"How Some People Live."

We often hear the remark "I can't understand how that man lives; he has plenty of money, wears good clothing, sports around, yet don't work." When this is said truthfully —when the subject has no legitimate fortune from which to draw—he is undoubtedly and rightfully a suspicious character. Sometimes, a do-nothing and hand-to-mouth manner of living, calls for comment. In this character, the extent of crime at the bottom of the case being only that somewhat prevalent complaint called laziness, a profession which does not receive the centime it deserves. The majority of cases, however, are not attributable to this ailment.

Many hard-working, honest people are discouraged in their right living because of the examples found in almost every community "who toil not, neither do they spin," yet seem to take things easy. Some of these people, no doubt, live a fairly honest early life, using their wits to secure a subsistence without hard, or regular, manual labor, but the time comes to them when they must be a burden to somebody—to their wives, children or relatives. Their lives are unworthy of themselves, detrimental to the growth of honest and contented citizenship, and not to be followed as examples.

"How some people live" is recorded on the ledgers of the merchants, the tradesmen and physicians, in unpaid bills. If their names are on the church books, they are there without credit, and this is also true of their account with the newspaper man. They live by being "deadweight" by securing credit wherever they can get it—thus taxing the community for their existence, and there is a surprising number of this class who manage, against all laws of right and justice, to pass as "honest" people, simply because they have violated no law for which they can be made suffer.

Other people live by the practice of downright stealing. It may be truly said that all who do not work for an honest living, steal, directly or indirectly. The securing of credit, without ultimate payment, represents, in most cases, a sort of legalized form of stealing which should be plainly published as such. Whenever any man—young or old—contracts habits beyond his ability to support them by his honestly earned income, he enters upon a career of dishonesty, which, sooner or later, will brand him a dishonest debtor, if not a legal criminal.

"How some people live" is sometimes shown up in the shape of a shock to the community, following arrest, trial and conviction. We are thankful for these examples, but they are too infrequent. Far more escape than are punished, and for this, the better people, through false sympathy, are often responsible. Crime is too often palliated, and too often do the guilty through legal technicalities and the influence of mischievous friends escape their just deserts. The protection of moderate criminals has much the same effect as allowing weeds grow among grain and plants —the destruction of the good.

It is a most surprising fact that persons of known "shady" character often enjoy the apparent friendship and encouragement of respectable people until, and even after, the jail doors close on them. Moderate char-acterism and ungentlemanly conduct is not sufficiently blacklisted. This is especially true among young men, a certain element of which rather glories in a "toughness" of character without loss of prestige, and are thereby encouraged to become more bold, extending their influence until others are dragged down with them. Evidently, the moral standard of modern communities needs elevation.

Estimates of Success.

Not long ago a citizen of a certain town in this country died. Though respected by all, he had been in no sense a marked or prominent man.
After his graduation from college he married and engaged in a calling that meant a life of constant drudgery for a slender salary. But he did his work faithfully for upward of forty years, too busy with the duties that came each day to his hand to think of finding an occupation that would bring him a larger return of fortune or fame. He reared a large family of boys and girls in honor and honesty.
He sent some of the boys to college and put others in business. As for the girls, he seconded all the efforts of their mother to make them good, true and pure in all respects, worthy to be the mothers of noble men. As a citizen and a neighbor he aimed to have a conscience void of offence toward all men. He was honest, upright, truthful and kindly, and all in such a quiet, matter of fact way that hardly any one ever noticed it. His character, indeed, was so much a part of him that the world thought he just did as he did, and the world was right in thus thinking. So he died, and outside of his family and a few friends his death was an unnoted incident. "Dead? Really? Too bad; nice old chap, but rather slow.
Queer how he managed to get along with his big family and no salary to speak of." In a similar vein was the comment of his old college chum, a man who has become famous, wealthy and powerful in the world. "Poor mind. Indeed, he may be "died in the wool," politically. Any scheme which will tend to fool him into voting against his fixed desire, is not a question of intelligence, at all—it is downright diabolism.

Those who are now tinkering with special session tricks will find themselves greatly mistaken if they think the people of Maryland will submit to any ridiculous, so-called, educational laws which extend beyond a simple and popular exercise of the voting privilege. Our present system of fact, is just about as difficult and red-tapish as the people will submit to, and the real popular wish is for it to be divested of some of its machinery and expense, without in anywise making it "more educational."

An Appreciated Testimonial.

The following testimonial from the Frostburg Mining Journal cannot be passed by without reproduction and a bow of thanks, although Brother Oder leaves the question somewhat debatable as to whether the compliment is meant for our paper, its advertiser, its constituency or the town.
We take it that a newspaper must first be desired by many readers, because of merit; advertising contracts then follow as a natural consequence and this benefits the town, the whole being a sort of mutual admiration combination. If this is good logic, our bow is not out of place for this reference.

"The (Carroll) Record is published in a town of about 700 population, but it is richly decorated by apparently the advertisement of every merchant, tradesman and mechanic in the place.
Outside of this cheerful reflex of the town's business the Record is in itself a mirror of the qualities of an up-to-date enterprising and cultivated constituency."

A Larger Army.

The new army reorganization bill that received President McKinley's signature last week provides for an increase of the regular military establishment, at the discretion of the President, with 100,000 men as the maximum. Ten new regiments of infantry and cavalry are to be recruited without delay, additional troops being urgently needed to take the place of the volunteers in the Philippines, who must be returned home not later than June 30 of the present year, in accordance with the act under which they were enlisted. There are to be appointed a lieutenant general, four major generals, nine brigadier generals and other officers, to the number of 1,800, and the rearrangement of the army will be accomplished as speedily as possible.

Whether the organization provided by the new statute meets the best requirements is a question for military experts to decide. Critics attack the new law on the ground that it leaves conditions practically unchanged; that it enlarges the army and alters certain details of appointment, but that in all essential respects the present system is retained; and that in particular the relations between staff and line, which have given rise to much friction and elicited unfavorable comment, remain almost the same.

Of far greater importance to the public is the fact that the law places at the command of the President the troops he needs to deal with the situation in the Philippines and prevent deterioration of the costly and complicated munitions of war acquired during recent years. As the volunteers now in the archipelago must be sent home, it was imperative that there should be regulars to take their place, because any marked weakening of garrisons at this time would fan the flames of rebellion and under a large part of the work already accomplished. The task of pacification will be greatly aided by the act in its practical application, and there is little room for doubt that the maintenance of the force of occupation at its present strength will hasten the restoration of order.

The talk about an enlarged army inviting the menace of militarism can be dismissed without serious discussion. Even if the maximum number of soldiers is enlisted, the ratio to population will not be in excess of the figures for periods in our national history when this question excited neither alarm nor controversy. To assert that an army of 100,000 men would endanger civil liberty is an appeal to prejudice or a conjuring up of imaginary evils.—Morning Herald.

Some very wild looking actions have taken place on our side walks this week, such as high-kicking, pawing at the brick, skating cross-legged and sitting down suddenly. Very frequently, those so affected spoke a few brief words in the Russian language.

The play "A Detective in Petticoats," will be rendered in the Opera House, on Thursday evening, the 14th, instead of the 15th, as announced in last issue. The proceeds will be for the benefit of our Fire Company, therefore, the house should be packed, especially as the play itself will be rendered by our own excellent feminine talent.

Postmaster Englar was in Washington, on Tuesday, in the interest of securing a patent on a mail box for Rural Delivery use. Complaints are somewhat difficult to secure, now, owing to the large number of boxes invented, but he hopes to succeed in this as well as in having his box adopted by the P. O. Department, a special committee of which will meet on the 18th, for the purpose of examining into the merits of all boxes presented.

Introduced by Mark Twain.

"Only once has Mark Twain appeared in public as a political speaker, and that was in the Presidential campaign of 1880," according to the St. Paul Globe. "While visiting in Elmira, New York, in the fall of that year, he made a short speech, introducing to a republican meeting General Hawley, of Connecticut. In the course of remarks, Twain said: 'General Hawley is a member of my church in Hartford, and the author of "Beautiful Snow." Maybe he will deny that, but I am only here to give him a character, and I must say that he is a pure citizen, I respect him; as a personal friend for years, I have the warmest regard for him; as a neighbor whose vegetable garden adjoins mine, why—why, I watch him.' As the author of "Beautiful Snow" he has added a new pang to winter. He is a square, true man in honest politics, and I must say he occupies a mighty lonesome position. So broad, so bountiful is his character, that he never turned a tramp empty-handed from the door, but always gave him a letter of introduction to me. Pure, honest, incorruptible, that is Joe Hawley. Such a man in politics is like a bubble of perfume in a glass factory—it may moderate the stench, but it doesn't destroy it. I haven't said any more of him than I would say of myself. Ladies and gentlemen this is General Hawley."

Without the Frills.

An editor who was thoroughly tired of the foolishness that goes on at a church wedding finally got even as follows, says the Atchison Globe: "These were married, great style, the elopement of the town were invited, principally because it was thought that they would be more likely to bring elegant presents to the bride. Of course the ceremony took place in the church, and the church was most beautifully decorated for the occasion. Potted plants were brought, and the bride and groom could be secured without making the owner mad enough to fight."

"The bride's young lady friends had a decoration, and, when they were not making nosegays they were chewing the rag about the trouble and work, and wishing that the bride had sense enough to get up her own wedding. The ushers were claw-hammer coats, parted their hair in the middle and stepped high when they walked down the aisle. The bridesmaids wore white gloves and their white gloves came from an undertaker, who kept them on hand for funeral occasions."

"It was a nice ceremony. The ring was a monstrous gold band borrowed of the village jeweler. People called the bride lovely, but she was so homesick that she bolted out of the door in the doorway where she lived. The bridegroom was dressed in conventional black, so called because his father once wore the coat to a dance. The bride and groom went to St. Louis on their wedding tour, where they spent more money in 24 hours than any of them can earn in a month."

Pneumonia Can Be Prevented.

This disease always results from a cold or an attack of the grip and may be prevented by the timely use of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. That remedy was extensively used during the epidemics of La Grippe of the past few years, and not a single case has ever been reported that did not recover or that resulted in pneumonia, which shows it to be a certain preventive of that dangerous disease. Chamberlain's Cough Remedy has gained a world-wide reputation for its cures of colds and grip. For sale by R. S. McKinney, Druggist, Taneytown, Md.

Inexperience in Cooking.

We are informed that a young lady of York, recently wedded, the other day made her appearance in a market of that city to purchase a chicken. She thought she knew all, being up to a nicely dressed fellow who she was after, she squeezed it, just as she had seen other women do, and then naively remarked: "I don't think I will do it. I wish with my own eyes filling, and I am sure this has nothing in it but bread crumbs." The dealer burst out in a loud laugh, and she went away a disappointed purchaser.—Mechestown Union.

Alderman Green, the new lord mayor of London, is most proud of the fact that he helped largely to give London the Tower bridge.

As chairman of the committee of the bridge house committee he had charge of the report which led to the building of the finest bridge which has ever been thrown across the Thames. He took an active part, too, in passing the proposals for the electric lighting of the city.

Wintering Trotters.

Trotters in winter quarters should be given about one-half the feed supplied during the summer season.

Let the horses be fed on good hay and oats twice a day are the most desirable feeds. Let the horses run out of doors every day, and in any event keep the animals from laying on fat, for this must all be worked off when the training season opens.

High Feeding.

There are at least two kinds of high feeding—first, feeding a large range of land with high feeding; second, feeding with any purpose whatever, says L. W. Lighty in The National Stockman. Just a few days ago I visited a farmer who keeps quite a number of cows to supply milk for a small town. He has the reputation of being a very high feeder, and his cows, young stock and calves are as fat as porkers, which proves that, in a way, he is a high feeder. I never like to be personal, so I will mention no name, and the party referred to will not read this, as he has no paper but his party's political party sheet, filled with "hot stuff."

He gave me all the facts and figures he could, which were more guesses, except the milk bills, and I would like to give a few as an "awful" example.

He fed 17 milk cows during the last year, and his milk statements showed that he sold 55,548 pounds of milk, for which he received $491.95, or almost $29 per cow. The cows had all the hay (timothy) and corn stover they wanted to eat. Their grain ration consisted of corn chop, corn chop, corn chop. A "roll" box full morning and night, about 12 pounds per day. The cost of his daily ration is at least 17 cents, while the average daily ration for each cow was last year almost 8 cents. Oh, dear, oh dear! What a result from high feeding! No wonder the reader of The Stockman and Farmer will do such feeding, but hundreds, yes, thousands of nonreaders do such very thing. For fattening steers such a ration might go, but for dairy cows, never. It puts a big lot of fat on the ribs, and a good deal of fat on the butter and milk making materials are lacking in the ration, while there is a big surplus of heat and fat makers. In short, the cows do not get half enough protein, and the result is "dairying" done.

Dutch Butter Adulterated.

And now it appears that the famous Dutch butter which holds so high a reputation in England is sometimes adulterated. Dealers in London sued for and recovered $250 damages by reason of loss on a lot of Dutch butter which, they claimed, contained 10 per cent of margarine. It was proved in court that some of the samples shown were adulterated and others doubtful and suggested that the butter was adulterated.

A LONDON BEAUTY TO WED.

Lady Helen Stewart Will Become the Wife of Arthur Balfour.

Lady Helen Stewart, undoubtedly the most popular, if not the most beautiful, girl in London, is engaged to marry. At least this is the story that exclusive circles are whispering about. And her husband is to be none other than Arthur Balfour, the first lord of the treasury and Conservative leader of the house of commons. Rumor doubtless speaks fairly in this case at least, for the prominence of the two contracting parties is such that a mistake in such a matter could scarcely be safely made.

Arthur Balfour is undoubtedly one of the most astute statesmen in the empire. If he were not, the fact that he was the nephew of the prime minister would be sufficient to keep him in the public eye. His fearless nature and his forceful views suffice to do for him, however, without the aid of his kinship. His marriage would therefore be of the keenest interest to Englishmen and to foreigners as well.

Lady Helen Stewart is not less gifted. She is a brilliant, brainy woman, who ranks as a London society higher on the list of her ability than on account of her beauty. Her marriage would therefore be of the keenest interest to Englishmen and to foreigners as well.
