Vol. 1, No. 20.

TANEYTOWN, MARYLAND, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 17, 1894.

$1.00 Per Year.

LOCALS AND PERSONALS.

Something we are never prepared for—twins. Isn't it, Charlie?

Mr. John Biehl and wife, of Ladiesburg spent Friday at Mr. John Renner's.

Mr. C. M. Hess was elected delegate to the Lutheran Conference meeting at Emmitsburg, Nov. 12th.

Our business men report a satisfactory amount of trade, considering the times. If things do not get worse Taneytown can stand it.

Mrs. Jas. Buffington was the recipient of a box of superb chrysanthemums from her friend, Mrs. Kussmaul, of Frederick city.

Unless we are very much mistaken, there is a missing man in this town who will very soon go away single, and come back double.

HELM.—On the 15th, at New Windsor, Md., was buried the remains of the late Mr. John Helm, of Taneytown, who died on Saturday the 13th, at 1 o'clock.

Mr. Altland, an organizer for the Heptasoph, was here on Saturday making an attempt to secure a convocation for our place. He has succeeded, in Littlestown. It is a secret beneficial society with an insurance feature attached.

Now that the election is over, we hope our correspondents will send us the news as frequently as possible. As we have repeatedly stated, we want news. The weights of hogs, and unimportant family events are not desired.

The Revival services, under the supervision of the Pastor, Rev. G. W. Seilhamer, in Uniontown, is increasing in interest, and will be continued during the coming week. Preaching Sabbath morning and evening by the pastor.

Mrs. Annie Kelm, of Eldersburg, formerly of Longville, lately spending the winter with her grand-daughter Mrs. Clayton Harner. Mr. Harner reports having raised a "whopping" turnip which weighs 5 pounds and measures 25 inches around.

A large delegation of the Patriotic Sons of Westminister was entertained by the local organization on Thursday night. An effort will be made to establish camps of this order at a number of points, among which is Pleasant Valley as a central point for that section.

Mr. Chas. C. Currens presented the Editor with a pitcher of very fine cider, which was much appreciated; the ink-gang was also provided for. He has brought to our town this fall, four loads of the finest York Imperial apples, that we have ever seen, and sold them readily at $1.00 per bushel.

The Record appears this week printed on a better quality of paper than formerly. This is but a small improvement, but it is an indication that all we want is time and the proper support, to give our readers a better paper in every way than we are now doing.

Republicans generally, are averse to crowding over their victory in this state. It does no good, and often creates ill feeling and disgust. They also recognize the fact that stay at home and dissatisfied democrats assisted in causing a democratic defeat, rather than a great republican victory.

At the dedication exercises of the new U. B. church of Sunday, Rev. J. P. Anthony, presiding, and the Chambersburg district will have charge of the services. Quarterly conference will be held on Saturday at 2 p. m. Preaching services will begin at 9:45 on Sunday morning, and at 7 in the evening. The church is cordially invited to attend these services.

While Mr. Chas. Shipley, the day engineer at Goldsboro, was driving to town early on Thursday morning to go to work, his horse became frightened and suddenly wheeled around, throwing Mr. Shipley out of the car and against a tree with such force as to render him unconscious. He was severely injured about the face and limbs, but fortunately not seriously injured.

We do not desire to start a puzzle column, or devote a large amount of space to problems of an educational character, but we do desire to have something in the RECORD every week, which will be of particular interest and benefit to school children. The attention of teachers and others is particularly called to this point, and we hope that they will give us the benefit of their suggestions, as to how to accomplish what we desire.

There is hope for the Taneytown water supply. Manchester, England, gets its water 95 miles away. The late survey places the reservoir only 24 miles from town. Our individual opinion is, that we should effect a combination of the springs of Claiborn, Motter and Reindollar, and sink an artesian well in connection with them; then we would have pure water, and have the supply and power right in town. Think over this plan.

The November term of Court for Carroll county opened on Monday. Judge Roberts in his charge to the grand jury called their attention to slot machines and other forms of gambling which are being operated over the county, and stated that while it was not his intention to have the jury indict any one for past offences, still if it was continued he would certainly have them indicted. Henry Galt of this place was appointed foreman of the grand jury.

The republican jubilee held on Friday night, was somewhat interfered with by the disagreeable weather, but was a creditable and orderly affair, notwithstanding the fact that there was such short time for preparation. Most of the republican, and some democratic, citizens illuminated their buildings, and the parade while neither immense, nor very brilliant, was a success. Had the republicans of the district been given a little more time, they could have had a demonstration in proportion to the immensity of the democratic defeat.

Mr. Chas. H. Duterra, of Littlestown, accompanied by two ladies, paid a flying visit, Thursday evening, to his brother, Mr. Amos Duterra, of this place.

A convocation of the Improved Order of Heptasoph was instituted in Littlestown, Thursday night, with the following officers: Past Archon, A. H. Zollikofer; Archon, Geo. J. Julius; Provost, R. L. Patton; Secretary, C. B. Barker; Financier, W. F. Rittase; Treasurer, Geo. F. Krug; Med. Examiner, Dr. E. K. Foreman; Prelate, Chas. A. Elliot; Inspector, D. B. Gouker; Warden, Henry Spalding; Sentinel, Jacob Hawn; Trustees, Col. Geo. Hemperly, W. W. Crapster, Jas. W. Ocker.

The usual quiet of Hanover was disturbed on Sunday by the announcement that Miss Caroline Tate, aged about 19 years, who lived with her parents on York St., committed suicide by drinking a bottle of carbolic acid. It is supposed that the act was caused by trouble over a love affair.

Mr. Hofer, the president of the Gettysburg Trolley company, has appealed from the award of the jury in the trolley case, as he does not consider the amount sufficient.

Gettysburg narrowly escaped another fire on Thursday night. A slight fire occurred in the paint shop of a carriage factory, which was fortunately seen in time, and put out before it gained much headway.

Tribute of Respect.

We have received for publication from the Committee appointed by the Court, a tribute of respect and resolutions on the death of Col. Wm. P. Mosby. We regret to say that the copy was received too late for publication, otherwise we should have taken pleasure in making use of it.

Lutheran Conference.

The Middle Conference of the Maryland Lutheran Synod met in Elias Evangelical Lutheran Church Emmitsburg, on Monday. Devotional service were conducted by the president, Rev. G. C. Haskarl. After organizers of the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, John, H. Barb, Thurmont; Secretary, Rev. R. S. Patterson, Woodsboro; treasurer, Rev. M. E. McLinn, Lovettsville, Va. Reports on state of religion were offered showing the lights and shadows of Christian work. Deep interest was shown in the discussion of the first topic on the program, "Christian Assurance." Rev. G. W. McSherry read an able and instructive paper, followed in discussion by Revs. J. H. Barb and S. A. Hedges. The evening service drew a large congregation. Retiring President Rev. Haskarl, of Frederick, preached.

On Tuesday the session was continued, beginning with devotional service, conducted by Rev. Robert L. Patterson, of Union Bridge. Haskarl, of Frederick; J. H. Bowers, Lovettsville, Rev. William Simonton, D. D., was invited to a seat in conference. The afternoon session opened with an address by Rev. P. H. Miller, of Westminster, on the condition of ministerial success. General discussion was participated in by Rev. M. L. Beard, Middletown; Rev. G. C. Haskarl and Rev. C. M. Eyster. It was decided to continue to effect a division of the Lutheran Maryland Synod.

"The Proper Attitude of the Christian to the Temperance Cause," was discussed by Rev. M. E. McLinn, Rev. S. A. Slater, of Burkittsville, and Rev. S. A. Diehl, of Westminster. At 6:30 o'clock, Rev. P. H. Miller gave an address on the watchword of the Maryland Christian Endeavor Society, "Onward." Five-minute addresses followed by Rev. M. E. McLinn, Rev. R. M. Patterson and Rev. J. H. Bowers. A large audience at 7:30 heard a sermon on dancing by Rev. M. L. Beard, of Middletown.

For Passenger Connections.

Mr. A. H. Zollikofer has prepared, and is actively circulating a petition addressed to Mr. A. W. Moss, Superintendent of the Frederick division, asking that a regular train which runs to Frederick in the evening, and makes that point the end of the trip, be returned to Littlestown from Frederick, remain there over night, and run to Frederick in the morning in time to make its regular morning run north. This would give Taneytown, Littlestown and other points, connections with the Western Maryland for Baltimore and Westminster in the morning, and return at night, which is what the patrons along the line of the road, especially those speaking for Taneytown along, while we have an important station at which a great amount of freight is handled, the passenger business is small, simply because the road has heretofore apparently ignored the business which this small town, as well as the claims of our people for better traveling accommodations. The company at least owes it to its patrons to experiment in the direction of a more satisfactory service of this character, and the change proposed by Mr. Zollikofer, we think, might be tried by the company and if found unprofitable could be discontinued.

The New St. Joseph's.

The work of renovating the interior of St. Joseph's church at this place which has been under way for sometime, is now completed, and the work reflects credit on the contractor, Mr. Joshua Biehl, as well as on those having the matter in charge on the part of the church. The plain water color frescoing has been replaced by a beautiful exhibition of artistic work in new and appropriate designs. The wood work has been repainted and retouched so that the whole interior presents a harmony of color very pleasing to the eye. About the only addition which might be made to render the artistic effect complete would be lighter colored pews, which we learn will be attended to in due season. The handsome pipe organ was beautified during the summer, and the congregation can now congratulate themselves on having a practically new and magnificent instrument. Rev. Theodore D. Mead, the pastor, has taken great interest in the work, and that these improvements have been made during the "hard times," is certainly complimentary to his energy and ability.

Father thus art gone to rest, Thy trials and cares are o'er, And sorrow pains and sufferings now Shall no more disturb thee more.

We shall meet, but we shall miss him, There will be one vacant chair; We shall linger to express him, As we breathe our evening prayer.

When a year ago we gathered, Joy was in his mild blue eye; But a golden child he seemed, And a golden child he died.

Death takes us by surprise, And stays our hurrying feet—The great design unfinished lies, Our lives are incomplete.

But in the bright unknown, We trust their souls are free—Even as a bridge's arch of stone Is rounded in the stream.

Health of community good. Corn husking about finished excepting a few.

All of events that turn up in these hot political times, there is nothing so real and natural in its development as that monstrosity of Mr. David Heltibrude's, in the shape of an enormous pumpkin which weighs 70 pounds, and measures 4 feet, 6 inches in circumference one way, and 4 feet 10 inches the other way. Will a larger pumpkin turn up anywhere soon? (The above was received too late for last issue.—Ed)

And now, let us ask how about the Literary Society? Has it been succeeded under by the election return? Or do the "folks about town" have all the literary accomplishments they desire? Perchance they do, but there may be some chap who has been overlooked, who may desire some sharpening of his wit on this sort of grindstone, that should be cared for. By all means let us have the Literary Society; there is no better educator than the village Lyceum.

THE NEW YORK World has settled the result for 1896, by saying that the next president will be a democrat.

GOVERNOR-ELECT Morton and Mayor Strong, are already besieged by an army of "workers" who desire to assist in reforming the various departments of the state and city.

THE TOWSON Journal stated last week that the space which its roster should occupy, could not be filled, owing to the fact that it had left home without leaving notice of its present whereabouts.

LOCAL MERCHANTS may keep as good wares as the large city stores, but if they do not let the fact be known they cannot but expect their trade to go away, when in need of something out of the ordinary.

LET EVERY citizen make up his mind to attend the next water meeting, and, if he has any suggestions to make on the subject which may result in a better plan being adopted than the one proposed, he should offer them, as he will be doing something for the good of the place which will remain to his credit for many years. Let not conclusions be jumped at too hastily in this matter.

The Effect of Oratory.

Among other things which seem to be out of date in these progressive days, is what we may term poor oratory, or ordinary speech making. Probably there has never been a time in our history, when a speaker is confronted with such highly critical audiences as in the latter days of this present century, and, unless an orator is very much honored and loved by his hearers, even the extraordinary fails to be appreciated when delivered in an ordinary oratorical form.

It would seem then, if this be true, that ministers and others who have to do with the spiritual and carnal affairs of men, should study oratory, in order to produce an effect which words alone almost wholly fail to do.

A pastor needs to be also a preacher—a rare combination—if he aims at the greatest measure of success, and it should be a part of his education never to be considered by him as finished. We presume that this opinion will not be understood to mean the effect of displaying skill, and winning admiration for personal gifts. What the true preacher seeks to do is to inform the mind with christian truth; to stir the hearts, and influence the will of his hearers. What must we say then of some of the sermons preached? So far as our insight goes, they are a mere waste of breath and work. There is the same difference between a great and a poor orator, that there is between a great and poor actor. One can read a grand sermon, or a powerfully pathetic play without being more than slightly affected or impressed by it, but to hear the same sermon delivered by a master, and the play acted by artists, is like witnessing an entirely different and better production. Why is it that the most eloquent lawyers have the most business? Because by their superior oratory they have the greatest influence before a jury. Many a bad case has been won by a nimble tongue, and beautifully spoken phrases which appealed powerfully to the sympathies of the jurors.

There is scarcely a parallel, in the higher sense, between the oratory of a clergyman and that of a lawyer. The former must use only the truth, while with the latter, it is "anything to win." The end however is the same—an impression to create. No doubt in the ministry, as in other callings, some of the men sent to preach are out of their real vocation, they may probably in most cases have the proper conception of the needs of human nature, and know that the plainest truths fail to impress when put before men in a dull way; perhaps they do the best they can to acquire power and good style, and succeed in writing an able discourse. But when it comes to the delivery, where is the impression which should be produced?

It is the oratorical art, the impressive and feeling delivery, the speaking from the heart which is wanting, to make even simple words effective. Whether right or wrong, the plain and mediocre does not seem to fill the place in matters either spiritual or secular which they once did. If it is well to have a large and fine church building, because it is for the greater glory of God, it is, if anything, more important to have a pastor and preacher who is also above the ordinary. May we not consider it almost a misfortune that man is simply man—and a preacher—and that so few are endowed with the power to stir souls; or should we lament that souls are so hard to stir. We give it up. There is, however, no doubt that oratory, or an increase of the power which wins and attracts, is one of the talents which will bear much improvement in public men of all classes whose duty and business it is to teach and advocate. Let no one with a title or position consider that he has a sinecure—it is past that time of day.

Crow for Business Now.

THE CARROLL RECORD, Taneytown, Md., this week prints four bantam roosters at the head of its editorial column, and explains that "these roosters are not crowing for either political party, but for the large body of newspaper readers who are agitated the election is over, as they can now reasonably expect their favorite papers to tell them what is going on in the country." This is a good suggestion. THE RECORD introduces the rooster as a business emblem, and we take pleasure in passing the bird along with the recommendation of our contemporary. The "bird of morning" has been mixed up too much in politics. It is, as things go in these times, when tigers and wolves and foxes and spread-eagles are the more appropriate symbols of politics, a profanation of the rooster to drag his feathers through the "mire and filth" of politics. He is a business bird all over, the symbol of vigilance, the sentinel in the true signification of the word, and we would like to hear his voice now in trade before the Thanksgiving turkey takes the field. Crow, Chapman, crow, for politics is a thing of the past. Let the cock crow now for trade. The busy season is on. The fall trade, which hung back waiting on politics, has languished. Let his clearest notes be heard in trade before and after Thanksgiving—the harbinger of brisk autumn and winter business, and a prosperous Christmas season in every line of trade.—Balto. Sun.

Newspapers as Mirrors.

A writer in a recent issue of Press and Printer sizes up the newspapers of the principal cities, by making hits on their prominent characteristics which are likely accurate.

New York papers are set down as the most provincial on the continent. The vision of their conductors end with the Allegheny mountains on the West, and the Potomac on the South, and one may search almost in vain for intelligence or gossip from the great empire of the West, but for news of the continent of Europe they are unsurpassed.

Chicago has by long odds the most cosmopolitan of newspapers. There is seldom manifested a lack of appreciation of news, no matter where the source may be, and editorially are said to excel all others in ability and scope. Their greatest fault is a con suming desire to make the world believe that Chicago is, or soon will be the centre of culture, art, commerce and wealth, and nothing that exists elsewhere quite comes up to something they have at home.

In Philadelphia the journalistic tendency is toward home and the fire side. That which interests women is particularly elaborated on, and news is a secondary consideration. Boston is struggling between literature, college gossip, and sporting news; all of which receive great attention; but aside from these lines the news of the world receives scant consideration. Baltimore is engrossed in ancient history. Her newspapers pride themselves on their age; they boast of the beauty of Baltimore women, of the distinguished lineage of the first families, and seem thoroughly absorbed in self congratulation.

Washington cares more for politics, and something bearing on the government, than anything else. They care more for the opinion of some Honorable on a question of politics, than they do for calamities and tragedies and general news.

Cleveland journals make a specialty of their commerce and state politics, and when these items fail, run in reminiscences of the late war. Pittsburg is getting interested in astronomy, probably because smoke obscures the heavens there, and give great space to astronomical and astrological speculation.

Detroit papers give much attention to lake commerce, and selected jokes, and employ staffs of reporters to supply these lines.

St. Louis is more absorbed in physical phenomena than in anything else. There is also a special fondness manifested for foreign ethical thought, and many extracts from dry essays of English social philosophers are reproduced.

Louisville papers find a never ending pleasure in glorifying the Bluegrass state; and horses and beautiful women, both the product of Kentucky soil, are brilliant specialties.

Trusts.

Trust, in its original meaning, is a good word and means a good thing. But it has got into bad company. Perhaps it would be more accurate to say that there is a party of well-born and well-bred words which are sowing wild oats, and which there is every reason to fear will go to the bad. The other prominent members of the company are the words "comb" and "deal;" but "trust" is the ringleader.

What is a trust? Let us define it as a corporation of corporations, or a corporation of the second degree. A corporation is an artificial person. It is a creation of the law. It has some of the civil rights of individual citizens, and is subject to a corresponding degree of obligation.

The corporation may sue and be sued; it is entitled to the protection of its property; it is required to pay taxes. Whereas a man has certain natural rights, a corporation has those only which are conferred by the legislature.

The principle of the corporation is old; but its great development, a distinguishing feature of this century, is what has made possible the great engineering, manufacturing and transportation industries of our time.

Our grandfathers watched the beginnings and the growth of corporate wealth and power with extreme jealousy. More than one state political convention in the first half of this century declared its opposition to the chartering of any corporation for business purposes.

The "trust" is an extension of the principle of the corporation. But it does not follow that, because some of the early objections to corporations were unreasonable, therefore the hostility to trusts will be found to have been based on prejudice and passion.

A trust is a combination of corporations, banded together under one management for the purpose of controlling the manufacture of, or trade in some article of extensive use. Usually it is not chartered, that is, it is not a corporation in the ordinary sense of the word; but is a voluntary association, which keeps secret its organization, its doings and its profits. Thus it may be, and in some cases is, an "artificial person" which exists without the permission of the state.

The chief objection to the trust is that a practical monopoly may be created. In fact, if a monopoly is not established, the purpose of organizing the trust fails of accomplishment.

For example—to take an illustration from a trade in which there is no trust—there are twelve hundred or more corporations, firms and persons in this country engaged in the cotton manufacture. Some of the corporations are huge affairs. One, in New Hampshire, is the greatest in the world which is engaged in this trade.

No harm results from the existence of these great corporations, because, being scattered over the country and having diverse interests, they compete with each other. But if they were all to combine they would control the labor of spinners and weavers, they would regulate production in such a way as to maintain prices at a surely profitable level, and in various other ways would deprive the community of the advantages of competition.

Moreover, there is a strong feeling in the minds of many people who are by no means infected with socialistic views, that discouragement, and not encouragement, should be given to the practice of concentrating great capital, and consequently great power, in the hands of a few men, officers and managers of such aggregates of corporations.

These are the reasons urged against sanctioning trusts. There is something to be said in their favor, namely, that they make industrial development possible, on a grander scale than ever. But not many men hold that this advantage counter balances the necessary evils; and no person, at least no one who desires political preference, ventures to say even as much as that, in their favor.—Youth's Companion.

WHEN I CONSIDER the evils that beguine and deface this land and the face of Christendom, and then look at the power that might be wielded by the members of the Christian church, I am astonished at the apathy and impotency. The Devil is not under the feet of Christendom, by any means. If the Christian world would rise in the armor of God, then would Satan be bruised under its feet shortly. But God cannot bruise Satan under the feet of Christ's followers unless they, unitedly and prayerfully, desire Satan to be in that position, and strive to that end. There are too many who are ashamed of Christ and afraid of the Devil.—G. W. M.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Special Correspondent.)

Washington, Nov. 12, 1894. The approaching session of Congress, which will convene on December 5th, is not expected by those familiar with Congressional methods to be one of great activity or productive of much legislation. The facts that it will continue for only three months, that it will be the last session of the present Congress and that it so closely follows a general election are all considered as indications that but comparatively little real work will be attempted and still less accomplished. The greater part of the session will, in all probability, be consumed in an exchange of chaffing over the results of the election, and the session will become memorable more on account of talk than work. It is probable that next to nothing will be done before Christmas holidays and predictions are freely made that it will be difficult to maintain a quorum previous to Christmas. After the holidays there will be two months left for work and speech-making. It will, of course, be necessary to pass the usual appropriation bills. These bills touch a variety of interests and while upon occasion they can be disposed of with considerable celerity, they can always be so manipulated as to kill much time when there is any considerable element which desires to use them. When the last session adjourned the measures attracting most attention were supplemental tariff of free raw material bills. They had passed the House and had been favorably reported with material amendments by the Senate Committee on Finance to the Senate. While a majority of the Democratic Senators appeared friendly to those bills, there was a considerable element in that party opposed to their consideration, as were practically all the Republican Senators. This element was able to prevent the Senate taking up the bills previous to a adjournment. It remains to be seen whether the friends of the bill will persist in this policy at the forthcoming session and whether they do manifest this disposition they will succeed in the face of the opposition of a few Democratic Senators and the almost solid Republican side of the Senate, who do not desire at this time further legislation in the direction of tariff reduction. Representatives of the latter class do not hesitate to declare that whatever the policy of the Democratic majority they will be able to prevent serious consideration of these bills because of the short session. They also claim if a vote on them should be reached there would be a majority against them. It should be stated, however, that there is a division of opinion among the opponents of the bills, on the free sugar bill, and that some Republicans and some conservative Democrats have expressed a willingness to allow this bill to become a law; but the best indications are that the fate of the bill will be determined by that of the others of the same class.

There are those also who predict that there will be a renewal of the agitation of the financial question on propositions looking to the free coinage of silver and for another bond issue. The starting of the bond question would depend upon the Administration and there appears no reason for the suggestion that it would be revived except in the imaginations of those who would oppose the measure if it should be brought in. There is little doubt that the silver question will be raised in some form, but the probabilities are that there will be no serious united effort on the part of any considerable element to push silver to the front. The more general opinion is that silver will be reserved for the long session of the Fifty-fourth Congress so as to make it an issue in the Presidential campaign of 1895.

THEY TURNED SOUR.

He Thought Grapes Were Cheap, but He Changed His Mind.

A red whiskered man came along Fourteenth street and stopped at a corner grocery. The proprietor had been down to the market that morning and had bought a lot of grapes in baskets. He had arranged these in front of the store, and while waiting for customers sat on a box by the door and whittled a stick.

The red whiskered man inquired, "Howdy?"

"Pretty fair," answered the groceryman.

The red whiskered man reached over and picked up a bunch of grapes. He pulled off a grape, tasted it, smacked his lips approvingly and said, "Them's mighty good grapes."

"Yes," assented the proprietor.

The red whiskered man ate a few more. "Mighty good grapes," he said again. "I am astonished when I think of the magnitude to which the grape industry has grown in this country. Why, I can remember when the only persons who had grapes were those who raised a few vines themselves in their gardens. Now, they have got to be so cheap that every man, no matter how poor, can have them on his table during the season. It astonishes me also," here he reached over and took another bunch, "when I reflect on the cheapness with which a good article of fruit is put on the market. I can't see where the profit for the vineyardist comes in. Here is a basket of grapes selling for 10 cents. There is the labor of picking and handling to be considered and likewise the transportation."

"Aside from this," he picked up another bunch, "there is also to be computed the cost of the basket. How on earth a basket of the fruit can be sold for so cheap a price beats me. The grapes are worth much more than the price asked. They are a healthful food. They might well be sold for a quarter."

He started to move along. "Here," said the groceryman, "gimme 10 cents for them grapes."

"What's that?" asked the red whiskered man in surprise.

"Gimme 10 cents for them grapes you've et."

"Ten cents?"

"Yes, 10 cents. You et almost a hull basket."

The red whiskered man pranced around the sidewalk. "The idea," he shouted, "of charging a man 10 cents for a little, measly basket of grapes! Why, they ain't worth it. Grapes is a drug on the market. It's swindling to put such an outrageous price on them. I won't stand it."

"Gimme 10 cents," persisted the groceryman doggedly.

The red whiskered man reached down into his pocket and fished out three coppers. "Here," he said as he dropped them into the groceryman's outstretched hand, "I'll give 3 cents, and then I'm paying you more a durn sight than a basket of the stuff is worth. Why, grapes is the worst thing a man can eat."

And he cantered around the corner before the groceryman recovered from his astonishment.—Buffalo Express.

No Occasion For Punctiliousness.

"Is this your umbrella, sir?" inquired the stranger in the brown suit, hurrying after the stranger in the drab suit who had just got off the train.

"My dear sir," answered the other, "there need be no formalities in this case. We both saw it in the vacant seat at the same time. You got it first. I see it is a gold headed affair, and I congratulate you. Good day."—Chicago Tribune.

HISTORY OF TANEYTOWN.

PART III.

The portion of this History, as written by Rev. L. M. McKellicup, with Part II in our last issue. The additional parts, beginning with the one given below, will be written by Dr. C. C. Birnie as previously stated.—Ed.

I am afraid the Editor of the RECORD has given too large a title to this series of articles, when he calls them a History. Reminiscences, would be a better name; Taneytown has no distinct history apart from the history of the state and county, and in the absence of written records all that I can hope to do is to record some things that have happened in the past, either from my own knowledge, or as they may be remembered by others, and they will only be of interest to those who now, or have in times past, lived in Taneytown. The first idea was only to publish Mr. Luckenbach's address of July 4th, 1876.

In this paper, I will give some further account of the persons and things mentioned in that address. Stories or legends that come down to us by word of mouth and are not written, are often of doubtful authenticity, and are so liable to be altered by frequent repetition that even when they have a foundation of truth, it is hard to tell how much is truth, and how much tradition. There is, I believe, no doubt about the fact that General and Mrs. Washington passed through Taneytown, and staid all night at Gen. McKellicup's, and it is also certain that the table now in the possession of Mrs. J. McKellicup was used on that occasion. As Mr. Luckenbach says in his address, it was bought from the Good's by Mr. McKellicup, at the death of his wife it came into the possession of his daughter, Mrs. Benjamin Shunk, and Mrs. Shunk's daughter, Mrs. John McKellicup, now has it, so that there seems to be no doubt of its identity.

The truth as to the other parts of the legend of Gen. Washington's visit are not so easily proven, but are interesting to old citizens of Taneytown. The story as it is told is, that the General was on horseback, and Mrs. Washington in the coach. As the General rode up he saw the sign "A Good Entertainment for Man and Beast." The artist who painted the sign was not an expert and had gotten the capital A in Adam some distance from the dam; the sign was an old one, and rain and hot sun had almost effaced the first A, so that at first glance it seemed to read, "dam good entertainment for man and beast." The story does not say that the General even smiled at the oddity of the announcement, but merely remarked that, "it ought to be a good place to stay all night." Then follows the usual and milk and knitting part of the legend. It is probably true that Mrs. Washington spent the evening in some such way, as she was a notably good house wife, and is said to have knit most of her husband's stockings. It is also true, I doubt not, that the General was a part of Gen. Washington's private account book was published, and judging by the quantity of Madeira, and port wine, cider, &c., that he bought, it is not at all likely that he was an ascetic. In connection with all the patriots of the Revolutionary War he could, and did, live on a very scanty supply of luxuries when it was necessary, but people in those days were just as fond of good things to eat as they are now, and General Washington was no exception in this respect. The date on which his visit occurred is not known; it was in all probability after the Revolutionary war.

The legend of the Indian and the lead, is one that you will hear in hundreds of places throughout the part of the United States, and it is told in almost the same words everywhere. The fact that at a shooting match the lead gave out, and an Indian went away and got some, may be true, but it does not by any means follow that he got it from a lead mine; if the story is true, the Indian probably got the lead where he had hidden it. Legends of valuable mines, and of buried treasures are common all over the world, and the folk lore of new settled countries is especially full of them.

The "Angell House" mentioned in Luckenbach's address has been torn down, and a new house built where it stood.

Last summer the only house remaining from the Revolutionary times was torn down; it was the "Good House," at which General Washington stopped—a log house cased with brick. Early in this century it belonged to Mr. John McKellicup, grandfather of the gentlemen of the same name who still lives in Taneytown. At his death it passed to his son Mr. Jas. McKellicup, whom many will remember as an expert surveyor; indeed there are very few tracts of land around Taneytown which he has not surveyed. The Good property now belongs to Mr. N. B. Hagan, and he has built a handsome brick house on it.

During the past summer while the workmen were digging a cellar for a new house, which Dr. G. W. Demmitt built on York street, and opposite the site of the old Angell house, they came on the site of an old blacksmith shop. No one present at the time knew anything about its history, but Mr. Samuel Reindollar remembers that a man named Stroyer, in all probability a son of the man who had the gun factory, used to work there during the war of 1812. There were soldiers passing through Taneytown, and he conceived the idea of making cannon for the defence of the town, and went to work on them; tradition does not say that they were ever finished; at any rate they were never used, and the probability is they were not completed.

Most of the older people mentioned in Mr. Luckenbach's address are dead; Mr. Sterling Galt and his brother, Lieutenant Galt who was better known as Col. Samuel Galt, are both dead, but their properties are still in possession of their descendants. Mr. Sterling Galt's property belongs to his son, Henry Galt, and Mr. Samuel Galt's to his son Samuel. Mrs. Elizabeth Thomson also died at a good old age, and some of her descendants to the fourth generation still live in Taneytown. The descendants of Capt. Knox also still live on part of the property he owned, although the home place is now owned by Mr. Jonas Harner.

Mr. Luckenbach says he got a good deal of his information from Mr. Peter Heck; he died some years ago, about 90 years old, and was a man of remarkably accurate memory. He could tell every place at which he had ever worked in harvest-time, just when the harvest began, when it ended, and how many days he had worked at each particular place. I have often tested his memory about places and people, and always found him correct to the smallest details even when he was a very old man. He was quite a character in his way; at one time shortly before he died his physician told him, "Mr. Heck, you are very ill, and may not get well, if you have any business to arrange you had better do it," the old man answered in quite a loud, clear voice; "Oh! That's all right,—I was in town the other week and paid my bill at Reindollar's. I don't owe anybody anything." The man's personal knowledge of his memory and the reputation he had in the neighborhood, I am very sure that old age had not dimmed his memory, or invalidated the facts given by him.

The Great Fair of 1897.

During the past few weeks the Exposition authorities have been somewhat quiet concerning the great Fair of 1897. The apparent inaction, however, was intentional in order that the politicians of the City (a goodly number of whom are interested in the Centennial movement) might have ample opportunity to do their electioneering. Laiks are usually succeeded by storms, and it is prognosticated that there will be great activity in Centennial matters in the near future.

General Manager Brackett is daily receiving propositions from his many friends in the City of Baltimore, in selection of a site for the Exposition, but this is an important question and the manager is weighing each suggestion thoroughly before making a recommendation to the Directors. In the case of the City of Baltimore, the Grounds and Buildings will visit the many sites that have been suggested, and having studied all carefully, will decide on the one that is thought to be best adapted for the purpose.

The great question of all questions is now before the public, viz., that of securing subscriptions to the capital Stock of the Association. One hundred (100) subscription books have been recently sent out, and it is hoped that the people of our State as well as those of the City of Baltimore will subscribe liberally and take an active part in this mammoth undertaking, which universal sentiment declares will give "My Maryland" and her Metropolis the greatest triumph that has ever been witnessed.

The Exposition of 1897 has already proved to be a "drawing-card" as it has resulted in the selection of Baltimore City as a meeting place for the annual conventions of the following named Orders and Societies, viz.: Triennial Conclave of Masons, National Grand Lodge of Odd Fellows and the Great Council of United States, Improved Order of Redmen. There is also every probability that the Grand Army of the Republic, Farmer's National Congress and the Elks, will hold their annual sessions in Baltimore in 1897. Alexander J. Wedderburn, of the Virginia State Grange, is at present attending a large meeting of Grangers in Springfield, Ill. He will endeavor to secure for Baltimore the Annual Convention of the Grangers in 1897, so that they will be in this City during the period of the Exposition.

Mr. Editor, since other societies are doing so much to hold their annual conventions in 1897, why should it be doubtful "Washington camp, No. 2, of the P. O. S. of A., from coming to the front in making an effort to have the National Camp of the order in the United States do likewise. It will not only make it famous as a lodge, being the first to speak of it, but it will set forth the enterprising spirit of you town and may be the means of bringing many new and desirable settlers in your midst. Don't fail to take this matter up at once; and, as you are now publishing in your excellent paper the history of Taneytown, we hope that you will some day be able to say that the P. O. S. of A., of your beautiful city was instrumental in bringing the various representatives of the organization to the "monumental city" to hold its annual convention during the period of the great Fair.

D. T. R.

(The organization of the Patriotic Order Sons of America holds its national sessions biennially, and 1897 will be its regular year. Baltimore will likely prove a strong candidate for the meeting.—Ed.)

Our Journey around the World.
By Rev. Francis E. Clark.

This highly instructive and entertaining volume is a record of a recent journey around the world, such as, owing to the peculiar circumstances attending it, does not often fall to the lot of man to make. It was undertaken under especially favorable conditions by Rev. Francis E. Clark, D. D., President of the United Society of Christian Endeavor, and his wife, and throughout the long journey, which occupied more than a year, and covered nearly fifty thousand miles by sea and land, they enjoyed rare opportunities for observation and study. The entire volume is marked by fresh, original, and striking material, and is one of the most valuable books ever issued by the American press.

The reader is personally conducted through Australia, India, China, Japan, Egypt, Palestine, Turkey, and many other lands. We see these countries through American eyes, and obtain a perfectly clear view of them and their people, supplemented by two hundred and twenty splendid illustrations from photographs, most of which were taken by Dr. Clark himself; for he carried a complete photographic outfit with him. The daily life of a Chinaman in his own country; his favorite food and odd dishes; the singular rites witnessed in the temples; Chinese farms and farming; the seamy side of Chinese life; Japanese acrobats and their wonderful performances; the burning ghats of India, where the bodies of the dead are consumed on huge piles of wood (a ceremony Dr. Clark witnessed); the Towers of Silence where the dead are exposed to be devoured by thousands of waiting vultures that constantly sit on the walls; native jugglers, snake-charmers, and fakirs—these are but a few of hundreds of interesting topics presented.

Their route led across the land that Joseph gave to his father and brethren; past the great fields where the Israelites made bricks without straw, and along the highways where once rolled the chariots of the Pharaohs. Much time was spent in the museum of Bulak (Egypt)—the most wonderful museum in all the world,—where may now be seen the mummy of the Pharaoh who oppressed the children of Israel. The story of the discovery of Pharaoh's mummy among those of forty other mummies of kings, queens, and princes found in the royal mortuary chambers in the Valley of the Kings, and the identification of Pharaoh, is well told. Illustrations from photographs show where the mummy was found, and others give full-length, profile, and front views of the ancient king, who was contemporary with Moses and reigned in Bible times, thus enabling all to see "just how Pharaoh looked." It is one of the most wonderful things of this age that the mummy of this famous king, whose burial place was hidden for centuries, and which at last he found, and the withered body he exposed to the gaze of the curious. Miss Anna L. McSherry will canvass the town and district for this valuable and interesting work.

Oddities in Advertising.

There was a little boy in New York not long ago, hadn't a job. There was a yawning vacancy in his little stomach, but not any in his little head.

He had an idea. He got a lot of old newspapers, and some string and made a regular bundle of himself. He was the most preposterous spectacle imaginable. He looked as if he had been run through the press with a 48 page Sunday supplement, and hadn't been able to get clear of it. On his back was this sign:

"Job Wanted; Inquire within." He went out on Park Row that way at the lunch hour, and his fame spread all over the city. A hundred men were looking for him to give him work within five minutes, but that was too late. He had his job before he had walked the length of the row.

What made him particularly interesting was the suggestion that he had no clothes in his bundle. Of course he had, but he cleverly gave the idea of triumphing over dire adversity. That's always valuable. But it's much better to give the idea that adversity has triumphed over you, and that the public can share in the spoils of the victory.

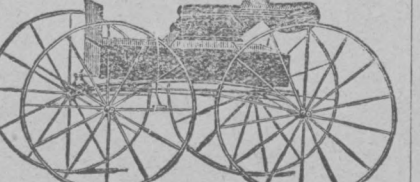

That's the idea which is back of the so-called fire sales. Of course there are many genuine fire sales. Merchants' goods are damaged by smoke or water and they're willing to sell them cheap. But there is no more of human calamity which hasn't been turned to the purposes of advertising. Why, even the tariff, that great and general calamity, is made the basis of many a good catch phrase. The woolen schedule is used in a clothier's ad in New York as an argument for the purchaser; and I'll bet that there is not good, honest wool enough in all the store to influence the value of the stock, if there were a duty of a thousand dollars an ounce on that cloth.

Now the genuine fire sale is a good thing. There's many a bargain to be picked up by a shrewd buyer. But it's different when the proprietor of a store makes a pile of old coats and pantaloons, and a dozen newspapers and touches them off with a blow of a match at night. They smoke furiously, and smell like a dead whale. An alarm is "pulled in." The firemen dash up. Just as they are getting ready to throw the place out, the proprietor informs them that he has succeeded in conquering the fire brand. In towns of less than 40,000 inhabitants his victory is chronicled in those words by the morning papers which also contain his advertisement of a great fire sale. It attracts a large crowd.

There is a sign over the door, in red letters—never other color. Men, women, come, especially the latter. "Yes, madam," says the salesman, holding up a coat, "I am forced by my native honesty to confess that this garment is damaged. It smells of smoke, of course you know I won't mind that. He smokes, himself, I dare say, and probably his pipe will match this to a shade. However, we have cut the price right in two. We will sell you this coat for $9. And she buys it. Two days before she could have bought the same coat in the same store for $7—the very same, except that then it did not have the odor of a burned gun boot clinging to it.

The moral is, advertise. You can't get along without it.
