Maryland at St. Louis Fair. Statehouse, Annapolis, Md., Feb. .- A large delegation of citizens of Baltimore and vicinity, many of whom represented the business and ommercial interests of the city, came here to day in the interest of the extra appropriation of $60,000 for the Maryland exhibit and building at the St. Louis Fair. By appointment the delegation met the Finance Commit-tee of the Senate and the Ways and Means Committee in joint session in the House chamber and clearly set before the committees the exact needs of the Maryland Commission to the St. Louis Fair.

Playing of Games.

Possibly no home question has been which will meet with common accept ance. Games and their character, as well as the conditions under which they are played, vary as greatly as do the persons who engage in them.

chance. Gamblers, or those who make ognize it. harm out of gaming, do not patronize such games-they are "too slow."

We consider the dice cup, on which the playing of certain games depends, the emblem of harm. Even that apparently innocent home game of parcheesi, is completely changed in character by the chance throwing of certain spots, which at once opens up opportunities for the display of the very worst elements of one's makeup-meanness, anger, contention and partiality. Indeed, the harm in most games arises from the ill effects they have on the temper and habits of the players, and the side issues which seem their natural and appropriate accompanists. Certain games may be played with the regulation playing cards, with little or no harm. Whist, is one of them. If this was the only game of cards, gamblers would be compelled to seek some other convenient device, as there is next to nothing in the game which appeals to passion or the gambling spirit; it is a test of memory. Other games with cards may be, and often are, played with no apparent ill results, depending wholly on surroundings and participants. Such games as poker-which cannot be played without a stake, or bet-should not be indulged in under any conditions, for the reason that they combine betting, chance, and direct appeal to passion, in their playing regulations.

Those who play games promiscuously, and under nearly all circumstances, argue in extenuation that "you can make harm out of anything" but the argument is fallacious, as a defense of a disreputable game. No game, or sport, is permissible, unless it be for amusement, relaxation, or improvement of body or mind. One games to secure either.

When one assumes that he can play poker, for instance, without harm, he must first realize that he has not only himself to consider in his act; that the safety of society is based on the principle that one has no right to harm others, either directly or by example, and he can never be sure that his personal indulgence (even if harmless to himself) may not lead to harm for others. Again, poker being a medium commonly used for gambling, it is thereby disreputable and dangerous, and none can indulge in it without the chance of being harmed, or causing harm, any more than they can with safety handle carelessly, or without thought, any other medium or element dangerous to life or charac-

That Barber Board.

There are always a few humorous features connected with the rather serious matter of legislating for the people of a state, and the "funniest" of these so far this term is the proposition, embodied in a bill, to create a 'State Board of Barbers'' of three members, to be appointed by the Governor, with a salary of $5.00 per day and an additional mileage allowance of 3 cents for each mile traveled while on duty traveling over the state inspecting barber shops.

The bill further requires that no persons shall officiate with lather brush and hair clippers unless they have first served as an "apprentice" in a regular shop for at least three years, and hold a "diploma from the Board of Examiners." There is a penalty attached of $10.00 and imprisonment for 30 days, for violation of this proposed law.

The effort is too ridiculous to consider seriously for a minute, and yet the budding genius who had the gall to offer, it must have been in earnest. He should have gone a little further and extended the ramifications of his bill to bath-room keepers, chiropodists, manicurists, boot-blacks and all others who in any way care for the human face or form; and, while he was about it, he could, with a considerable measure of appropriateness and need, have provided "Examiners" for hotel toilet rooms and appliances.

The bill does not impose a fine on a man for shaving himself, nor for letting his hair or beard grow incrock on top of her boy's head and clips off all the hair that sticks out need not indulge in the disreputable around the edges. To write of abuses without being abusive is part of Miss Tarbell's strength as a historian. Her ability is equalled by her dignity. And nowhere is better illustrated than in Chapter III of the second part of her "History of Standard Oil Company," appearing in McClure's for February. She takes up her narration at the point where Mr. Rockefeller, controlling the oil refining and transportation of the country, turned to the markets as his next field of conquest. Topic.—Christ for the world and for me. —John iii, 14-21. The world includes every person who is a part of the world. God loved the world by loving every person in the world, and it is well for us to remember this when we come to read such verses of Scripture as John iii, 16. We may feel that the world is something beyond us, that it is so large that it does not include us, that God may love the world, but not us. Such, however, is not the case. The world includes every individual in the world. It includes you; it includes me. Christ Himself in these familiar verses soon passes from the use of "world" to that of the individual, using the pronoun "he" and the expression "every one," which is all inclusive. Everything predicted of Christ in this precious passage applies to the world, but it also applies to me.

1. Christ was lifted up on the cross for the world and for me. "As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness that Israel might look upon it and be saved. Wicked men, ignorantly carrying out the will of God, lifted up Christ upon the cross of Calvary that the world might look upon Him and be saved. This was the crowning act of God's plan of salvation-Christ's death upon the cross. It was for the world. It was also for me. Christ died for me!

I gave My life for thee,
My precious blood I shed,
That thou mightst ransomed be
And quickened from the dead.
I gave, I gave My life for thee.
What hast thou given for Me?

2. Christ's death upon the cross was a manifestation of God's love for the world and for me. "God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son." It was love that impelled God to give His Son as an atoning sacrifice for the sins of the world. But this love of God extends to each individual in He loved us and sent His Son to be the propitiation for our sins." And God's ove for us should inspire us to love Him. "We love Him," says John, "because He first loved us."

3. The effect of Christ's death and God's love upon us must be determined by ourselves. "He that believeth on Him is not condemned, but he that believeth not is condemned already." tled it? Do you believe? Do you return God's love? Thus only can you receive the blessings of salvation offered in Jesus Christ.

UNIMPROVED ROADS.

WHAT THEY COST THE FARMERS IN THIS COUNTRY.

Some Facts by a Road Engineer-A Solution of the Problem - Hard Times Traced Directly to Impracticable Highways.

The subject of good roads is one in which every inhabitant of the country is personally interested, writes a road engineer in Good Roads Magazine. Unless he produces on his farm every article he uses, unless he receives no mail, pays no taxes and never ventures "I stand here and tell you this! I'll beyond the bounds of his own property, he is affected in the spot tenderest him a gentleman-actually has had his to us all-his pocketbook-by the conarm about me. You demand explana- dition of the country roads. He pays with your questions. No necessity of he would to maintain good roads. If he receives mail it costs the govern-"I'll just ask one, Mrs. Smith. Who | ment-and this means the people-more to carry it over bad roads than good roads. If he travels beyond his own ladies' tailor who made this gown I | property it takes more of his time, which is money, and more out of his team over bad roads than good ones.

It costs him more on account of bad roads to market produce. This extra cost must be added to the cost of production, and the man who buys the article must pay the difference. It costs just as much to grow a bushel of wheat or corn near a good road as beside a bad one, but if on the bad road the producer can only haul twothirds of the load with the same team that he can on the good one his cost of marketing his wheat or corn is 50 per cent more than it otherwise would be, and the man who buys the wheat or corn must pay that much more. And, wheat or corn, oats or cotton, beef or wool, the same thing applies. If all the roads are bad all the producers labor under the same disadvantage, and the manufacturer pays the farmer the extra price and then charges the farmer a higher sum in his turn for the manufactured articles to make up for

Activity, prosperity and thrift are the natural fruits of mutual dependence on one another, coupled with the legend "I promise to

There are many times when the demoralized condition of the business of this country can be traced directly to bad roads. Hard times, dull times, labor unemployed, fluctuating prices, reduced railroad earnings, spasmodie speculation in stocks, corners in food stuffs, are often the immediate results of bad roads. R. G. Dun & Co. of New York not long ago in a review of the condition of trade said that "the strin gency in the money markets-here and at some other points is more largely due to slow collections, which appear to result from severe weather and impracticable roads," than to anything else. So it is the mud that rules the land. So great a foe requires the united efforts of the people to dethrone it. In this struggle every line of business in the land should be united, and there is certainly no interest which has more at stake in the success of this movement and which should be more determined and active in urging the work

Fighting a River.

Few features of the strange lands of entral Asia are stranger or more celebrated than the great Amu Daria, the ancient Oxus, which has been attempting once more to change its bed. For more than two and a half centuries this river has flowed into the Aral sea, but for 400 years before that, according to ancient records, its destination was the Caspian, while it has changed its whole course in the same way yet once again within the period of which there are records remaining in the later classical authors. At the beginning of last month for the first time in several generations the Amu Daria began to break new ground again. Swollen by unusual floods, it began to drive a channel in the direction of a prosper way line. A thousand men have been engaged day and night for weeks past constructing dams to protect this town and keep back the river in its old bed, and the cost of the work has already amounted to many thousands of dol-

That was what the note instructed him to do. A half hour passed. Senator Cockrell was enduring the pangs of hung-er. "What became of the boy who went after my apples?" said he to Barney Layton.

The lad, entirely unsuspicious of anything amiss, was summoned into the Senator's presence. He explained that he thought the apples were his reward for delivering his message.

He had eaten them. The frugal Missourian saw the joke in the situation. He could not restrain a laugh. Being out of lunch-eon, he resumed attention to the Senate proceedings and bided his evening

SUGAR FROM SAWDUST.

It Can Be Made, but It Is Hardly Fit For Table Use. During the middle ages the alchemists, who were the predecessors of the modern men of science, spent much time in making a so called "philosopher's stone" which should transform nary sawdust into table sugar is one of them. The table sugar part of it is generally considered an interesting chimera, but the question of economically reducing sawdust to the different variety known as grape sugar contains possibilities that greatly interest the modern chemist either in the laboratories of commercial plants or in such student of commercial plants or in such student UPTON MARKER & Ed. Dodrer, Clerks. workshops as the sugar laboratory of the Massachusetts Institute of Tech-Grape sugar, which the chemists call dextrose, is an important item in the manufacture of health foods and can be used economically because it develops naturally in a comparatively inexpensive chemical process to which certain grains, chiefly corn, are subjected to produce eventually starch or glucose. As long ago as 1819 a French chemist surprised the French academy by exhibiting a few grains of grape sugar which he had made from old linen, commonly believed to have been his own shirt. Other scientists have shown also that grape sugar could be made from wood, although no one has yet found a way to transform this grape sugar into the more familiar, everyday produce of the cane or sugar beet. The oretically, therefore, either an old house or an old suit of linen can be turned into this grape sugar provided one would take a great deal of trouble for a very small result. The reason why sugar can be made from wood or linen is due to the action-which it would require a sugar tion—which it would require a sugar chemist to explain in detail—of sulphuric acid on the cellulose, or woody fiber, that is found in both wood and linen. Few persons, however, believe linen. Few persons, however, believe that the process will ever be anything more than a scientific curiosity.
