ONE - ROOM SCHOOLHOUSE RETURNS

Parents, teachers, P-TA's and school boards across the nation are beginning to discover that relief from over-crowded school rooms and halftime sessions need not wait on a painful, slow-moving big-figure bond

It's done by mobile auxiliary classrooms that are set up in the school yard - without need of buying more real estate - connected with the sewer and power lines and ready for lessons in a matter of days. For quick delivery, these standardized 20 by 40 Add-a-Class rooms are moved in lengthwise half-sections over the roads on their own wheels from the nearest of 12 Divco-Wayne plants. Set on jacks or masonry foundations or left on their wheels (where a roving, nature-study classroom is wanted), they surround 35 pupils with ultra-modern facilities, furniture and equipment, including individual air conditioning and heating systems and boys' and girls' washrooms,

Chicago tried out two of these new-fangled classrooms last January. The kids loved them. So did the teachers. The school authorities and the taxpayers were equally lyrical. Now they have 150 of them in operation and David J. Heffernan, assistant superintendent of schools, hails them as "an immediate answer to our double-shift problem".

He notes, too, that since they are mobile, the Add-a-Class rooms will enable the city to keep up with the problem of shifting population ties, especially where a single new industrial plant can change the town map. Frequently, Divco-Wayne will sell four or five units to a community along with one set of wheels to facilitate changing location. New York plans to add 500 mobile classrooms and expects to relieve overcrowding in 70 of the city's schools by Septem-

The swift and widespread acceptance of this startling new idea should also be good news to those who have been saddened by the passing of the one-room schoolhouse in which America got its stant toward greatness. There's no longer any doubt about it. The one-room school is coming back in a big way. And we hope the old-timers won't mind that it is a lot fancier and has modern plumbing - including an electricallycooled drinking fountain - instead of the "out-back" and the water bucket.

Every individual dies alone. A post-war story told of a woman who journeyed to Europe to see her husband's grave.

As she stands before the rows of barren crosses, she asks the caretaker how her husband died. He answers-"Like an amateur, like all of us shall, because none of us ever gets any practice."

Yet, there is one who died ... and came back again ... and tells us of it. And His message is this-"He who believes in me, though he die, yet shall he live."

This one is Jesus Christ.

Small fry are staging their own fashion revolution this Spring and creating their own style story.

The three S's . . . smartness, simplicity and subtlety characterize this season's wardrobe for little girls.

Frills are kept at a minimum and the newest looking dresses have lowered waistlines underscored by pleats. Sleeves are often longer, straighter and un-pouffed. Many dresses are twopiece and the princess line and "A" line, slightly flaring from shoulder to hem, are proving extremely popular silhouettes.

Against Pressure Lesson for May 6, 1962

TT is so easy and respectable to be at least a conventional Christian in America, that we are shocked by the picture "Question 7," because it makes starkly plain many (for example) or between Dr. Foreman our country and the Roman Empire in the first century after Christ, we are tempted to overlook the fact that we too live in a society that is still very largely pagan. The Christians to whom the Letters in the New Testament were written were reminded that they had come out of darkness into God's light. The darkness had not vanished, it was out there like a vast dreadful night. Passions of the flesh

If we are not surrounded by pitch-blackness, it is because Christian ideas and ideals have permeated society as a whole. Much of America's "way of life" has Christian origins. Nevertheless, paganism may take the form of a grey cloud, a fog like the bright emptiness of an antarctic "white-out." Nothing can be plainly seen in it. This kind of pagan fog surrounds the Christian, often without his realizing it. We can take some expressions from I Peter 2, to illustrate. The writer speaks of "passions of the flesh that wage war against your souls." In America paganism, much as in the ancient and rotting Roman world, the suggestion is constantly made, in advertising, entertainment, literature and the ordinary "climate of opinion," that anything is all right for you if you really want to do it or to have it. Liquor is all right if you want it, the best reason for a divorce is just that you want one, young people don't have to wait until marriage before living with each other. These and other lies are circulated all around us, and it is hard to resist the pressure, hard especially for young people, who do not realize that the voice of "Everybody" may be just the voice of age-old paganism.

Among the Gentiles

The early-times Christians could not have been fooled by this. They knew that "Everybody" was mostly pagan. To look to popular opinion, in any Roman city, for Christian standards of living, would have seemed ridiculous. A Christian was expected to be different; they knew that much, or most of them did. Today "conformity" is very much the thing, but we do not ask, as we should, Conformity with what? with whom? Imitating people who do not even pretend to be Christian, is absurd; yet millions of church-members do it. Take two simple examples. There is a magazine about women's "hair-do's." It's what the magazine is all about, nothing else. Query: Is it a Christian use of time, brains and money to spend money making and buying a magazine devoted to hair-do's? Is there nothing more important to take a Christian woman's time?

Not just against one should suppose that the Christian life consists mostly in whacking pagans over the head with the Ten Commandments. Neither does it consist in merely not doing this and not doing that. Saint Peter did not lay out the Christian life as a series of Don't's "Live as free men . . . but live as servants of God." That's positive living, not negative. Honor all men, he says. Love the brotherhood. That's positive living in two directions. The Christian has dealings with non-Christians and also with Christians; and negative approaches are no help either way.

The best resistance against the constant pressure of paganism is not to keep shouting NO all the time. It is to find a way of living such that it will be the pagan, not the Christian, who discovers that his life is empty. The Christian can well get on without the pagan's "fun;" but the pagan may be turned around by observing the Christian's happiness
