Not that it wasn't known before, but the feeling of most Emmitsburgians that they would prefer to work locally, was brought back to light this week with the conclusion of the recent community development survey conducted by the local Jaycee Chapter. The same picture is true nationally, with most community residents preferring to work at home if at all possible. The recent organizing of the Jaycees has brought the community to where it is cognizant of the problem confronting it and I believe there is enough interest generated now to set the ball rolling. Already it is understood a small plastic concern is interested in locating here and a labor survey is in process. Even if nothing matures from the effort being put forth, at least a start has been made and a spark ignited. Sooner or later, if this present interest is maintained, we are bound to succeed in accomplishing our goal, diversified industry on a small scale. Cooperation in the recent survey made by the local Jaycees was on a high level and perhaps some good will be forthcoming from the project.

Just as the cost of living of major cities and communities vary so does the cost of medical attention. Let's just take the cost of an appendectomy for an example. If you live in Los Angeles this operation would set you back $235, but if you lived in Washington, D. C., the same bit of surgery would set you back $150. According to a price sample taken by a well known organization, the obituary "package" would cost you $114 in Cincinnati yet if you resided in New York the same service would be $184. As to the cost of office visits the price sampling came up with this answer: Los Angeles physicians get $5.90 a visit while those Docs in Minneapolis get only $3.35.

Up and up soars the old tax bill regardless of how much you complain. Take for instance our County School Budget proposed this year. With the school system already taking 75% of the tax dollar it will go even higher next year. While the school budget was just about 5 million dollars last year, this year it is proposed to raise this almost another million. How's this increase to be met? You guessed it... more taxes on real estate. With the county population expected to taper off I just can't see any justification for appropriating more money for additional schools. The present influx of out-of-state families has run its course and aside from the normal growth rate there hardly is a need to maintain this educational race. To top it off the Board of Education, mindful of its criticism, suggests hiring a survey organization to check its administration to ascertain as to whether or not it is doing the most prudent and economical administrating and whether or not it is engaging superfluous help. Naturally this would add many more thousands to the already over-padded budget. The County Commissioners should devote a great deal of thought and consideration before they agree to this proposed budget by the school system.

St. Joseph's Church Bazaar, Supper Saturday

Many former Emmitsburgians and friends are expected to attend the annual supper and bazaar sponsored by St. Joseph's Catholic Church here Saturday, Nov. 29. Featured at the bazaar this year will be a roast beef supper along with numerous palatable foods and delicacies. The affair will be held in the auditorium of St. Joseph's High School and servings will commence at 3:30 p. m. and continuing until all are served.

Both young and old will find various games and amusements on hand to make it a complete evening of entertainment and good eating. Tickets to the supper sell at 65c for children and $1.35 for adults. For those who desire carry-out suppers the price will be $1.50 and these individuals are asked to bring along their own containers.

Among the various tables and games to be operated, and their chairmen, are these: Novelty table, Mrs. Helen Brown; parcel post table, Mrs. Blanche Kepner; supper table, Mrs. Agnes Topper; diningroom table, Mrs. Marie Rosensteel; cake table, Mrs. Curtis D. Municipal League Elects Miller

Mayor George M. Miller of Takoma Park was elected President of The Maryland Municipal League at its 13th Annual Convention last week in Rockville. More than 225 municipal officials across the state were present for the convention to discuss such topics as annexation, recreation, and water pollution control. C. D. Spangler, Sanitary Engineer, U. Jaycee Survey Results Are Released

The recent community welfare survey conducted by the Greater Emmitsburg Junior Chamber of Commerce has been completed and analyzed by members of the Jaycee Committee on Community Development.

The survey is rather interesting in that it was divided into five categories which included the views of organizations, education leaders, businessmen, teen-agers and the general public. Data provided produced a wide variance of ideas of what the town needs between the different classes participating. It was noted that the first concern appeared the lack of job opportunities and advancement chances here in Emmitsburg where most of the local people would prefer to work and live. The survey was a confidential one and no names will be mentioned. Instead the committee has moulded the answers into percentage-wise figures for each of the various categories and the following run-down has been made ready for publication:

Organizations

Community Center with planned activities, 85%; Job opportunities, 55%; library and better educational facilities—retain Emmitsburg High School's Senior High, 35%; Swimming pool, 25%; better town appearance, 15%; better street lighting, 15%; sports activities and rifle range, 10%; Municipal Water Co., better parking, new Post Office and mail delivery, better housing and better traffic control on North and South Seton Ave., 5%.

Educational Leaders

Library and bookmobile service, 90%; Community Center with planned activities, 55%; Job opportunities, 35%; Adult Education courses and swimming pool, 15%; better town appearance, 10%; Municipal Water Co. and Post Office and mail delivery, 5%.

Businessmen

Favor a Retail Businessmen's Association to discuss local situations, 90%; job opportunities, 80%; Community Center with planned activities, 50%; better educational facilities and courses at local high schools and town library, 45%; new Post Office and postal delivery, 25%; better town appearance, municipal water co., better Christmas lighting, more parking, 15%; town street lighting, better street lighting and public swimming pool, 10%; house numbering, collection agency for overdue accounts, relocation of U S 140 through Taneytown and Emmitsburg, better traffic control on North and South Seton Ave., 5%.

Teen-Age Students

Would work in Emmitsburg if the type work they are studying for is available, 67%; would not work in Emmitsburg, 33%; dance parties, 95%; Community center with planned activities, 84%; swimming pool, 83%; library, 41%; tennis court, 36%; drag strip, 21%; horseback riding club, better courses at high school level, 16%; instrument instruction for local civic band, 14%; miniature golf, 13%; rifle range, hay rides, skating parties, tours, basketball league, 10%; bowling league, glee club, ping pong, more stores, pool room, 5%.

General Public

Job opportunities, 63%; Community center with planned activities, 45%; swimming pool, retain Emmitsburg Senior High School, 12%; better town appearance, better school courses, 10%; better park and playground, 9%; better streets, parking, shopping areas, housing, Christmas lighting, new Post Office and mail delivery, street lighting, night drop at bank, wider alleys and compulsory trash collection, 6%.

There was quite a large response on the lack of interest in the town and the lack of civic pride. The lack of interest in our town government and the lack of candidates to run for local office. The much too often heard saying of Why Do That, It Won't Do Any Good or that thought that we haven't had it before why do we need it now? The answer to many of these can be found among all the citizens of our town, we must work together with our elected leaders and other civic organizations to make this the type town we can all be proud of.

An intelligent girl is one who knows less than the man with whom she happens to be talking at the moment.

THIS 'N THAT

GEORGE W. WIREMAN

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the first in a series of articles dealing with our Federal Government and how it works.

Our Federal Government
In 1864 Abraham Lincoln said, "We cannot have a free government without elections." Of all the elections held throughout the world, none is more important and exciting than the one held each four years in the United States when Americans choose a President, Vice President, members of Congress, and countless state officers.

Now that our recent history-making election of November 8 is over and plans are being made to transfer ownership of the White House over to President-elect John F. Kennedy, it might be well to consider some of the important facts about our Federal Government and how it operates. This is the first in a series of articles covering the various branches of our government, which, next July 4th, will celebrate its 185th birthday.

Let us begin at the beginning, July 4, 1776 and the Constitution for the United States of America. The Constitution is the real foundation-stone of our American form of government for it covers three very important parts of government: (1) It tells how the government is organized; (2) It gives the powers of each part of the government; (3) It sets limits on the powers of the government.

The powers of each part of our Federal government are divided between the national (Federal) government and the states. The national government's powers are divided three ways . . . between legislative, executive, and judicial branches. As a result, we have a government of "checks and balances." In other words, each of the three main branches has certain powers over the others, so that no branch can become too strong.

Our Constitution is important in that it sets the limit on the powers of the various branches. Certain things which might take away the liberties of the people are forbidden.

Article I, Section I, of the Constitution states "All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States" We often say . . . as Abraham Lincoln did . . . that we have a Government "of the people, by the people." But there are nearly 180 million Americans in the United States. Obviously we can't all meet together to run our Government.

Since we cannot meet together, we elect men and women to represent us in governing our country. Members of Congress are the people's representatives and they make our national laws.

Among Congress' powers are: coining money, raising money by borrowing or levying taxes, controlling trade with other nations and between states, declaring war, and setting up post offices and Federal courts.

We elect members of Congress in each even-numbered year. When Congress meets in the following January, it gets a new number. The first Congress met in 1789, so the present one is the 86th in our history and in January 1961, the 87th Congress will convene.

It is important to note that our Constitution requires Congress to meet every January. Each year's meeting, which usually lasts into the summer, is called a session. This year's meeting was the second session of the 86th Congress, the first session having been called to order in January of 1959. The President can call a special session if there is an emergency.

It must be remembered that there are far too many bills for any Congressman to study them all, so they are divided among standing committees. Each studies bills on one subject, such as foreign affairs, agriculture, or banking.

The whole membership of Congress never votes on a bill at the same time. This is because the men who wrote the Constitution thought it unwise to let one group of men decide the laws. So, as a result of this thinking, they created a bicameral Congress. The word bicameral comes from two Latin words that mean "two houses." Both of the two "houses" of Congress . . . the Senate and the House of Representatives . . . must pass a bill before it can become a law.

Thus each bill approved by one House is studied and voted upon by the other House. The makers of the Constitution hoped that unwise or unjust bills passed by one House would be defeated in the other House. Who belongs to these two Houses and what do they do?

First, let us consider the special powers of these two "houses." The House of Representatives has two special powers. (1) All bills for raising money (through taxes or borrowing) must begin in the House. (2) Regarding elections, if no Presidential candidate gets a majority of the electoral vote, the House of Representatives elects the President. He is chosen from the three candidates with the most electoral votes. Each state has one vote in this matter.

Now let us look at the powers of the Senate. (1) Ratification. Although the President makes all treaties, the Senate must approve them by two-thirds vote before they can go into effect. (2) Confirmation. The President appoints many Federal officials. Some of the most important ones, such as Cabinet members and Federal judges, which must be approved by a vote of the Senate before the appointment is final.

Now there are also some special powers of both "houses" working together. These powers are: (1) Both houses must pass a bill before it becomes a law. (2) Both houses have a part in the removal of certain officials. If a President or other Federal official misbehaves seriously in office, the House may impeach him (that is, to draw up charges against him). Then the Senate holds a trial to decide whether the charges are true or false. If the Senate finds the official guilty, he is then removed from office.

Before we consider a close look at both houses, let us consider a bill and how it becomes a law.

When a Representative has an idea for a law, he puts it in written form which is known as a "bill." He then drops the bill into the "hopper," on the desk of the Clerk of the House. The bill goes to the Rules Committee. This committee decides which bills shall come up for a vote.

When a bill reaches the floor of the House of Representatives, it is read and discussed. The House can pass it, defeat it, or send it back to the committee to give it further study.

If passed by a majority of House members present, the bill then goes to the Senate. There it goes through about the same steps as in the House of Representatives. If passed by a majority vote in both houses of Congress, it then goes to the President for signing.

If the President signs the bill, it becomes a law. He can let it become a law without his signature. He can veto it, by refusing to sign it, and sending it back to Congress. If both houses of Congress pass the bill the second time by two-thirds majorities, it becomes a law in spite of the President's veto.

This will give you some idea of how our government works in the legislative branch as outlined in our Constitution. Next week, before we take a look at the judicial branch of our government, we will consider some of the important facts of both the Senate and the House of Representatives. This will cover some of the matters of salary and how members of both houses are selected for their office, etc.

It is the sincere hope of this writer that this series of articles on our Federal Government will help the reader to better understand our form of government and to become interested enough to take an interest in it and to discuss its affairs.

President Eisenhower has said: "For more than a century, our magazines and newspapers have spoken out on domestic and international matters . . . sometimes from a highly individualistic view; often with broad vision. It is inevitable that none of us will always agree with, or like, all that our magazines and newspapers have to say. But over the years, they have provided new ideas, brought fresh insight into old problems, shed light on new ones, and have served to inspire and advance our understanding and knowledge on many subjects . . . from the arts to finance, from government to science, from the individual to the world scene. They are a leading force for moral and cultural growth in our country. Informed citizens are the guardian and spirit of democracy."

Columnists, radio oracles, and statesmen seldom recall their statements after events prove them wrong. With more church members than ever before the United States does not seem to have turned its back upon God.

BY ROGER W. BABSON

Babson Discusses Taking Tax Losses

BABSON PARK, Mass., Nov. 17—Readers who are clients of investment counselors, or who have active banking houses or brokers attending to their affairs, probably have already been notified of the possible advantage that can be secured by taking tax losses.

No Lower Taxes In 1961

Both Mr. Kennedy and Mr. Nixon promised greater expenditures, due to increased defense needs, larger welfare payments, and perhaps unemployment aid. We cannot now wait for the official statements of the winning candidate, Mr. Kennedy. But we can assume that anything he recommends will be to the interest of the many millions who hold no securities,—funds for said payments to be raised through inflationary measures or increased taxes. Both could work a hardship on investors.

In deciding what to do, divide your 1960 sales of securities into two groups: (1) Those held longer than six months; (2) those held less than six months. Next, figure out what will be your net long-term gain or loss, and what will be your net short-term gain or loss. Then offset these figures, remembering that one dollar of short-term loss can wipe out one dollar of long-term gain, and one dollar of long-term loss can offset one dollar of short-term gain.

More Details Regarding Long-Term Gains

Of course, to take advantage of tax losses one must sell the securities, and it may not pay to do this. If an excess of long-term capital gains results, you may reduce this gain by 50% before figuring your tax; and if the tax on long-term gains should exceed 25% of the gains, you may use an alternate method of computing and thus hold down your tax.

In the case of most readers, the capital gains tax will be under 25% of the profits realized. The alternate tax method is used only for net taxable income of more than $18,000 for a single person, $24,000 for the head of a household, and $36,000 for a joint return.

How About Short-Term Gains?

The above advantages apply only to long-term gains; they do not apply to the short-term sales cited in item #2 of the third paragraph of this column. Therefore, there may be a real tax advantage in letting your profits run over the six-months period, even if it brings you into another year. The government permits you to carry any unapplied capital gains losses forward for the next five years. Of course, securities should not be sold merely to take a tax loss. If the stock is one about which you are still optimistic, the improvement in price may later provide you with a greater gain than you could get by taking a tax loss now.

Disposing Of Your Poorest Issues

Personally I give little attention to taking tax losses if I believe my securities are all good. On the other hand, here again one must decide whether we are in a bull market or in a bear market. If you believe we are in a bear market it is better to take tax losses than it would be if you believe we were still in a bull market. This is another reason for seeking the help of an investment counselor.

Certainly, this is a good time to clear up your list and eliminate the poorest investments. Keep your stocks in the order in which they are rated, and sell one or more of the poorest each year. Ordinarily, it is better to sell these in September or October before the crowd rushes to sell, as they may be doing this time of year. On the other hand, most investors may have already taken their capital gains or losses. If so, the market may work up from now to the end of the year rather than continue to decline until the deadline of December 30, 1960.

Waiting Thirty Days

Most investors seem to feel that if they sell stocks to take a tax loss, they cannot buy this same stock back again. This, however, is perfectly possible if you will wait thirty days. If the stock is fundamentally good, I am inclined to buy the same stock even though, due to some special nonrecurring event, it may have advanced in price.

The only child of a president to be born in the White House was Esther Cleveland, in 1893, says World Book Encyclopedia.

Life Of Heating Plant Can Be Extended By Care

Will your home heating plant last until the mortgage is paid off on the house?

This is a question many homeowners find difficult to answer because they don't know how long their boiler or furnace is built to last. Some homeowners feel that within a few years after installation, it's normal for their heating plant to require major repairs.

According to the Better Heating-Cooling Council of Maryland, major repairs on a newly installed heating plant should be rare. Many heating plants are designed for trouble-free service and long life, says the Council. For instance, hydronic (hot water) heating plants are designed to last 20 to 40 or more years without major repairs or replacement.

So-called "bargain" heating plants, however, may break down after only five years and require costly repairs.

To eliminate confusion about the life expectancy of your heating plant, the Maryland Council advises checking with your heating contractor. He's an expert who can answer questions about the condition and efficiency of your heating plant.

The only bachelor president of the U. S., according to World Book Encyclopedia, was James Buchanan.

ABUNDANT LIFE

by ORAL ROBERTS

THIS IS JESUS' DAY

Three friends of Jesus—Lazarus, Mary and Martha—lived in Bethany, a small village near Jerusalem. Jesus visited them often.

One day Lazarus became ill. He was stricken so that his sisters feared he would die. They sent for Jesus, expecting Him to come immediately to the bedside of their brother.

But Jesus continued His ministry where He was. When He finally arrived in Bethany, Lazarus had been dead for four days. A grief-stricken Martha met Jesus and said, "If only you had been here, Lord, my brother would not have died."

Jesus answered her, "Your brother will rise again from the dead."

But Martha felt that God was too late. She thought of God in terms of human reasoning and had decided that not even God could help now.

We, as human beings, often do the same thing. We say, "God might have healed cancer symptoms, but now that cancer is spread throughout the body, there is no hope."

But Christ said, "You say that I'm too late. I tell you I'm not too late. Lazarus will rise again. I am the resurrection and the life. This is my day."

Let the world hear it; this is Jesus' day. What He would have done yesterday, He is fully able and willing to do right now. This is the day when Jesus bares His mighty arm of power, when He breathes love and compassion toward all mankind. This is Jesus' day.

Jesus had Martha lead Him to Lazarus' tomb. And as she walked with Jesus, she began to believe. When they arrived at the tomb, Jesus commanded that the stone door be rolled away.

Picture this scene: The omnipotent Son of the living God has walked up to the tomb of the dead, with love and confidence. He has inspired belief and caused the stone to be rolled away from the tomb. Now He turns to the tomb and says with a loud voice, "Lazarus, come forth." And the dead Lazarus hears the voice of the living God and walks out, with new life flowing through his body.

My friend, if you listen with an ear of faith, you can hear that same voice saying to you, "Come forth from your bondage, your sin, your bad habits and wrong believing, from the sickness of your body, the torment of your mind. I will cleanse you and heal you. I will give you abundant life."

This is Jesus' day. You and I are living in it. All the power and glory of God are in effect today.

Selection Of College, Guidance, Essential To Student's Welfare

Who Guides Your Child To College

By Dr. Robert C. Lloyd
Administrative Assistant to the Superintendent, Baltimore Public Schools

In Part II of this series Dr. Lloyd pointed out the problems faced by America's 22,000 guidance counselors in their attempts to adequately advise the nation's 10 million high school students in their choice of college and careers. Today, in his concluding article adapted from The Johns Hopkins Magazine, he dwells on new means of increasing the number and effectiveness of counselors, and the responsibilities of high schools, colleges, and parents.

If we are to prevent the shocking waste of human talent which mars our education system and hampers our society's progress, we must take a new look at the guidance counselor and his role in public education. For too long now, professional training of counselors has been under-rated, and, as a result, too few guidance counselors are really qualified for their work. An estimated two-thirds of practicing counselors do not even meet present minimum certification requirements in their states which by no means are as strict as they should be. Among other requirements, guidance counselors ought to have a minimum of thirty hours of specialized graduate training. Some 230 college and universities offer counselor training to the master's degree level, although it is fair to say that many of these programs are inadequate. Remarks made to me by counselors themselves about their training indicate that many of the courses duplicate each other, and that in critical areas such as "measurement" (testing, research, and the like), a major overhaul of courses is needed.

Nor is it sufficient simply to appoint a qualified guidance counselor. He must be given the facilities and staff to do the kind of job that will permit him to counsel students properly. Too many guidance programs are administered in a haphazard, piecemeal fashion, and serve little purpose other than to allow a school to claim that it offers a program in guidance. To be effective, guidance must be continuous, beginning in the early grades; it is far too late in the eleventh or twelfth grade to attempt to raise the educational sights of the indifferent or poorly directed student. Counseling is particularly needed in the eighth and ninth grades, when critical curricular decisions are made. By this time too, definite career interests have often begun to take shape among the academically talented. Among the 356 finalists in the recent National Science Fair, for example, 95 per cent were science oriented by the time they were fourteen years old.

A well coordinated guidance program requires rather complete cumulative records on all pupils (yet, alarmingly, only six states insist upon them) and a systematic program of testing. There are tests for almost every area of a student's life, and when properly used, these tests can be of great service in helping to answer questions about a child's ability, behavior, and special skills. New and better tests are constantly being devised, yet testing itself is often misunderstood and misused—or all too frequently it is not used at all. Standardized tests are neither crystal balls nor useless psychometric gimmicks. "We have no particular evidence," Henry Chauncey, president of the Educational Testing Service, has pointed out, "that they measure potential creativity, original thinking, or inventiveness . . . We cannot feed results of a secondary school standardized testing program into an electric computer and expect a guaranteed roster of future Einsteins and Pasteurs to emerge." He goes on to say: "What tests can do for us, if we use them knowledgeably, is identify the larger number of students who are in the score ranges from which creative scientists, engineers, philosophers, historians, economists, psychologists, jurists, educators are most likely to emerge."

While the inadequacies in guidance counseling have been too long ignored, there are encouraging signs of new interest and promised improvements in the field. A countless number of projects in psychological and psychometric research are adding new knowledge to the field of guidance counseling; an impressive example is "Project Talent," a federally supported project which is probably the most extensive and carefully conducted testing program ever devised. Last year, tests were administered to 350,000 high school students throughout the country to measure their aptitudes, abilities, and other characteristics. And follow-up studies are planned one, five, ten and twenty years after the students have graduated from high school. In our democratic system, of course, the significant advances must often be made in slow and patient steps and at a local level. Individual schools must appraise their guidance programs and design realistic changes. For better communications between high schools and colleges, much of the initiative has to come from the colleges themselves. And lastly, pressure for better guidance must come from informed parents, whose stake in the matter is the maximum development of the potentialities of their own children.

Disabled Workers Can Benefit From Social Security

Some 550,000 disabled workers, their wives, and minor children are now receiving monthly social security disability benefits totaling $48 million a month. Many more will be drawing benefits soon as a result of this recent change in the law providing payments to disabled workers under age 50 and their dependents. Until now, only disabled workers aged 50 to 65 were eligible for payments.

Today, the Social Security Act provides monthly benefit protection for disabled workers and their families, and for the families of deceased workers.

To qualify for disability insurance benefits, a worker must be disabled for any substantial gainful work, and he must have worked for a sufficient length of time under the social security program.

Only a severe and long-lasting disability counts. The term "disability" is defined in the social security law as "inability to engage in any substantial gainful activity by reason of any medically determinable physical or mental impairment which can be expected to result in death or to be of long-continued and indefinite duration."

In addition to meeting the disability requirements, a disabled worker must have had at least five years work under social security in the ten years prior to the onset of his disability.

When a worker becomes seriously disabled, with a disability that is considered to be permanent or long-lasting, he or a member of his family should contact the nearest social security district office. Payments cannot begin until they make application. The social security office in Hagerstown is located at 59 North Cannon Avenue.

The underground ballistic testing range at the Naval Ordnance Laboratory, Silver Spring, Md., is large enough to serve as a bomb shelter for 3000 persons.

SPRING & CARDS

FOUR SEASONS

Usually Solitaire games require a great deal of intense application for skill to triumph over unlucky layouts. While this is the appeal of the game for most players, others like to turn to Solitaire for complete relaxation. For this purpose, there is no better game than the one known as Four Seasons, or Corner Card. The tableau is small and the play is largely mechanical.

To play, shuffle one deck of 52 cards. Cut, then turn up the top card as your first foundation. Place it in any corner (usually the upper left) of an imaginary oblong three cards wide and three deep (see illustration).

In this layout, the corner spaces are reserved for the foundations, which are the four cards of the denomination first turned up. Thus, if a seven is the first card turned up, place it in the upper left corner and reserve the other corners for the other sevens as they turn up from the stock.

The other five spaces of the layout, which form a cross, are reserved for the tableau. After you have placed your first foundation, continue to turn up cards from the stock or talon and place them in the five spaces of the tableau. It does not matter in what order you fill these spaces; their relative positions have no bearing on the play. But it is best to make all the plays you can as you go along, rather than filling the tableau first and commencing play later.

On the corner cards—the foundations—you must build upward in suit and in sequence. Thus, on the seven of Hearts you may play only the eight of Hearts. Each suit is in continuous circular sequence, that is, after you have built up to J, Q, K, continue "around the corner" with A, 2, 3, etc. In order to run the game out you must get all four suits built up in complete sequence in the four corners.

On the tableau cards, in the central cross, you must build downward in sequence, ignoring suits. Naturally, you get sequences in the same suit together when you can, but you may build regardless of suits. The winning principle is: build whenever you can, regardless of how much you mix up the suits.

In the Four Seasons, unlike many other solitaires, you are bound to get all your foundation cards eventually. And you will find that it runs out about half the time.

A "How-To-Do-It" PAINT POINTERS

Basically important in painting metal is use of the correct primer for each particular metal in order to get firm adhesion of the finish coat. Each type of metal calls for a primer specifically formulated for the purpose.

For guidance on metal painting of all kinds, there's a free Du Pont booklet "How To Stop Rust," obtainable at dealers or from the Du Pont Company, Wilmington 98, Delaware.

Half the secret of good metal finishing is preparation. The other half is the right material for the particular job. If you—in haste or through laziness—omit proper priming, it's the falsest economy of time and materials. You're just inviting early failure.

It's in the cards

Studio cards are a "let's have a look at the news" type of greeting card. Ever since their inception nearly a decade ago, these subtle, pungent and provocative cards have successfully spoofed current events.

Take this election year, for example. A popular studio card is headlined "A Toast to my Democratic friends." Inside is a giant elephant offering a toast and emitting a juicy Bronx cheer. There is an identical card for "Republican friends" with a donkey doing the "razzing."

Another card from the same publisher, Rust Craft, applies a popular space-age term to a birthday greeting: "Science discovers magic formula to reduce age! . . . 'COUNT DOWN!'"

These new bras are the happy result of surveys made to determine what women really want in a bra. Called "Formfit Life," both long line and bandeau styles feature balanced control, flattering fit and lasting comfort.

Who says that manufacturers don't listen to the voice of the people? We know of at least one that does.

It's The Formfit Company, which has just come up with a series of bras combining the most wanted features requested by American women in a survey of consumers, sales people and foundationwear buyers.

Bras in the "Formfit Life" group give "the lady what she wants":

1. Both a bandeau and a long-line bra are made of embroidered white cotton — by far the most popular fabric.
2. Another "Life" bandeau is fashioned of nylon lace in black or white to satisfy the request for something "special."
3. Elasticized bias sections around cups provide snug fit through controlled stretch.
4. "Life-Lift" petals of soft fabric support the lower parts of each cup.
5. Cups are circle-stitched to maintain contour through countless washings. All the bras are machine washable.
6. Each bra is cut low in front, in back and under the arm.
7. Elastic releases at the back of shoulder straps keep straps and back of bra comfortably in place.

To sum up the new bras are pretty, flattering and comfortable. What more could you ask for?

The cotton bandeau comes in sizes 32A to 42D. The long line version with midriff control is available in sizes 32B to 44D. The nylon lace bandeau comes in 32A to 42D.

... and for that sumptuous repast don't forget your wine appetizer.

"Thank you for employing such wonderful people"

The above words, which we value highly, are in a letter received from a young college coed. The letter goes on to say that she lost her wallet while running an errand for her family. She rushed back to the store, looked everywhere, but had no luck in finding it. Finally, sure that she would never get the wallet back, she started home feeling pretty down in the dumps.

But at almost that very minute the doorbell rang at her house and a voice said "Excuse me, I think this wallet I found belongs to someone who lives here." The voice belonged to a C & P installer, and the result was a greatly relieved young lady.

In itself this is a small thing—what any good neighbor would do. And we're glad the desire to be of help is so natural with telephone people. Whether it's a service representative taking a real interest in your problem, an operator making an extra effort, or an installer returning a lost wallet—the spirit of service is the same.

America's Competitive Struggle
 One day recently the owner of a small hardware store in the outskirts of Cleveland drove his pickup truck to a warehouse in the big city's wholesale district. He wanted to buy 50 spools of barbed wire. On the loading platform he saw two stacks of barbed wire, one stack with several hundred spools, the other with only eight or ten. He approached the big stack of barbed wire. A shipping label showed that it had been manufactured in Dusseldorf, Germany. The small stack showed the brand name of a leading Cleveland steel mill.

The store owner examined the imported and the home-produced barbed wire. The quality was identical. Only the price was different. The barbed wire made in Dusseldorf was $40 a ton cheaper than the Cleveland product; 20 per cent less per spool. The hardware merchant was amazed. He knew that the Dusseldorf barbed wire had traveled more than 3,000 miles. He shook his head in disbelief—and bought 50 spools of barbed wire made in Dusseldorf, Germany.

Thousands Of Products
 This episode could be duplicated in many American warehouses and stores. Cameras made in Japan and Germany, transistor radios and other electronic equipment manufactured abroad, plywood, men's and women's clothing, typewriters, chinaware and an unending list of products made in foreign countries are jamming the showroom floors and shelves all over America. And they are taking away business from American manufacturers who cannot meet the price competition.

A midwestern company which has been in business for 58 years making fencing nails and wire, closed down one plant primarily because of its inability to meet foreign competition. Another steel mill which used to ship 25,000 tons of barbed wire sold only 220 tons in 1958. To the employees of these mills, foreign competition is a very real and pressing problem.

Exporting Jobs
 Not only are the foreign-made products taking away business in the domestic American market, they are taking away business in the world market. The most significant fact is that we are exporting jobs. It is simple arithmetic: When foreign-made goods are bought by Americans we are supporting and creating jobs in foreign countries; and when American-made goods are left on the shelves because of their high prices, we are destroying jobs here in America.

Our basic trouble is that rising labor costs in America have pushed up prices so that our American goods are being priced out of the markets. There are other factors involved, but this is the big one. America's rising industrial productivity has not been passed along to reduce prices of our products. And yet, in Europe, Japan and some Asian nations competitive products are being made at much lower cost—so much lower that they can be shipped across oceans and still sold, at good profit, at considerably lower prices than the American product.

Teamwork Needed

In recent months I have talked to many leading manufacturers about this problem. It is actually threatening the whole American enterprise system. These manufacturers tell me that we can catch up with foreign competition in a few years if production costs can be held in line. They have showed me their profit statements. On the average, American manufacturers are making less than six per cent profit on each sales dollar. If all this profit were to be cut out, many foreign-made products would still sell 15 to 20 per cent cheaper than American-made. So profits are not causing the difficulty.

The solution to this problem which is jeopardizing the jobs of millions of Americans—and actually endangering the economic security of all of us—is for organized labor to take a clear, long-range view of what's happening, and then pitch in with our industrial management to regain our lost position in the world markets. Everybody's economic welfare then would gradually improve and we would overcome a grave danger to our whole economic system. Yes, genuine cooperation, with elimination of feather-bedding, without any cut in wages, and without longer hours.

plus any acreage diverted or considered as diverted under the farm program.

If a harvested acreage of oats contains more than 25 per cent of wheat, barley contains more than 25 per cent of wheat, or rye contains more than 10 per cent of wheat, such acreage is classified as "wheat acreage" under the wheat allotment and marketing quota program Mr. Dudley pointed out.

A super camera that can take pictures at the rate of two million frames per second is used at the Naval Ordnance Laboratory, Silver Spring, Md., to show exactly what happens when an explosive detonates.

Winter Wheat Measurement To Commence

Measurement of winter wheat acreages for compliance with allotments will begin within the next few weeks, according to William L. Dudley, Chairman of the Maryland Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Committee. Most of this measuring will be done during the late fall and early winter, the Chairman explained, and all of it will be completed before the April 1 deadline next spring.

"Determination of compliance or noncompliance with wheat allotments is particularly important in years when marketing quotas are in effect, as they are for the 1961 wheat crop," Mr. Dudley declared.

"Three things depend on this determination and the farmer's subsequent action, if the wheat acreage should exceed the allotment: (1) A farmer who does not adjust his overplanted acreage to the farm wheat allotment will not be eligible for price support on his crop, (2) the "excess" wheat from the farm will be subject to marketing penalties, and (3) the farm's future wheat acreage allotments may be reduced.

Mr. Dudley explained that, in such cases of overplanting and nonadjustment of the acreage to the allotment before the deadline, the "noncompliance" farm is credited only with the wheat allotment as "history" credit for the year. If the excessive acreage is adjusted into compliance with the allotment, however, the farm will be credited with the allotment

New Contest To Aid People-to-People Diplomacy

To further CARE's concept of people-to-people diplomacy, a special crusade has been organized that will take two Americans from each state to three CARE-supported countries to see for themselves the work being done in this kind of diplomacy. Called the Vicks CARE CRUSADE, and sponsored by the Vick Chemical Company, delegates will themselves be people-to-people diplomats. They will meet with not only the man in the street, but with foreign government dignitaries of Rome, Athens, Istanbul and Paris.

Each state delegate will be selected by a contest in which entrants simply finish the sentence, "Americans should CARE about their neighbors abroad because . . ." The entry blanks must be accompanied by a donation to CARE of 50 cents or more. All contributions to CARE are received.

While CARE's first job, immediately following World War II, was to feed the people of Europe who had been victimized by the war, progress dictated the need for a new kind of aid. Out of this need grew CARE's self-help program—a new way to use dollars contributed by Americans to help people solve their problems and to become self-sustaining. Health and educational needs had also to be served, so that a self-sustaining future could be assured.

The first of the self-help programs brought simple machinery to areas where it was desperately needed. A new way was developed, one that could be used with the kinds of beasts used by farmers in the areas to be served. This plow alone has rehabilitated entire villages that had been unable to fulfill their basic needs.

Specially developed fish nets turned the tide of poverty in areas throughout the world. Simple block-making machines made possible homes where, before, there had been only unsanitary hovels. Sewing machines, looms, water pumps and mechanics kits create industry where there had been only poverty-caused idleness.

CARE, supported by American dollar contributions, joined the fight against disease with clinics-on-wheels and midwifery kits. Education kits make it possible for children in underprivileged areas to grow into healthy, useful adults.

These projects, supported by American contributions, serve international diplomacy—not across a polished table—but on a people-to-people basis, with a lasting effect and a hope for the future.

VICKS CARE CRUSADE entry blanks are available wherever Vick products are sold.

OUR STATE UNIVERSITY

The State Inspection Service at the University of Maryland is charged with inspection to maintain quality of all feeds, fertilizers, agricultural liming materials, certain supplements, and pesticides sold or offered for sale within the State of Maryland.

From a humble beginning as a fertilizer checking organization considerably before the turn of the century, the inspection service has progressed to a department with 15 full-time personnel members, together with sufficient part-time employees to bring the total to about 20. The scope of work has widened with the advances in agricultural science and technology.

Since the statutes under which the inspection service operates are essentially correct labeling laws, a considerable portion of the work is allotted to problems of labeling. Under the provisions of the law certain information is required on every label attached to these commodities, including the brand name, net content, chemical guarantee, directions for use, and the manufacturer's name and address. All labels are checked for misleading or extravagant information or fraudulent claims.

An important phase of the department's work is concerned with sampling these products. Only those samples taken by State inspectors by approved and recognized procedures are acceptable as official. These samples are sealed and brought to the laboratory within a few days of the date of collection. It is the inspectors' duty to gather all pertinent information concerning the background of each sample in the event that the material proves to be seriously deficient.

SPORTS AFIELD

By Ted Kestner

Your chances of catching a really big muskellunge or pike are no more than fair in the early part of the season. And in summer your chances are almost negligible. But late fall is the time to look for one.

By late fall, we mean toward the time the lakes freeze over. Here we'll consider, as an example, a district and a year with freeze-up coming fairly well in in December. But the exact time you can expect this good fishing must, of course, be modified according to the place and the season.

True, most pike and muskies are caught in summer — purely because millions are tossing lures then. Almost nobody fishes in late fall. But here we're discussing what you might call the man-of-the-hour chances of getting a big one. Jason Lucas, Angling Editor of Sports Afield Magazine, states that at the end of October, and in November, your chances are 25 times better than in summer.

Pike and muskies are closely related. In the wild state they often interbreed. And, especially in late fall, you can use the same methods for both. And size for size, the pike is little, if any, inferior to the musky as a fighter except that he doesn't leap so often or so spectacularly. Though in some districts of the extreme north, almost every pike hooked will leap at least once.

Why do big pike and muskellunge suddenly start grabbing things somewhere around the first of November?

It is believed that during the warmer months, they are inclined to lie sluggish in deep holes, feeding very little; and that the older and larger the fish, the less he is inclined to feed then.

Natural food for pike is much scantier in winter than in summer. Doesn't it seem logical that instinct should prompt them to put on all possible fat in this last month or so before freeze-up, to carry them through the lean period—in other words, to grab and swallow anything apparently edible and of suitable size?

Fishing for them now does not call for a great deal of skill, or knowledge of how to find the good spots. Those big fellows aren't likely to be sticking to certain small spots, as they did a month earlier. They'll be ranging widely, seeking all the food they can find.

Usually, water of about six to 12 feet deep is the best bet now; trolling anywhere within these depths is likely to pick one up. But it's well to give special attention to the neighborhood of reefs, small islands and toward the ends of long points. Such places are noted for muskies, and especially at this time of year, they're a very good bet for large pike too.

Earlier in the season, casting was best for these fish, since it would let you work pockets in the weed beds. But now most of these weeds have died and sunk to the bottom. So trolling is really the logical way. Another advantage of trolling is that you can wear gloves to keep your hands warm. But these gloves should be loose, to be whipped off instantly to play a fish.

Here's the secret of being practically certain to land any large fish that's well hooked: having pulled quite hard in setting the hook, never again during the battle put on nearly that much pressure. Then, the line can't break, or the hook straighten, and it's unlikely to tear out of his jaw. There are no tough weeds now from which you must hold him. So while playing him lightly is the long, slow way of doing it, it's the almost dead-certain way.

YOUR PERSONAL HEALTH COLUMN

Watch Out For This One! Public health officials are worried. In the first five months of this year, there were 50 per cent more cases of hepatitis than during the same period last year. And the Public Health Service knows very well that its figures don't tell the complete story. There's no reason to expect a real epidemic, perhaps, but good reason for everyone to learn something about this illness.

Hepatitis, a disease which attacks the liver, is baffling to medical science and miserable for the victim. A virus causes hepatitis, but nobody's been able to grow it in the laboratory, which means no vaccine can be developed for the present.

Hepatitis is highly contagious, spreading through infected food, milk, and water, and by touch. It can take anywhere from ten days to almost two months from the time you pick up the bug until the first symptoms appear. When they do, they include fever and chills, headache, tiredness, aching muscles, loss of appetite, nausea, vomiting and abdominal pain. After about a week of this, the skin and the whites of the eyes may turn yellow with jaundice.

Jaundice lasts about a week or ten days. But hepatitis isn't through with its victim yet. The patient is still thoroughly ill, and so infectious that he must remain in isolation for at least two weeks more—about a month altogether. After that he is still likely to be ill for another two weeks. Then a slow convalescence begins. It is not at all unusual for hepatitis to knock its victims out for three or four months. However, the disease rarely kills its victims.

There's no drug cure for hepatitis. Bedrest and diet is all medicine has to offer right now. Partial protection against hepatitis is possible with a shot of gamma globulin. Since this is better than nothing, if hepatitis appears in your house, next door, or among friends, go to your doctor promptly for his advice. This column is sponsored in the interest of better health by your Tuberculosis Association.

Caused 62,000 Fires in 10 Years

Homes With Flammable Roofing Endangered By Flying Sparks

Flying sparks on roofs caused more than 62,000 serious fires in the U.S. in the five-year period of 1955-59, resulting in a total of nearly $40,000,000 damages.

The National Fire Protection Association, in compiling the above figures, says the worst tragedy of these fires is that practically all of them could have been prevented with fire-resistant roofing material.

The real danger of flying sparks is that they come from so many sources common to every neighborhood and community—a neighbor's trash burner, a brush fire, incinerators, fireplaces, fire in a nearby home, a defective furnace, and many others.

Firemen Puzzled

Firemen who have fought roof fires caused by flying sparks say they never can understand why homeowners are willing to gamble with combustible roofs when fire-resistant roofing—such as asphalt shingles—is so readily available.

Asphalt shingles get additional fire-resistant qualities from millions of rock granules embedded in the surface of the waterproof asphalt. These tough granules make sparks and flaming brands harmless to the roof and the rest of the house.

Unlike other types of fire-resistant roofing, asphalt shingles can be applied quickly and efficiently by roofers everywhere, resulting in low application costs. They also can be applied directly over old roofing. This saves the mess and extra labor of removing the old material, and provides a measure of protection in case of rain while the new roof is being applied.

Insurance Costs Less

Of further importance to the homeowner is the fact that fire insurance premiums may be lower on houses with asphalt shingle roofs than on homes roofed with flammable materials.

Sparks from an incinerator ignited the flammable roofing on this historic home in Bloomfield, Conn. Only quick action by firemen prevented flames from destroying the $50,000, pre-Revolution structure, a gun mill in the early 18th century.

Another home-building material that helps make a house more resistant to fire is mineral wool insulation. This efficient insulation is made from molten glass or slag spun into millions of fireproof fibers.

Installed Easily

Properly installed in walls, ceilings, and floors of a home mineral wool not only provides more year-around comfort and heating economy, but acts as a fire block, preventing flames from burning through from one surface to another, and keeping the fire from shooting up through wall spaces.

Fireproof mineral wool can be installed in walls, ceilings, and floors of existing homes through a special pneumatic process that forces insulation into cracks, corners, and around wires and pipes. In new homes, batts or blankets of mineral wool generally are installed during construction.

The National Fire Protection Association points out that most home fires are avoidable through such things as fire-resistant building materials, regular clean-up of basements, attics, and garages, and an awareness by all members of the family of the hazards of fire.

THE WORLD'S MOST WIDELY USED DEVOTIONAL GUIDE

Read Luke 16:13-17. He that is not with me is against me; and he that gathereth not with me scattereth. (Luke 11:23.)

On the Lord's day, I asked, "Friend, are you for God or against Him?" He answered, "I am a church member; I am for God." Then the Holy Spirit seemed to whisper: "But what about your inner life and those respectable sins you are cherishing in your heart?"

To another I asked, "Are you for God or against Him?" He answered, "I am a leader in the church." The Spirit seemed to ask: "But what about your ambitions, your unforgiving heart, and your domineering spirit in the church?"

The same evening the question was asked to a group of respectable church people. In unison they said they were for God. But an unexpected answer was whispered from above: "Are you sure? Are you not divided among yourselves? Are you at peace with God and with one another?"

In my distress I asked the Lord to show me His people. Surprised, I noticed that the despised and rejected by men were considered great before God. Then humbly I asked the Lord to make me worthy to be counted with the despised.

CARE Prepares For Thanksgiving

It is November 27, 1945. In the District of Columbia, incorporation papers are filed by the new Cooperative for American Remittances to Europe. A cumbersome title, but the initials spell CARE.

Five days before, Americans had celebrated the first Thanksgiving after the war with gratitude for the freedom that had been defended and preserved. But they were not content merely to sit and enjoy their good fortune and plenty; they sought to share these blessings with the tens of millions facing terrible want in a Europe in ruins.

CARE gave them an answer. It provided a sure, swift means to deliver the food that would save many lives. By the following Thanksgiving, a million packages had brought many millions of meals to destitute homes. As the years went on, CARE became the Cooperative for American Relief Everywhere. The American people's help poured out to needy in Europe, Asia, Latin America and the Middle East.

Thanksgiving 1960, launches this year's CARE Food Crusade. It will bring 4 1/2 million packages to the hungry in 20 countries. Each $1 contributed to the Crusade will deliver a package of nourishing foods to people for whom getting enough to eat is still a major struggle of their lives.

The CARE office at Mondawmin, Baltimore 15, Md. will accept your contribution to the Food Cru-
