THE appropriations of the last Congress were over the billion dollar mark. How History repeats itself.

THE EDITOR is the happy possessor of three new and handsomely bound volumes which contain all the issues of the Baltimore Sun Almanac up to date.

WHILE WE have no apology to make for any of the articles contained in the issue of last week, it may not be more than fair to state that the author of the article, which contained the sentence; "the red curtains and screens of the saloon," did not refer to any particular hotel in this town, but to the curtain of the saloon in a general sense; nor were any of the articles directed against any particular person or place of business.

"To DISCONTINUE an advertisement," says John Wanamaker, the largest advertiser in the world, "is like taking down your sign. If you want to do business you must let the people know it. Standing advertisements, when changed frequently, are better and cheaper than reading notices. They look more substantial and are business like, and inspire confidence. I would as soon think of doing business without clerks as without advertising." Now then, business men of Taneytown, here you have the opinion, based on actual experience, of the most successful business man of the age in reference to that which both you and the management of this paper is interested inadvertising. What have you to say? Will you profit by this opinion, or do you know better?

There are certain persons who af fect to despise county items contained in letters from special correspondents located at different points over the county, and pretend that it is a weak feature of County papers, and simply a means of filling up space. Not one in a hundred of the writers on the large city papers is eyer known by name, much less by reputation, by his readers. The more contributors of the right sort I can secure, the better. They must be brief and say something. Weather 'chestnuts" are excluded, petty jealousies cannot be aired—only news is wanted. I had rather have a column of such matter, than a page of the opinions of the best editor in the state."

It would be a good idea, and one which we are thinking of putting in practice, to issue to correspondents a printed circular of instructions, and insist on their being followed to the letter. Writers of this kind must of necessity be allowed certain license. for the reason that it is a service but slightly paid for, and strict rules on the part of the editor is like "looking a gift horse in the mouth," yet it is absolutely necessary in order to preserve the tone and dignity of the paper to use the blue pencil frequent-

Turner's Studio and Methods a Curiosity

to Visitors. Broderip and Sir Richard Owen, says the latter in his "Reminiscences," walked together to Turner's residence, which was slightly dingy in outward appearance. When they arrived at the door, they waited some time before their ring at the bell was answered. At last an elderly person opened the door a few inches and asked them suspiciously what they wanted. They replied that they wished to see Mr. Turner. The door was immediately shut in their faces, but after a time the person came back to say that they might enter. When they got into the hall, she showed them into a room and forthwith shut the door upon them. They then discovered, with some dismay, that this apartment was in total darkness, with the blinds down and the shutters up. After a prolonged interval they were told they might go up stairs. Upon arriving at the topmost story they perceived Turner standing before several easels and taking his colors from a circular table which he swung around to get at the paints he required. He was painting several pictures at once, passing on from one to the other and applying to each in its ing.-Weekly Prayer Meeting Tuesday Even- turn the particular color he was using till it was exhausted. He said that the bright light outside would have spoiled their eyes for proporly appreciating the pictures, and that to see them to advantage an interval of darkness was necessary. At this stage of the interview Broderip had to leave for some engagement, and then an event took place which Owen declares that none of his artist friends would ever believe. Turner offered him a glass of wine. It was while they were coming on in Turner's bosom. When they were passing a little cupboard on the landing, this struggle reached a climax. Finally Turner said, "Will you-will you have a glass of wine?" The Dyaks of Borneo

The ferocity of the Dyaks of Borneo when Rajah Brooke first came was appalling. No social or religious function could take place among the tribes without bloodshed. Young unmarried girls came forth from the long seclusion to which they had been condemned since childhood so anæmic that they could hadly stand. A slave was killed in their honor and the blood of the victim sprinkled over them. Head hunting had decimated the race. It was imperative that husbands should conjure evil spirits by bringing a human head to their wives before the expected birth of a child. Boys might not aspire to manhood without having earned the badge of the head hunter.

A skull was the first gift of a lover to his mistress and the last token of respect by which the living could honor the dead. On account of his rank no petty chief could be buried without many freshly decapitated heads to form his escort into the next world. The greatest respect, moreover, was shown to such trophies. They were smoked over a fire to preserve them. Their lips were forced open to receive the choicest morsels during the family meal. Tobacco and betel nuts were also spread before them. They were looked upon as honored guests, and every effort was made to win their friendship. - Fortnightly Review.

BERLIN MANNERS.

Customs That Proved Rather Mortifying to

Two American Girls. Two young girls were made miserable by an unwritten law which laid me low not long ago, writes a lady correspondent in Berlin. They were calling upon German women, and as they entered the room they saw that the least comfortable seat was the sofa, where they naturally seated themselves. One after another of the older women surveyed them until they became intensely uncomfortable, not knowing what dire accident could possibly have befallen them. At

"Young ladies, will you be so kind as to get up and give your seats to these older ladies?

The poor things were crushed. My own encounter with the sofa regulation was funnier than it was crushing. I went to a musicale given by a countess. Two daughters of titled houses had been cordial in their overtures, and I was having a beautiful time watching little differences of manner and wondering if all young women were expected to courtesy and kiss the hands of married women, as my vis-a-vis was doing. As the evening wore on I concluded what well bred people were, after all, the same everywhere. When supper was an nounced, there was a slight confusion in the placing of the guests, and I found myself in a smaller room with a few others, among them the most important woman of the assembly. The table had been drawn to a sofa, and there is where I made my mistake. My new friend, the countess' daughter, motioned me to the sofa, which seemed the best solution of the entanglement into which our for a German does not approach the ease and surety of an American hostess. At the same time the woman of importance took a seat on the sofa also. As she apparently spoke neither English nor French, and as I had not been here long enough to have acquired fluency in German, her attempt at a conversation was

When our hostess came to see if we were all happy, our lady of importance asked who I was, and on receiving a whispered reply sat up very straight and threw herself back on the sofa, exclaiming, "Ah mais c'est trop!" I was seized with a horrible fear that my hostess had told her that I was an American reporter, and I was intensely uncomfortable in spite of my companion's friend-liness. After that the great lady was very stiff, and I fear I was even stiffer. Looking again to see if she had fainted. I saw her calmly eating with her knife and no longer felt uncomfortable. If she scorned me for any reason, I certainly should be ashamed of her at my own table. I learned several days later from an American woman versed in German proprieties that my unpardonable offense had been in presuming to sit on the sofa beside my lady without a European title of high rank to back me up.

Mr. Kennedy united with the Baltimore Presbytery in 1831, and was dismissed to another in 1833; he seems to have labored in Taneytown in 1831, but was likely only a supply. Rev. For the RECORD. When the RECORD last made its visit to our home in the beautiful city of Springfield, I was delighted to see it enlivened and made much more interesting by being so expressive of our female friends of Taneytown. This act has no little reward in itself, and allows "the power behind the throne" to tell the world what it most needs today.

Permit me to say that the subjects discussed by the different writers represents the trend of thought from Adam to the present day, and shows what might be accomplished if we only have the chance. I cannot refrain from complimenting my friends of Taneytown, on their grand success, and trust that this is only the beginning of good things; but the portal to the higher plane of fame, and that we with renewed energy may go forth as one grand and glorious army, armed with the sword of the spirit, and with pen in hand, may prove to your fair city of Taneytown(?) and the sur-rounding community that "the hand which rocks the cradle rules the
