A MOVEMENT is on foot to organize a George Gray club, in Maryland, which, though a late, and perhaps wasteful effort, is nevertheless a movement for the nomination of a first-class man for President, and if there is to be a break in the Bryan program the honor could not come to a better man than Judge Gray, whose chief misfortune is to be a resident of so small a State as Delaware.

A GOOD MANY Democrats persist in saying, "Roosevelt is a democrat," which moves other democrats to denounce, and ask, "what is a democrat?" As republicans are about as much a republic as whether Roosevelt is a republican, and as Bryan and Roosevelt are claimed to be the same thing, only a little different, and as both are amazingly popular, it is a wonder that the two don't "get together" and form a new party, of which they would represent the head and tail of the Presidential ticket, and sweep the country. The trouble is neither would they take the "tail" end.

Common Sense and Matrimony.

"Some women wed for money, some for love, and a few for a good reason. Some cannot even get a man. For either love or money."

"Have you ever seen a man to hunt husbands as men have to hunt wives?"

This exceedingly important question puts before us a subject worthy of most careful consideration. Of course, this matter has been discussed more or less for a long time—ages, possibly, and promises to be one of the liveliest social topics of the future. "The coming woman" is, no doubt, responsible for its revival at the present time, because she is insisting, and will continue to insist, upon her right to choose for herself a husband.

Can you blame her? Well, hardly. It is she who will have to live with him, or at least make the effort to do so. Consequently she is, (as she should be), more interested in the man she marries than any one else.

But how is she to go about catching a husband just to her liking?

After all, this is the real question at issue because certain of the more arbitrary rules of society forbid women making advances to men.

Now, common sense teaches that a woman has equal social rights with a man. But common sense and the usages of society do not coincide here. The usages of society though thoroughly well-grounded are undoubtedly often arbitrary. Whether common sense or these usages, therefore, are to determine the case, remains to be seen.

According to our social customs, a young man may send a note to a lady requesting permission to call on her, but it would be regarded as an invitation to a young lady to send an invitation to a gentleman to call on her. She has the same natural social right to do so, but in this case she is not allowed to exercise it.

It happens, sometimes at least, that a lady would like to go to an attractive public entertainment, but, having no regular company, has to stay at home, although she would willingly pay the expenses. She may know young men who, like her, would enjoy the entertainment, but she has reason to believe would be glad to go with her; but she dare not invite one of them for the pleasure and convenience of his company. She undoubtedly has the right to do so, but society forbids it.

Under the arbitrary rules that have controlled society for so long, it is regarded as the worst form for a gentleman to allow a lady to pay her way as long as he acts as her escort. Custom has sanctioned this, but custom can hardly make it right; at least it does not necessarily do so. As a matter of courtesy this consideration is perfectly proper; but courtesy is not regulated by fixed rules. If a gentleman invites a lady to an entertainment, of course he expects to pay the bills. On the other hand, should she invite him, it would naturally follow that she would pay them. Is this one reason why ladies do not avail themselves of their natural right to be in the enjoyment of this privilege? It may be. At all events, the question is not an empty one.

Were society to recognize what is known as the "Dutch treat," it would open a way to the solution of some of the problems in this connection that often prove troublesome. To practice it would probably require a good deal of nerve on the part of the women, and would undoubtedly cause considerable embarrassment to the men. But wouldn't it be "the thing"?

There is an impression abroad that men have a pronounced dislike, if not contempt, for women who "chase" them. This may be true; it probably is. But seeking or cultivating the acquaintance of a man, when done properly, is quite different from what is known as "chasing," and none are more sensible of the difference than men of refined taste and good judgment. The dude, the "sporty" chap, and the man who rates himself as a "fast" are not able to detect this difference, but conclude at once that the "dear creature" who shows them special favor has been smitten so hard that they have lost their heads as well as their hearts. It is a true pity that these men should be so easily misled, and yet to feel that the lady does not do it entirely with the women, for how can they help paying attention to such paragon of manhood?

There isn't a fool man in the world who cannot find a love mate. "For every Jack there is also a Jenny." So these "dudes" and "mashers" fall in with their kind in time, and as a rule soon settle down and out of sight. But those who do most of the talking about the women, and who venture to assert their natural social rights and privileges preliminary to matrimony.

Believing that she has a right to choose her partner, she would be an exception-will last a century and our hard coal about fifty years.

As to timber—That now standing is estimated at two thousand billion feet. The present annual consumption is one hundred billion feet, while the annual growth is from thirty to forty billion feet. At the present rate of consumption our supplies of timber will not last more than thirty-three years. At present in the West there are 164,963,555 acres of national forest lands, a beginning in the reclamation and protection of forests.

As to water waste—The annual flood damage in the United States exceeds $100,000,000. Through cutting down the forests and exposing the soil to the rain, a billion tons of earth, 90 per cent. soil, is washed annually into our streams.

In our water supplies, 1,600,000,000 of horse power run fully each year over Government lands, only a small fraction of the actual waste the country over. Capitalized at 3 per cent., this known Government waste represents an investment of more than $1,000,000,000.

The swamp lands that need reclaiming amount to more than 50,000,000 acres, the reclamation of which would increase the land value more than $5,000,000,000, the annual crop value $1,000,000,000, and if subdivided into forty-acre farms would supply 2,500,000 families with homes and put 12,000,000 people on lands now practically worthless.

The arid regions of the United States cover 600,000,000 acres of which 60,000,000 acres are subject to irrigation. By completing twenty-five engineering works now under way, the reclamation service will reclaim 3,198,000 acres, which area will increase the value of farm crops by 60,000,000, will add $22,000,000 to the taxable property of the people and will furnish homes for 80,000 families."

It is a true pity that these men should be so easily misled, and yet to feel that the lady does not do it entirely with the women, for how can they help paying attention to such paragon of manhood?

There isn't a fool man in the world who cannot find a love mate. "For every Jack there is also a Jenny." So these "dudes" and "mashers" fall in with their kind in time, and as a rule soon settle down and out of sight. But those who do most of the talking about the women, and who venture to assert their natural social rights and privileges preliminary to matrimony.

Believing that she has a right to choose her partner, she would be an exceptionally stupid girl who couldn't properly manage to meet the young fellow by whose presence and manners she had been favorably impressed. The fact is, not only would she find ways and means to meet him, but she would do it so cleverly that he could never suspect her at all of having any designs upon him.

Should he not prove as satisfactory as she had anticipated she would allow him to go his way all unconsciously of having been held up and inspected by a woman in search of a suitable husband. Were she to recognize in him her kind of a man, he would find no lack of opportunity for cultivating her acquaintance, until finally he would conclude that he himself had discovered her, and by his own efforts had led her to admire, if not to love him, and she, vice creature, would allow him to enjoy his pleasant illusion or delusion undisturbed.

The clever woman of the period is equal to such feats as this, and doubling performs them; but the coming woman will be vastly superior to her sister of to-day in social and matrimonial diplomacy.

The real "man-chaser," the one for whom men have no use, and not a little contempt, is the woman who lacks sense and discretion. She construes courteous attention into evidence of deep admiration, if not of love. Because these attentions are not continued she concludes that her wished-for admirer is timid and has mistaken her feelings towards him. To correct any such false notions as may have possessed him, and to put him perfectly at ease, she makes it convenient to meet him often; and by way of showing him that his company and attentions are entirely agreeable, she sticks to him.

The man-chaser cannot take a hint. Nor is she sensible of the impropriety of her conduct. If she wants to marry the man of her choice she may persist in her attentions until he yields assent. But, unfortunately, this seldom inures to her happiness. Sometimes men marry women no less annoying as wives than as sweethearts, such men blow out their brains, or do some other equally rash and foolish act, to rid themselves of their compact.

Do you remember the sketch Shakespeare has given us of the woman who could not make her love known? Here it is from "The Twelfth Night":

"She never told her love; But her concealment, she was full of it. Her heart was full of it; she pinched in thought, And with a green and yellow melancholy She sat like Patience on a monument, Smiling at grief."

Surely there is no sense in any woman acting after this fashion. Even if her first effort at courtship should prove unsuccessful, she need not despair; for there is no man so good that there are not others just as desirable.

You may rest assured that the coming woman will not "sit like Patience on a monument, Smiling at grief." She will not be "built that way."

One of the poets of the gentler sex has given the following to the world. How do its sentiments strike you?

"Out in the meadow where daisies nod, White and yellow, grass and slim, Two little playmates with a nod, And wander long by the streamlet's brim, At length with lagging step and slow, She leaves him, tears in the sweet blue eyes, She hopes he will call her back, but no, He whistles blithely o'er pole and stile."

"Down on the sands where the waves wash blue, Deep and blue, white-capped with spray, A youth and a maiden, with book and sigh, Wander along till the sky grows gray: At length with step reluctant, slow, She leaves him, heart as dull with pain; He looks a look of regret—but no, He whistles 'When Summer Comes Again'."

"Ah! poor little maid in the sunlit field, And woman grown by the ocean's tide, You are but incidents, soon forgot, In the life of mankind, exhaustive—wide! He smokes, and your image floats away In curling waters, dreamlike and dim; For you, monotonous, but longed for, The dead best buries its dead with him."

Fighting Ships, Not Bomb-Proofs.

Rear Admiral Eyan's farewell to the navy in which he has so long and so well served the Republic is worthy of the record which it closes, especially in its terse and epigrammatic exposition of his conception of the character and functions of battleships. Mindful of the recent controversy over waterlines, freeboard, disposition of armor belts, etc., as though, in his own picturesque phrase, "we had a lot of eggs" placed one to the waterline to be smashed by "every shell that comes along," he said: "It is 'not armor belts or waterlines that win battles. It is the men who shoot straightest and hardest and can stand punishment the longest." This spoke the successor of the great admiral who used to argue that the best way to protect yourself is to injure your adversary, and to boast—with the most possible boasting of a man who fulfilled his word—that he would pass any forts in the world with any vessels which would float his guns. There, too, spoke the man who appreciated the lesson of the naval conflicts of recent years, especially those at Santiago and near Tashima.

This is the significance of the Dreadnoughts and improved Dreadnoughts which other nations are now building in advance of our halting provision. It is not that the ships which are now becoming obsolete, but that their gunfire potency is two or three times as great. It makes little difference between two 11-inch armor, or 10-inch and the other 11-inch armor, or that one has its armor belt three-eighths of an inch higher than the other. But if one can shoot eight 12-inch guns in broadside and the other only four, there is a difference which counts and which will determine the result, is the justification—and not only the justification, but also the imperative necessity—of liberal provision for target practice and of assiduous attention to such work. A battle may be won as much by the shooting that has been done at targets in time of peace as by the shooting at the hostile fleet in time of war.

The brave rear admiral—as discerning and discreet as he is brave—has just bade his fellow officers the service has just known by the familiar sobriquet of "Fighting Bob." The phrase is significant. It is the fighter who wins fights. The story of naval wars from the time of Drake and Grenville, through that of Jones and Nelson and Dunderdahl, to that of Farragut and Dewey and Evans, teaches nothing more convincingly than that in the long run those captains win who are concerned not so much with keeping their own ships from being sunk as with getting at the enemy and pounding him as hard as they can. And the ideal of the battleship is not a bomb-proof which cannot itself be hurt, but a fighting machine which can inflict the greatest possible damage upon its opponent.—Tribune Farmer.

For the Children

To succeed these days you must have plenty of grit, courage, strength. How is it with the children? Are they thin, pale, delicate? Do not forget Ayer's Sarsaparilla. You know it makes the blood pure and rich, and builds up the general health in every way.

The children cannot possibly have good health unless the blood is pure and rich. Get a constitution by giving small laxative doses of Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Roosevelt as Preacher.

A good many think President Roosevelt is at his best as a preacher on religious or moral topics, rather than as a preacher in politics. It may be that the wish is father to the thought. At any rate, his best speeches—those most generally accepted as such—have been those made outside of politics, and the one delivered last week, before a large number of Methodist ministers, is conceded by all to be, one of his very best. He said in part:

"It is not true in this country that the poor have grown poorer; but it is true that in many sections, and particularly in our large cities, the rich have grown so very much richer as to widen the gulf between the man of wide large means and the man who makes each day's livelihood by that day's work; and those who with sincerity and efficiency and deep conviction band together for mutual help are those who can do most to bridge the gulf from becoming wider."

True religion, through church organizations, through philanthropic organizations, in all the field of kindred endeavor, can manifest itself as effectively in the crowded and complex life of today as in the pioneer yesterday; and the souls of men need the light now, and strive blindly toward it, as they needed it and strove toward it in the vanished past.

No nation in the world has more right than ours to look with proud confidence toward the future. Nowhere else has the experiment of democratic government of government by the people and for the people, of government based on the principle of treating each man on his innate worth as a man, been tried on so vast a scale as with us; and on the whole the experiment has been more successful than anywhere else.

Moreover, on the whole, I think it can be said that we have grown better and not worse; for if there is much evil, good is also abundant, and if wrong grows, so in even greater measure grows the stern sense of right before which wrong must eventually yield. It would be both unmanly and unwarranted to become faint-hearted or despairing about the nation's future. Clear-eyed and far-sighted men who are both brave and cool of head, while not for a moment refusing to see and acknowledge the many evils around us, must yet also feel a confident assurance that in the struggle we shall win and not lose, that the country that has just opened up before great triumph for our people.

But the surest way to achieve this triumph is, while never losing hope and belief in our progress, yet at the same time to refuse to blind ourselves to what is evil in the complex play of the many forces working through and with and against one another in the upbuilding of our social structure.

There is much that tends toward evil as well as much that tends toward good, and the true patriot is that man who, without losing faith in the good, does his best to combat the evil, to stamp it out where that is possible, and at least to minimize its results. Prosperity such as ours, necessary though it be as the material basis of national greatness, inevitably tends to undue exaltation of the merely material side of the national character, and we must largely rely on the efforts of such men and women as those I am addressing to build up the spiritual life without which the material life amounts to nothing.

As generation succeeds generation the problems change in their external shape; old needs vanish and new needs arise; but it remains as true as ever that in the last analysis national greatness, national happiness, national success, depend on the character of the individual man and individual woman.

We need good laws; we need to have these laws honestly and fearlessly administered; we need wealth; we need science and art and all the kindred activities that spring from the clever brain and the deft hand. But most of all we need the essential qualities that in their sum make up the good man and the good woman; most of all we need that fine general line of plain and unobtrusive character which makes any seeming material prosperity but a glittering sham."

When you think of indignation think of Kodol, for it is without doubt the only preparation that completely digests all classes of food, and that is what you need when you have indigestion or stomach trouble—something that will act promptly but thoroughly; something that will get at the trouble and do the very work itself for the stomach by digesting the food that you eat and that is Kodol. Taneytown Good Roads League.

(For the Record.) Your remarks in last week's RECORD about the committee appointed at a meeting of the Taneytown Good Roads League, may lead your readers to infer that the committee had been entirely idle. We admit that on the face of the "dense silence," as you put it, it has that appearance. The Secretary of the League has diligently sought for information whenever he thought that it could be obtained, but without any results so far. When I last saw him, he had received no answer from the Good Roads Commission, at Baltimore, and it is hoped that they will give us some definite answer.

A correspondent of the Baltimore American, in reporting the proceedings of the second meeting of the Good Roads Commission, said that Dr. Clarke, of the Geological Survey, would appoint the amount between the various counties according to mileage, and he further said that this is in keeping with the provisions of the act. According to this statement, each county will receive its just share of money.

Our Secretary was ordered to prepare a new road law, but so far has not been able to do so without ordering a copy from Annapolis at a cost of $5.00. It is desirable that the members of our committee, as well as others, should see the bill, and our secretary, and consult over the matter in order to facilitate the business in hand as much as possible. As soon as the bill comes out anything worth reporting it will do so.

E. O. GARNER, Chairman.

Relief from Rheumatic Pains. "I suffered with rheumatism for over two years," says Mr. Rolland, City patrolman, of Key West, Fla. "Sometimes it settled in my knees and I could not walk. It was in my feet and hands so I was incapacitated for days. One night when I was in severe pain and unable to get to bed, I went to the drug store here and came back with a bottle of Chamberlain's Pain Balm. I was rubbed with it and found the pain had nearly gone during the night. I kept on using it for a little more than two weeks and found that it drove the rheumatism away. I have not had any trouble from that disease for over three months."

A SONNET. I am a man of simple tastes, And of a modest mind; I love to live in peace and quietude, And to be left alone and undisturbed.

On "See-saw" farm I spent my time And my blooming acre; I do not rot in my garden, Or write for the newspapers.

I bought a horse some time ago, I think she is a wonder; And sometimes makes a blunder.

No matter if she will not work, I do not mind her; I do all her labor share, I thought her because she's pretty.

I'll give my farm full well I know, As through my park I travel; While listening to the rivers flow, Or writing for the newspapers.

I'll change the course of Hogan brook, As through my park it rushes; But how I wish to see it flow, But how I wish to see it flow.

My lane I'll soon macadamize, And leave the trees arch over; I'll hang my birds and butterflies Shall hover over the clover.

And now my friend, I'll say no more Of my dear little farm; But with happy thoughts I'll write you, Written by "Arian."

It Reached the Spot. Mr. E. Humphrey, who owns a large general store at Omega, O., and is president of the Iams County Telephone Co., as well as of the Home Telephone Co., of Pike County, O., says of Dr. King's New Discovery, "It saved my life once. Dr. King's New Discovery not only reaches the cough spot; it heals the sore spots and the weak spots in the throat, lungs and chest. Sold under guarantee at R. S. McKinney's drug store. 50c. and $1.00. Trial bottle free."

The trolley was waiting for a car to stop on the far side at the corner of Dolphin street. Passengers had been taken on the near side, and as the car crossed the street it slowed up. It was then that Senator Beaseman tried to get aboard.

As he grasped the iron stanchion on the side the motorman suddenly turned on the current and the car sped on. In the Senator tried to get a foothold. He was dragged some distance and then hurled to the ground with great force, falling on his left side. His face was badly bruised and the skin broken over his arm and body. He never lost consciousness, but was unable to arise.

THE JOKER WORSTED

"What was the matter with you the other day? You were going down the street in a haughty, you were without a hat, your face was dusty, and your nose was bleeding. Your collar was—"

"Stop!" he said. "It was cleverness brought me to the condition in which you saw me. I've been getting cleverer and cleverer of late."

"Do get on with the story." "I say that it was a dirty trick of Jennings to run away like that. And those silly looks about Theodore Hook and other practical jokers ought to be stopped. If I hadn't read that stuff about the stranger invite him to dinner and winning it, I could have kept quiet, but after that I kept on having clever ideas. Mind, my idea about the ticket inspector wasn't bad, though that wasn't what—"

"Tell me about the ticket inspector first." "Oh, that was at Baker street, I saw there was an inspector on the train, and, having a first class ticket, I got into a second class carriage. My idea was to tell him that I hadn't got a second class ticket, but was quite willing to change into the first, and he would say that I could not do that and would have to pay the excess, the difference between second and third. Then I should have replied that I wouldn't pay and that I would change. Then when he tried to stop me from getting on I should have shown him my first class ticket. See?"

"Can't you imagine what a silly god that inspector would have looked like? Well, he came to my carriage, and he said, 'Tickets, please.' I began, 'I haven't got a second class ticket, but—'

"Then he interrupted me. He said, 'Show your ticket, please.' I began, 'I am quite civil, as if he were being paid by a child that couldn't understand. Then I had to show it, and he didn't seem surprised or amused or pained. He said, 'This is your ticket, and other people in the carriage said a good deal, and I rather fancy they were smiling at me. These things don't work out the way you have planned them beforehand. That was what was wrong with the signaling in the park.'"

"That was what?" "That was what brought me to the condition in which you saw me yesterday. I had seen the soldiers signaling in the park. They fool about with flags and notebooks, and crowds come round and get frightfully interested. Well, my idea was to do some bogus signaling that didn't mean anything, and take in the crowd. I intended to write to the papers about it afterward, so that the crowd would know they'd been fooled and get mad with themselves. That's the last thing by the way, I ever do with Jennings. I only did it once, and he was a good deal amused and said he'd join in it. We put on his blue serge suits and yachting caps, so that we looked official, with a dash of the navy about it. I kept on using it for a little more than two weeks and found that it drove the rheumatism away. I have not had any trouble from that disease for over three months."

A Cat Tale.

The little old woman to town would go To buy her a Sunday gown, But a storm came up, and the wind did blow, And the rain came pouring down, And the little old woman, she, in a haste, In a terrible fright, her feet was she— In a terrible fright, her feet was she—

The little old woman was cross and cold, For the chimney smoked that day, And never a thing would be but sold In the most unamusing way. When the little old woman said, "Listen to me!" He answered her nothing but "Hiddle-dee!"

"Do get on with the story." "No, nothing but 'Hiddle-dee-dee!'" Then she whacked the puggy wag dog, she did, As heeped the mat he lay. For a puggy was he of spirit and pride, And howled in a dismal way— For puggy was he of spirit and pride, And a slight like that he couldn't abide— He couldn't, of course, abide.

Then Muffin, the kitten, said: "Deary me! What a state of affairs, this! I must purr my very best purr, I see. So everything goes amiss!" So Muffin the kitten, she purred and purred Till at last the little old woman she The little old woman she heard.

And she smiled a smile at the little old man, And back he smiled again, And they both agreed on a charming plan, For to walk in the wind and rain. Then, hand in hand, to the market town, They went to look for the Sunday gown— For the coveted Sunday gown.

Then the chimney drew, and the room grew hot, And the puggy wag dog and the cat, And the puggy wag dog, he felt forgot And snuggled up close on the mat. While Muffin the kitten, she purred and purred, And there never was trouble again, I've never again, I've never again.

Cautious. "Sir," she says excitedly, approaching the teller's window in the bank, "I am informed that a check I sent out the other day has been returned marked 'No funds.' What does that mean?"

"It simply means, madam," responds the courteous teller, "that we couldn't pay the check. There are no funds to pay it. You already have an overdraft of $90."

"And you can't pay the check?" "No, madam. As I say, you have an overdraft of $90. You must pay it. Well, young man, I'll say this for you. At least you are honest, and it is very kind of you to tell me of the condition of the bank. I will take my check and the $90 on deposit elsewhere."—Judge.
