; if not, you tell them. The answer is: The shaded area in California represents what total Federal government expenditures were for the fiscal year 1929 in terms of the total income of people. In other words the Federal government in 1929 spent for all purposes a total budget that could have been paid by taking the total incomes of the people in the lower two-thirds of California.

The Shadow Spreads

Now take the black crayon again. Black out the rest of California and these states too: Oregon, Washington, Nevada, Utah, Montana, Colorado, Idaho, Arizona, New Mexico, Wyoming, North Dakota, South Dakota, and the upper half of Nebraska. Ask your livingroom audience the meaning of this bigger shaded area which now looms as about half of the land area of the USA. After they've had their guesses, give them the answer: In 1939 the Federal government spent an amount equal to the total incomes of all the people living in this big black-out area!

And now the last step in the game. With the black crayon blot out the remainder of Nebraska and these additional states: Kansas, Oklahoma, Texas, Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, Arkansas, Louisiana, Mississippi and half of the state of Alabama. When your guesses are all in, give the correct answer: If all the income of all the people residing in this huge area of the USA were totaled up, it would be just enough to pay the present expenses of the Federal government!

Frightening Growth

That's "The Shadow!" The black area represents the total burden of the Federal government upon the population and resources of the U. S. It is overwhelming to look at. Now let's add the burden of state and local governments. With the black crayon or pencil, blot out the remainder of Alabama, and these additional states: Kentucky, Tennessee, Georgia, Florida, South Carolina, and three-fourths of North Carolina. And you then have the total burden of state and national government on the population and resources of the nation.

Nothing could more graphically show the frightening growth and paralyzing effect of a mounting bureaucracy and expanding government. Our map now shows 83 per cent of the land area, and its population, pouring every ounce of its human and material resources into the paws of government. And that, in effect, is what government is costing the American people. It is far too much. It is ruinous.

The Danger

The basic ingredients of our American way of life cannot survive indefinitely with such an abnormal-sized government. It will sooner or later eliminate the right to private property, which is the keynote of our capitalistic society; free enterprise, which is our dynamo of progress; and human liberty, without which life itself would be an empty thing.

"The Shadow" ought to be played in every livingroom in America. For only when the people have a clear graphic picture of the bigness of our present government will they be moved to action in clamping down on its growth. Think of this: Total government spending for the present fiscal year—local, state, and Federal—will be equivalent to the total wages and salaries of 75 per cent of all the employed people of the nation outside government! It is of vital importance now that a start be made toward whittling down the size of government. If unified action is not taken by the citizens now there is danger that we shall all be engulfed in the spreading black shadow of powerful, freedom-killing government.

HOW DOES THE POWER GET INTO THE BOMB?

Uranium is not enough. Preparing it for the A-bomb takes vast quantities of electricity. So does all the huge production for Defense. Also, homes, farms and businesses are using twice as much electricity as before World War II. Will the electric companies develop enough power? The answer is YES!

New plants double U. S. power. The map pinpoints the new electric power plants and plant additions built by the nation's electric companies just since World War II. They give each American twice as much electricity as he had then. In spite of this, the people pushing for socialized electricity still talk "power shortages" as an excuse for getting government deeper into the electric business.

• "MEET CORLISS ARCHER"—ABC—Fridays—9:30 P. M., Eastern Time.

POTOMAC EDISON CO.

As much electric power as Detroit uses will be needed by one A-bomb factory now nearing completion. Another new A-bomb project will use twice that much. For each of these, electric light and power companies are planning or building a giant power plant—without one cent of your tax money!

Battlefield in the struggle against socialism. On the Niagara River, five local electric companies are ready to build a big new plant to develop additional electric power. But the job is being held up by those who want government to build the plant—even though that would take longer and cost Americans $350 million in taxes. Similar delays hold up new power at Hell's Canyon, Idaho, Roanoke Rapids, N. C., and Kings River, Calif. America's electric companies can provide this power—without tax money and without the threat of socialism.

These facts are heartening proof that the experience and sound business management of the country's hundreds of electric companies are ready and able to meet the nation's biggest power needs.

The case of those brown spots and holes appearing in your cot- ton wash dresses has been solved in the U. S. Dept. of Agriculture textiles laboratory. Everything from new washing equipment to insects had been suspected.

Textiles specialists find that many of the newer zippers con- tain two metals — copper and aluminum. When wet garments are kept in contact with these different metals, a chemical re- action sets in. Enough acid is given off to damage the fabric. Then, when the dress is ironed, the damage shows up in spots and holes. In addition to camphens, the fabric must also contain some substance that will conduct electricity. That could be minerals from hard water, salt in liquid starch — or even

Miss Hartman Continues Graphic Description Of Recent Alaskan Trip

The Inland Passage

With the boarding of the Canadian Pacific "Princess Louise" at Vancouver the evening of the day described in the preceding article, we were finally "All aboard for Alaska" by the famous "Indian Passage." And now, before we go any farther, I should like to insert a small geography lesson for the benefit of those readers who are like I was before this trip in respect to their knowledge of the lands and waters involved in it.

The lesson comprises three facts, as follows: (1) the waters of the Passage are not "inland" at all in the usual sense of the word (within the country, remote from the sea) but are actually the salt waters of the Pacific Ocean as enclosed between the Canadian-Alaskan mainland and the chain of islands that fringe it between Vancouver, British Columbia and Skagway, Alaska; (2) the part of Alaska into which the Passage penetrates is not the huge peninsula that we are all familiar with, projecting toward Asia from the northwest tip of North America, but a narrow strip southeast of that along the edge of upper British Columbia, known as the Panhandle; (3) the Passage extends for a thousand miles, "protected" indeed, and yet by no means easy of navigation, with its narrow, irregular channel, rocky sides, and frequent heavy rains and fogs. (I must add that our own trip was so completely without mishap, including the hazard of seriously bad weather—we had in fact practically continuous sunshine—that I doubt whether any passengers gave a thought to possible dangers; but we had a vivid reminder of them only a few weeks ago in the news that the "Princess Kathleen," beautiful sister ship of the "Louise," had been sunk (tho happily without loss of life) near the head of the Passage.)

And now back to the "Louise" on her way out of Vancouver Harbor under the Lion's Gate Bridge into the Gulf of Georgia, and so northward to Alaska! The two days of sailing in Canadian waters, that came first, gave us a thrilling introduction to what is generally considered the main interest of the cruise—its scenic grandeur. On our right ("to starboard" in ship terms) were wooded mountains coming down to the ocean, their sides deeply and irregularly indented by inlets recalling the fjords of the Norwegian coast, with glimpses of snow-capped peaks beyond; and on our left ("to port"), first the solid greenness of mountainous Vancouver Island stretching along the coast for over two hundred miles, then the open sea fading off in the distance between breaks in the island chain, and then clusters of many smaller and variously-shaped islands, also clad in the green of pine and spruce.

And inseparably connected with this striking panorama of nature's making (which words, mine at least, cannot do justice to) are the historical associations added by man in days not long distant (for these waters were uncharted and these shores unknown before the late eighteenth century; the Russians' much earlier activities were farther north). Place-names on the maps and historical notes in the travel literature given us, supplemented by the well-informed purser's lecture (and, for me, a recent glance at the Encyclopedia Britannica) gave specific information, which I can only summarize here in a list of what I gathered to be the main facts: the coming into this unknown part of the world, in the 1770's, of Spanish and English navigators and explorers seeking especially, but in vain, a northwest passage from the Pacific to the Atlantic and the consequent claims of Spain and England to this territory; the taking over of the present Vancouver Island for his country by Senor Bodega Quadra and his naming it (to his later embarrassment, one would suppose) after himself; the resulting dispute with England, the threat of war, and the sending, in 1792, of Captain George Vancouver to take it over for England and change its name to his own; Vancouver's daring and difficult and important activities in these regions for the next five years, "feeling his way" the whole length of the Passage, making the first charts in the modern sense of the word, and giving permanent names to many parts of it out of his personal associations—Georgian Bay, for example, at the lower end of the Passage, after King George III, who supported his undertaking and Lynn Canal, at the top, after his home in England, King's Lynn. (Here I interrupt my list to insert a "Bulletin" note on Queen Charlotte Sound, first stretch of open water, just north of Vancouver Island; it gives a glimpse of the Captain's difficulties: "It was in this Sound . . . that Captain Vancouver ran his "Discovery" [an 80-foot sloop] aground and fought off fierce Haida Indians who came in huge red cedar canoes to plunder his ship.") Now two final facts outstanding in the earlier history of this region: the coming of the fur hunters and traders from many countries and their frightful exploitation of the natives; the pushing westward all the way to the present British Columbian coast and its islands, of the Hudson's Bay Company's trading posts and the beginnings of settlement around them.

Reporting now on the whereabouts of the "Louise" on the morning of our second day out, we were 500 miles from Vancouver in the harbor of our only Canadian port of call on the cruise, Prince Rupert. And with this stop began another of the outstanding pleasures of the trip; making the acquaintance of some of the "cities" (so the travel articles refer to them, regardless of their size) scattered along the edges of the channel—five of them out of the 10 in the thousand miles—each with its own distinctive features of interest. In the case of this first stop; however, truth obliges me to report that my direct acquaintance was extremely slight, whatever the reasons—hardly more than a climb up (and soon afterwards, down) a long long flight of wooden steps leading from the dock to the difficult site on the side of a bluff, and a walk along quiet street. But this experience is so obviously incomplete that I must, with some embarrassment, quote for the reader the features of Prince Rupert that the visitor is supposed to "get." Here are phrases from the travel literature already referred to: "the hub of the halibut and salmon fishing industry of the North Pacific" ("Halibut Capital of the World") . . . "the centre of vast lumbering and mining enterprises" . . . possessor of "the finest and best maintained collection of totem poles assembled anywhere in the world." . . . "the world's largest cold storage plant" (I record this with a shiver) for halibut and salmon caught in the waters of the Passage. Finally, altho the present town is quite new (built in 1910) and there are no relics of an earlier existence, so far as I saw (which wasn't far), the name of Prince Rupert has an interest for those who appreciate historical connections. It was built on the site of one of the Hudson's Bay Company's trading posts and gets its name from the princely cousin of King Charles II who was a member of the original corporation when it was organized by the king in 1670.

Several hours after leaving Prince Rupert, U. S. Customs officials appeared, apparently out of nowhere, and held the briefest imaginable "interviews" in the lower regions of the ship, and soon after that we had crossed boundary waters and were in United States territory, the above-mentioned Panhandle of Southeastern Alaska. Then came the exciting first stop there, at Ketchikan, a one-time Indian fishing settlement, now an island "city" built partly on stilts over the water (I can still recall the odd sound our sight-seeing bus made driving over plank streets). The drive through and beyond the town showed much more that was unusual: lovely Ketchikan Creek, where we stopped for our first sight of salmon leaping upstream to spawn; a winding hilly road beyond the lower level with a small Indian village in one direction, where we came unexpectedly upon an impressive collection of Totem poles and close beside them a picturesque group of Indian children, some mere babies, standing stiffly and holding out, for the tourist to buy, various-sized bunches of the purplish-pink fireweed growing wild all along the roadside; in the other direction, an attractive residential section gay with cultivated flowers and commanding a really spectacular view of the waterfront, the sea, and the islands beyond; the waterfront itself with its evidences of Ketchikan's main industry, the fishing boats of many sizes and kinds, the salmon traps, and the numerous canneries (in the number of pounds of salmon and halibut canned annually, Ketchikan, according to the Bulletin, holds the world's record). And following this interest-packed drive Ketchikan offered the special pleasure of the first visits to Alaskan curio and souvenir shops. But I cannot even take "a look around" at these fascinating places now, for our time in Ketchikan is used up, and there are others of the kind in every port of call; perhaps a later note can give a glimpse of what they have to offer. So "All aboard!" again, this time for the most thrilling part of the Alaskan trip.

I quote the following note from the cruise Bulletin: "The British Government had a standing reward of twenty thousand pounds (about $50,000) for the first person who returned with proof of the long-dreamed waterway thru the North American continent from Pacific to Atlantic. Oddly enough, a passage was finally discovered in 1946. The Royal

Cost Of Electricity To Consumers Decreases

Consumer cost of electric power in Emmitsburg has decreased during the past 10 years, while the cost of living has skyrocketed, it was reported this week by President R. Paul Smith of the Potomac Edison system, of which the PE Co. is a part.

This decreasing consumer electric utility dollar has been maintained, he said, while the P-E system has been embarking upon an expansion program to meet the demands of its customers here and in other communities and rural areas in its service area. This expansion program, he pointed out, has been a factor in giving more value for each consumer electric dollar.

Mr. Smith said that his company's average rate to residential users of electric power in 1942 was 4.42 cents, and this year it is 3.11 cents, representing a decrease of approximately 30 per cent.

Over the same 10-year period, the PE president said, the cost of living has increased by 67 per cent, according to the June 15 index of the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics.

The P-E System, from the end of World War II to the end of 1952, will have spent over $47 million nearly doubling its generating capacity — 154,000 kilowatts to 294,000 kilowatts—and improving its transmission and distribution facilities.

Mr. Smith said the post-war story of the nation's privately-owned electric companies has been one of startling and unmatched expansion. Increased efficiency of new equipment and increased use of electric service have caused the customer's dollar for electricity to remain relatively constant—actually increasing the worth of the consumers electric dollar in this area.

Mr. Smith said that in six years, 1946 through 1951, the nation's electric companies have increased their generating capacity by 49 per cent at a cost of $10 billion. By 1954 the companies will have spent another $8 billion, doubling the electric power capacity of the investor-owned companies.

"This expansion program," Mr. Smith said, "shows that electric companies have the unquestioned ability to construct the facilities to provide all the power America can economically use. This $18 billion dollar investment of hard cash by millions of people, directly or indirectly, reflects faith in the future and deep belief in Freedom of Enterprise."

BABSON

Writes . . .

By ROGER BABSON

BABSON PARK, Mass., Oct. 9.—Much has been written recently about the need for salesmen to sell! They say sales are down because salesmen have forgotten how to sell. Is this really so?

Much also has been written about the savings people have accumulated since World War II. We have been told that people have more money to spend than ever and that if they would only spend it, business would be good. Sales managers have long sung the tune that the ability to buy has not fluctuated so much as the desire to buy; that people are not buying because they are not being sold! The fact is, however, that most sales statisticians overlook the way in which savings are distributed among our people. Federal Reserve Board figures for 1950 estimated that the $20 billion in savings were distributed as follows: the top 10 per cent of our population held 73 per cent of the net savings; the top 20 per cent owned 93 per cent of the total net savings. This leaves the bottom 80 per cent of the population with but seven per cent of the savings, operating pretty much on a hand-to-mouth basis.

If the average income of this 80 per cent is $3000 (and this is a high estimate), then how, I ask, can you expect salesmen to sell to people who just haven't the money? If you don't believe, a $3000-a-year worker doesn't have the money, then take your pencil and figure roughly—after deducting Federal, state and local taxes—what you yourself pay for rent, light, heat, water, gas, telephone and repairs. Add to this, food, clothing, charities, insurance, and miscellaneous. Then do the same for the $300-a-year worker, married and with two children. I am sure you will then begin to wonder where the mass market is for $2000 automobiles, $200 refrigerators, $75 vacuum cleaners, $10 shoes, or even 9c-per-pound potatoes! I believe in more intensive selling and more intensive advertising; but labor must reduce costs so people will have the money to buy more.

Why Do They Buy?

The one time since World War II when business conditions were relatively normal was in the early months of 1950. The great backlog of demand was beginning to be satisfied for those who had the money. Then, bang, came Korea! War scares and talk of shortages prompted a mad rush of scare buying. According to a recent sampling study of about 10,000 families by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, a good cross section of our population, from almost a hundred large cities to small towns, the 1950 buyers were upper middle-class families with a net income, after taxes, of about $4300. But their spending spree put them in the red to the tune of $400 that year.

Keep in mind that these were people with net earnings of $4500—an appreciable cut above the average worker with gross earnings of $300. Even so, they not only had to dip into savings but go into the hole for the purchases they made. Why did they spend? Their wants were spawned primarily by war hysteria and cries of shortages. There were those who were afraid that if they waited they wouldn't be able to buy that new car, or washer, or suit of clothes; or that, if they did wait, prices would skyrocket. In other words, many of these people had their hands forced by fear.

Pricing Yourself

Out Of The Market
Sales managers can talk all they want to about the need to sell and sell hard, but if the consumer can't afford the price tag, how is he going to buy? We've matched the recent potato fiasco change the dietary habits of a number of people. Potato sales still haven't fully recovered, while the sales of rice, macaroni, and spaghetti remain high. When bus companies raise fares too fast, they lose 10 per cent of their riders.

Whatever happened to natural rubber—and butter—and the silk industries? The answer to this question explains why the automotive industry is in the peculiar economic paradox of having both a shortage of cars and a shortage of buyers. The history of American industry is filled with the ghosts of overpricing. Either industry doesn't know the history of

Nurses To Meet In Frederick

Nurses enrolled in the Civil Defense Medical Services are being asked to attend a supplemental training course in Civil Defense Nursing beginning next Monday at the Frederick YMCA.

The program covers parts three and four of the training course and has been planned and organized by the Frederick County Health Department. A total of 143 registered professional nurses who are enrolled in the Civil Defense organization have been asked to attend.

The course will be given on October 13, 14, 16, 20, 22 and 24. Identical sessions have been planned for twice each day for the convenience of the nurses. The afternoon session is scheduled for one p. m. and the evening session will begin at 7:30 p. m.

Doctors, nurses and others well versed in their practicing fields will present the topics. The first two parts of the training program were presented to the nurses last year.

Among those giving sections of the course are Dr. Frank D. Wothington, emergency treatment of burns, wounds and radiation; Dr. R. L. Guest, Civil Defense Planning for Care of Children; Bernard P. Lorenzen, artificial respiration; Dr. Julia Kagen, emotional stress as it affects Civil Defense Nursing Activities; Miss Gloria Smith, provisions for asepsis with improvised equipment; Miss Mary Wilhide, anesthesia and oxygen administration; Dr. B. O. Thomas, Sr., planning for care of maternity patients and new-born infants.

During the second week the following will present courses: Dr. L. R. Schoilman, drugs, medications, etc.; Walter Comer, emergency sanitation measures; W. C. Wheeler, hematology; Dr. C. E. Pruitt, venipuncture, infusion, transfusion and hydatidocystitis procedures; Dr. Forbes H. Burgess, information on spread of communicable diseases; Dr. I. D. Lyon, tuberculosis, and Miss Maria Sagardia, techniques in the care of patients with communicable diseases.

The training course is under the auspices of the Department of Civil Defense of Frederick County, and J. Roger Fisher, the director, is urging all registered nurses not presently enrolled in Civil Defense Medical Services to attend the course and notify his office in Winchester Hall, Frederick, of their intentions.

overpricing, or else it is operating with its head in the sand. Unless the manufacturers and labor leaders who depend on mass markets reduce their costs to fit the mass pocket-book, their days are numbered.

MARYLAND FARM FRONT

The final loan rate for Maryland corn grading No. 3 or better, or 4 on test weight only, has been set at $1.76 a bushel, according to James A. Cottman, acting chairman of the Maryland Production and Marketing State Committee. This figure is based on 90 per cent of parity on Oct. 1, and is the same as the preliminary rate announced in July.

Maryland farmers can apply for price support loans through their county PMA offices, after the corn has been in storage one month. Loans may be secured up until April 30, 1953. On-the-fare storage must meet PMA requirements that insure safe keeping of the corn, and periodic inspections will be made by PMA while the corn is under loan.

Mr. Cottman said that loans will be made at 3 and one-half per cent interest and are payable anytime the farmer can sell the corn at a profit. If the corn

Opera Tickets Go On Sale

The box office for reserved seats for the forthcoming stage production of the popular opera, "Rigoletto," which will be presented at the Majestic Theater, Gettysburg, Oct. 16, will open at the theater today, Sydney J. Poppay, manager, announced this week.

The London Opera Co., making its second transcontinental tour, will bring a cast of 70, including their own symphony orchestra.

Verdi interprets in the opera the heartbreaking pathos and gripping drama of a hunchback jester, his beautiful daughter and a gay duke of the Renaissance, a period which offers full scope for the rich costumes and attractive staging effects for which the London Opera Co. is noted.

Mail orders are now being accepted at the box office of the Majestic. Such applications will be handled in the order of their receipt and filled before the tickets are placed on public sale. Patrons are asked to address their letters to the manager of the theater, indicating the number of seats, the price and the location preferred, and to enclose a stamp, self-addressed envelope, and check. The tickets will be mailed.

THE FIRST SQUARE

Three square meals. We take it for granted that every growing boy and girl should have three square meals a day. Communities pride themselves on their hot lunch programs, on the well-balanced meals available in school cafeterias. Mothers strain the budget to fill the bottomless pits around the dinner table with a balanced diet. But the "first square" is too often neglected.

The high school girl spends the precious morning minutes trying out a new hairdo, grabs a piece of toast, and rushes out the door. The teen age boy who has ignored alarms, calls, and vigorous shakes sleeps till the last moment, downs a glass of milk and runs to catch the bus.

Nothing very square about these breakfasts. And even worse, recent survey showed that 15 per cent of all high school girls and nine per cent of the boys eat no breakfast at all before starting for school. It's not surprising that these youngsters who have been fasting since dinner—16 or 17 hours back—suffer from 11 a. m. fatigue. The class hours until lunchtime are wasted because they can't pay attention. They are restless and bored, and tired.

High school boys and girls often seem quite grown up, but they are not yet completed products. They are constantly, steadily growing. Their days are busy, crammed with learning and playing. They burn up fuel like two-legged steam engines. The average diet of an adult cannot meet their demands. That first square should be even more nutritious than once necessary to get the housewife through till lunch.

The breakfast need not be heavy. Griddle cakes are more filling than nutritious. Fruit, whole grain or enriched cereal or bread, and milk make a good foundation to which some protein food should be added as often as possible. Serve eggs when they are plentiful and cheap. Take a hint from a Dutch breakfast and put a platter of sliced cheese and cold meat on the breakfast table. Liver and kidneys are relatively low-cost sources of protein. Try serving a British breakfast with fish occasionally.

Too many American families adopt one breakfast routine and never vary it. A change of menu may help to get your youngsters to the table in time for the good meal they need for the day ahead of them.

Mrs. Werner Answers Critics

Stating her intention to "talk out loud and in the open" about the "scare words and hit-and-run tactics" of her opponent, Mrs. Stella Werner, Democratic candidate for Congress from the Sixth District, spoke last week to an open meeting of residents of the Urbana District at the Hyattstown Fire House.

"I worked hard for many years to obtain home rule for Montgomery County in the belief that strong and efficient government at the local level is the cornerstone of American democracy," Mrs. Werner said. "In view of my record it is ridiculous for my opponent to say that I am for 'centralized empire.' He has a couple of other favorite scare words: socialism and collectivism. Like a hit-and-run driver, he tosses these and runs, so that neither the voters nor I have a clue exactly what he means.

"At present it is being whispered about, that I believe in 'socialized medicine.' I'd like to say out loud and in the open what I do believe in. I have not been and am not now in favor of socialized medicine.

"I believe that it is good that very few babies now have diphtheria. I believe that it is good that less than half as many people now suffer from tuberculosis as did in 1920. These changes were brought about by research in preventive medicine and public health programs which control communicable diseases. But this is not socialized medicine. I have never been and am not now in favor of socialized medicine.

"I do not believe that our doctors should be in the hire of the government, nor that our hospitals should be owned by the government. But I do know that

Fire Averted

Prompt action by the Vigilant Hose Co. Wednesday morning was probably responsible for saving the storeroom occupied by Zurgable Bros. on W. Main St., and owned by Mr. Francis S. K. Matthews. The fire was discovered by the owner at about 5:30 a. m. when he smelled smoke and arose to investigate. A defective stoker was found to be the source of the trouble. No damage was reported.

Cure hay properly. Damp hay starts fires by spontaneous ignition.

Survey Roads

The Frederick County Commissioners and the members of the County Roads Board yesterday made a county-wide survey of the road requirements for next year. The party left the Court House in Frederick at 8:30 a. m. and spent the entire day making the survey. Mr. Charles R. Fuss is a member of the Roads Board and accompanied the group on the trip.
