GROWING OLD.

Softly, Oh, softly, the years have swept by thee,
Touching thee lightly with tenderest care;
Sorrow and death they have often brought nigh thee,
Yet they have left thee but beauty to wear.
Growing old gracefully,
Gracefully fair.

Far from the storms that are lashing the ocean,
Nearer each day to the pleasant home Home-light;
Far from the waves that are big with commotion,
Under full sail, and the harbor in sight;
Growing old cheerfully,
Cheerful and bright.

Past all the winds that were adverse and chilling,
Past all the currents that lured thee, unwilling,
Far from the course to the Land of the Blest;
Growing old peacefully,
Peaceful and blest.

Never a feeling of envy or sorrow
When the bright faces of children are seen;
Never a year from the young wouldst thou borrow—
Thou dost remember what lieth between:
Growing old willingly,
Thankful serene.

Rich in experience that angels might covet,
Rich in a faith that has grown with thy years,
Rich in a love that grew from and above it,
Soothing thy sorrows and hushing thy fears:
Growing old wealthily,
Loving and dear.

Hearts at the sound of thy coming are lightened,
Ready and willing thy hand to relieve;
Many a face at thy kind word has brightened—
"It is more blessed to give than receive."
Growing old happily,
Ceasing to grieve.

Eyes that grow dim to the earth and its glory
Have a sweet recompense youth cannot know;
Ears that grow dull to the world and its story
Drink in the songs that from Paradise flow:
Growing old graciously,
Purer than snow.

Mrs. Atkinson's Baby.

The Atkinsons have had a terrible time over their baby. Mr. Atkinson sent home a folding crib, with slats made in two pieces and hung down upon hinges. When they opened this crib and put the mattress in it, Mr. Atkinson omitted to fix securely the catches that held the slats. Mr. and Mrs. Atkinson went to bed early that night, and about eleven o'clock, while they were asleep, the baby got awake and began to kick vigorously. The result was that the slats slowly descended and deposited the baby upon the floor. The baby, being particularly wide awake, crawled out into the room, and seeing a light in the entry, went through the door just as Mr. Atkinson's aunt, Miss Boggs, was coming up the stairs to bed. She picked the baby up, and finding that his father and mother were asleep, she carried it to her room in the third story, and determined to take care of it through the night.

About an hour later Mrs. Atkinson awoke, and thought she would glance over at the crib to see how the baby was getting along. No sooner had she done so than she jumped from the bed in alarm. The baby was not there! The bottom seemed to have fallen out of the whole contrivance. Her first thought was that the baby was lying under the mattress smothered to death. She pulled the mattress aside, but there was no sign of the baby.

Then with wild alarm, she shook Mr. Atkinson, and told him to get up. Atkinson growled out in a sleepy tone—
"The paragon is in the closet; go and get it yourself."

"Alonso!" shrieked Mrs. Atkinson, "you don't understand—the baby is gone—stolen—kidnaped—murdered, maybe! Oh, what shall I do?"

"Now, be calm, Julia," said Atkinson, getting out of bed; "don't get hysterical. The child, most likely, is under the bed."

"No it isn't; it's not there!" exclaimed Mrs. Atkinson, upon her hands and knees.
"Possibly," said Alonso, beginning to feel uneasy, "he has crept into the closet, let us look."

"This is horrible," said Mrs. Atkinson, clasping her hands.
"Do you think," asked Mr. Atkinson, "that he could have crawled in to the bureau drawer and pulled it in after him?"

"Certainly not," said Mrs. Atkinson. "You know he couldn't."
"I think I hear him now. He has fallen out of the window," said Mrs. Atkinson, as a faint wail floated up from the back yard.
"No; it's only Mrs. Magruder's cat yawling on the fence," replied Atkinson, as he closed the sash.
"Have you looked in the bath tub in the next room? Perhaps he has gone to take a bath."

"Drowned! I know it! I am sure of it!" yelled Mrs. Atkinson, rushing into the bath room.
"He's not here," said Atkinson; "could he have gone down stairs and fallen into the sugar bucket in the pantry?"

"We must search the whole house for him," said Mrs. Atkinson.
So they began to hunt. They looked everywhere. In the clothes hamper, in the kitchen cupboard, in the pantry, in the parlor, and even in the cellar, but without avail.

"He couldn't have gone up stairs, because he couldn't climb the steps," said Mrs. Atkinson.
"No; he must have been stolen. He has been stolen by burglars. I shall never see him again—never!"

"Don't give way, Julia. Be calm. I will go at once for the police."

Mr. Atkinson dressed himself hurriedly, and dashed down stairs and out into the front street. He met a policeman almost at the door, and in frantic accents laid the case before him. The policeman sounded an alarm, and soon had six other policemen at hand. They entered the house and proceeded to examine the fastenings. Everything was right, and one of the policemen said:

"In my opinion the burglar is in the house yet."

"We'll go for him," said another. So drawing revolvers, they proceeded search the building. Presently Mr. Atkinson heard the report of a pistol in the kitchen. He rushed down.

"I think I've killed him," said policeman Jones. "Bring the light, quick."

"And killed the baby, too," shrieked Mrs. Atkinson.
"By George, I forgot the baby," said the officer.

Then the light came and they found that policeman Jones had shot his dog, which had followed him into the house. Then policeman Smith's pistol went off accidentally, and the bullet hit the kitchen clock, which at once struck nine hundred and eighty-one and the confusion and racket so unstrung Mrs. Atkinson's nerves that she went into hysterics and emitted successive yells of a terrific character. This brought Miss Boggs down from the third story in great alarm.

"What on earth is the matter?" she called.
"Matter! said Atkinson, "don't you know that burglars have broken into the house and stolen the baby? Why, we've been having the awfulest time you ever heard of for the last two hours."

"Why, I've got the baby up stairs with me," said Miss Boggs. "I've had him all night."
"You have?" exclaimed the party in a breath.
"Certainly."
"Do you mean to tell me," said Atkinson, with supernatural calmness, "that baby was quietly sleeping in your room all this time?"

"Yes."
Atkinson simply looked at her. He felt language was unequal to expression of his feelings. Mrs. Atkinson flew up stairs, two steps at a time. The policemen laughed and filed out, Jones pulling his dog by the tail. Atkinson went to bed with raging anger in his soul; and the next morning he put a sheet-iron bottom, fastened with rivets, under that folding crib.

How a Newspaper Pays.
How a newspaper pays can be at once seen, if you will give the matter a little thought. Suppose you take a paper that is only issued once a week; you get fifty two copies a year, each containing the general current news of the times.

The educational advantages to the family, derived from only a weekly paper, are cheaper and more impressive, useful and thorough, after the children have learned to read, than the teaching in the ordinary schools.

It is a notable fact, and many eminent examples might be referred to, that families that are never without newspapers become more intelligent and more influential than those who go through the ordinary scholastic studies without the habit of reading newspapers. After reading, writing and arithmetic are taught to a child, if a choice is to be made between school books and newspapers, it would be much more beneficial to the child to give it two or three well-selected newspapers to read than to confine it to the text books of the school.

Newspaper education is polytechnic and universal, and is indispensable to a proper qualification for true American citizenship.

A good newspaper saves money in all business matters. If you want to sell or buy anything you will likely see the current price in a newspaper, and you will also see what you might want advertised; you don't have to take hearsay, and thus suffer from mistakes and delays; you just turn to your paper, and know all you wish to find out. You will often save the subscription cost of your paper by one single order for ten or twenty dollars' worth of goods. You will often find chances for good bargains advertised that cannot be found in any other way.

A few months since, a merchant in Pensacola advertised to sell a certain staple article of provisions very cheap; it was quite a large lot of it, and the consignee ordered it sold at once. I sent an order, and when several of my neighbors in the country saw what I had gotten, and I told them the price, they said: "If you had told us, we would also have sent orders." I said: "If you will take the papers you will always know in time, without waiting a second hand talk." I saved the price of my newspaper subscription in Pensacola for one year by that single transaction. Indeed, it would be impossible to enumerate the amount of pecuniary benefits received from newspaper advertisements alone, to say nothing of the general information of vital importance contained in them.

Journalism in all its departments is a business that requires more self-sacrifice, more indefatigable labor, more patience, endurance and nice discrimination than any other profession. There is no class of men that furnish so cheaply the indispensable intelligence, wisdom and virtue, for the support of the government and welfare of the people, as the well-trained and efficient journalist. Every good citizen should take and pay for a good paper, he owes it to his country, his family and his own self-respect and interest.

1816 and 1882.
In 1816 one bushel of corn would buy one pound of nails. In 1882 one bushel of corn would buy fifteen pounds of nails.

In 1816 it took from twenty to twenty dozen of eggs to buy one bushel of salt. In 1882 two dozen of eggs would do the same thing.

In 1816 it required sixty-four bushels of barley to buy one yard of broad-cloth. In 1882 five bushels of barley would do the business.

In 1816 it required one bushel of wheat to purchase one yard of calico. In 1882 one bushel of wheat would buy twenty yards of a better article.

In 1816 a pair of woolen blankets cost as much as a cow. In 1882 a cow would buy from six to twenty pairs of blankets superior in every way.

FATHER IS GETTING WELL.—My daughters say, "How much better father is since he used Hop Bitters. He is getting well after his long suffering from a disease declared incurable, and we are so glad that he used your Bitters.—A lady of Rochester, N. Y.

POWER, in its quality and degree, is the measure of manhood; scholarship, save by accident, is never the measure of a man's power.

Bears and Hornets.
Hornets build their nests high up in the branches of trees, or fasten them to rocks out of the reach of bats. But as cunning as these insects are, they are no match for the bear. A bear discovers a hornet's nest far out on a limb too small to bear his weight, or high up on the breast of a rock. If the former, he climbs the tree, breaks off the longest branch he can get, and holding it in his fore paws thrashes the nest until it drops to the ground. Sometimes he dances or stamps on the limb until the nest is shaken off. If the nest is on a rock, the bear goes up to the top of the ledge above it. Then he gathers large stones and pieces of wood and rolls them down the side of the rock until one strikes the nest and sends it tumbling to the ground below. The hornets seem to know what has caused their ruin, and not one of them deserts the fallen nest, but all seem to await the appearance of the bear, when they attack him at once.

"A hornet sting," say the old hunters, "is equal to a blow from a sledge hammer every time, and one hornet'll knock a bull down. But their bite won't raise a lump as big as a buck shot on a bar, and the snaggy creature seems to think it's a heap of fun. He'll stand up on his hind legs and square off with his fore paws at the hornets just as if he was boxin' with somebody, only he's darn careful to keep his eyes shut. Then he'll lay down and roll all over the nest, as if he wanted to show the hornets he didn't care no more for 'em than if they was gnats. Once I see a big she bear, which had knocked a hornet's nest as big as a peck measure off'n a tree take it under her arm and walk off with it as cool as if it was one o' her cubs."—New York Times.

"Witness my hand and seal."
A thousand years ago the masses, the nobility, the poor and the rich, mysteries of the alphabet and the pen, were wholly unacquainted with the few men, known as clerks, who generally belonged to the priesthood, monopolized them as a special class of artists. They taught their business only to their seminaries, apprentices; and beyond themselves and few pupils, no one knew how to read and write, nor was it expected of the generality, any more than it would be now a days that everybody should be a shoemaker or a lawyer. Kings did not even know how to sign their names, so that when they wanted to subscribe to a written contract, law or treaty, which some clerks had drawn up for them, they would smear their right hand with ink, and slap it down upon the parchment, saying, "witness my hand." At a later date, some genius devised the substitute of a seal, which was impressed instead of the hand, but often beside the hand. Every gentleman had a seal with a peculiar device thereon. Hence the sacramental words now in use, "witness my hand and seal," affixed to modern deeds, serves as the purpose of reminding us of the Middle Ages.

A Boy's Christmas Composition.
"Christmas comes every year and it is the best day in the year except the Fourth of July which is a better day to fire off guns and pistols. Hooky fired off an old gun one fourth of July and it kicked him agin a hid-drent and an awful bunch growed on his head and he didn't know much for two hours Christmas is the best time to get presents my sister Lucy hung up her stockin' and I put a mud turtle in it and she was fearful mad you bet if my aunt Rachel should hang up her stockin' it would hold a dump cat full of things William Bradshaw eat so much Candy and puddin one Christmas that his folks had to put him in a grave after he died I should like to see old Dudley the truant officer in a grave and so would all the boys I should like to have it Christmas and fourth of July all the time."

He Saved His Bottle.
A gentleman going along the street with a bottle of liquor, which he had purchased for medical purposes, slipped and fell. He did not put out his hand to save himself but held the bottle out of harm's way and stood the brunt of the fall. His friends, on learning of the event asked him why he did not let the bottle go and save himself. Said he: "If it had fallen and broken the folks who picked me up would have smelt the whiskey, and you can judge what they would have thought. I could stand the blow on my head better than on my reputation."

The Meaning of "Bonanza."
It is a Spanish nautical term, meaning primarily a fair and hence a favoring wind, but is employed by the Mexican miners to designate the period when they are in good ore, or in bonanza, in contradistinction to in borasca, or poor ground. It has been borrowed by our miners and given a more comprehensive significance, and, like many other words taken from foreign languages, has come into popular use to designate a period when they are in good ore, or in bonanza, in contradistinction to in borasca, or poor ground. NOT one farmer in ten appreciates the value of ground fed over the corn in the ear. The fact has been tested thousands of times that one bushel of meal will put as much fat on an animal as five pecks of corn fed in the grain. The saving of one-fifth of the corn a farmer has grown will pay for a mill in one winter, and yet have the mill in good condition to repeat this process for a dozen years to come.—Farm, Herd and Home.

MORE poultry and less pork. Why? 1. Chickens eggs are more wholesome food than hog meat. 2. A bushel of corn fed to fowls will produce a greater weight of food than the same amount of corn fed to hogs. 3. And taking into account the amount of nourishment in the two products, and the comparative price, pork is almost three times as costly a food as poultry and eggs.—Farmer's Review.
