BURIAL AT SEA.

From his room to the deck they brought him dressed. For his funeral rites, at his own request, with his boots and gloves and garments on, and nought but the breathing spirit gone; For he wished that a child might come and lay An unstarred hand upon his clay. Then they wrapped his corse in the tarry sheet, To the dead as Araby's spices sweet, And prepared him to seek the depths below, Where waves never beat, nor tempests blow. No steeda with their nodding plumes were there, No sabled hearse and no coffin bier, To bear with pomp and parade away The dead to sleep with his kindred clay; But the little group, a silent few, His comrades mixed with the hardy crew, Stood thoughtful around till a prayer was said, O'er the corse of the dead, unconscious dead. Then they bore his remains to the vessel's side, And committed them safe to the dark blue tide. One sudden plunge, and the scene is o'er; The sea rolled on as it rolled before. In that classical sea whose azure vics With the green of its shores and the blue of its skies, In some pearly cave, in some coral cell, Oh! the dead shall sleep as sweetly and well, As if shrined in the pomp of Parian tombs, Where the East and the South breathe their rich perfumes. Nor forgotten shall be the humblest one, Though he sleep in the watery waste alone, When the trump of the angel sounds with dread, And the sea, with the earth, gives up its dead. —New York Observer.

BEYOND.

Never a word is said,
But it trembles in the air,
And the truest voice has sped,
To vibrate every where;
And perhaps far off in eternal years
The echo may ring upon our ears.
Never are kind acts done
To wipe the weeping eyes,
But, like flashes of the sun,
They signal to the skies;
And up above the angels read
How we have helped the sorer need.
Never a day is given,
But it tones the after years,
And it carries up to heaven
Its sunshine or its tears;
While the to-morrows stand and wait,
The silent mutes by the outer gate.
There is no end to the sky,
And the stars are everywhere,
And time is eternity,
And the here is over there;
For the common deeds of the common day
Are ringing bells in the far-away. —Henry Burton.

THE FOUR HENRYS.

From the French of Frederick Soule.
An old woman who passed in the country for a sorceress, once dwelt in a humble cabin in the forest of St. Germain. One evening, while the rain fell in torrents, she heard a knocking at her door, which, hastily opening, she saw a cavalier who craved hospitality. Putting his horse in a shed close at hand, she bade him enter, and by the light of a smoky lamp observed that her guest was a young gentleman; his person be spoke youth, his dress was that of a man of rank. The old woman stirred the fire into a ruddy blaze, and asked the youth if he would have something to eat. A stomach of 16 years is like a heart of the same age, eager and easily pleased. The young man signified his assent, and a bit of cheese and half a loaf of bread were brought from the cupboard, all the provisions the old woman had. "I have not much," she said to him. "This is all I have to offer a chance visitor after paying taxes and the excise on salt, without taking into account the neighboring country people, who call me sorceress and disciple of the devil, in order that they may steal with an easy conscience the products of my small garden." "By my soul!" said the stranger, "if I were King of France, I would suppress these imposts, and thus benefit the people."

An Engaged Seat.

It was a day when everybody was tired and anxious to sit down that a large man, carrying a gripsack, boarded an Eastern railroad train, and, after walking through several crowded cars, finally found the one vacant seat, and, seating himself, placed his bag on the cushion at his side. Just as the train was about to start, another man entered and made the same journey in search of a seat. As he stopped inquiringly before the large man, the latter said: "This seat is engaged, sir; a man just stepped out, but will return in a moment; he left his baggage here as a claim to the seat." "Well," said the second traveler, frankly, "I'm pretty tired, and if you don't object I'll just sit down here and hold his bag for him till he returns," and, without ceremony, he proceeded to do. Then the large man, who was bound for Lynn, earnestly prayed within the inmost chambers of his little heart that his companion might get off at Somerville, or Everett, or Chelsea, anywhere but Lynn or a station beyond. And the tired man thanked his stars for even a moment's rest, expecting every second to be ousted by the owner of the gripsack. The train moved out from the station. In vain did the large man try to read the stranger's ticket to see what his destination was. Somerville was reached, but the stranger sat quietly in his place, and the large man grew nervous. The train stopped at Everett, and still the stranger gazed peacefully ahead, never budging, and the large man began to perspire. Then came Chelsea, but the stranger still held fast to the bag, and never offered to stir. The agony of the large man was simply frightful, but he saw that he could do nothing but grin and bear it, and get out of the fix as best he could. But the stranger had by this time fully grasped the situation, though thankful for his seat, determined to punish the unaccommodating pig for his selfish deception. So, when Lynn was reached, the large man put forth his hand for his bag, but the stranger drew back the same with an expression of surprise, saying: "I beg your pardon, sir, but this is not your baggage." "But it isn't yours," stammered the owner blushing.

How the Dead Followed the King.

In 1871, writes a correspondent, I was at Naples when an Italian corvette, the Anitrate Caracciolo, was launched at Castellamare. The vessel was christened by the Countess Teresa Caracciolo, the daughter of the chief of the elder branch of the Caraccioli. I was staying at Naples as the guest of the young lady's father, and I heard from him a very remarkable story connected with the death of the unfortunate officer in honor of whose memory, the vessel was named. The circumstances which led to the execution of Prince Francesco Caracciolo in 1799 are well known. I shall merely state therefore, that he was condemned by a court marshal composed of Sicilian officers to be languished at the yard-arm of the flag ship for bearing arms against his lawful sovereign. When the official communication of the finding and the sentence of the court was brought to the prince, he was explaining the names and uses of the various parts of the rigging to some young Neapolitan nobleman who happened to be on board the ship. A glance at the letter was sufficient to show him its contents. He showed no signs of emotion, but requested the officer who brought the dispatch to wait for a few minutes while he finished his explanations. This being done he returned to his cabin, and after a vain attempt to get the sentence changed to a more honorable manner of death he met it with great fortitude. Some days after the event the king, who had been for an afternoon's cruise on a Sicilian ship of war outside the bay, was returning to Naples in the evening. It was a moonlight night, and the sea was perfectly calm. There was, indeed, so little wind that it was difficult to steer the vessel. The king was sitting in the balcony of the stern cabin, watching the sea, when suddenly he became aware that something was following the ship. As the object came near it was easy to distinguish that it was the body of a man in an upright attitude, as if treading water; and very soon the king was able to recognize the features of Admiral Caracciolo. His eyes were opened and seemed to be fixed on the king, and except for its ghastly pallor the face was unchanged. The explanation was simple. After being submerged for some days the body had become so buoyant that the weights attached to the feet were not sufficiently heavy to keep it under water; but they retained it in an upright position, and it was drawn along by the current created by the movement of the ship. It is easy to imagine the horror of Ferdinand at what he believed to be an apparition from another world. When at length it was explained to him what had happened, he gave orders that a boat be lowered and that the corpse be brought on board and taken to Naples for Christian burial. But the superstitious Sicilian dared not obey the royal command, and the ship, drawing in its wake the upright body of the admiral, sailed slowly into the Bay of Naples. Here a boat's crew was obtained from an English man-of-war, who took the admiral's body ashore, where it was deposited in his own palace, and at length received the last rites of the church. A different version of the story is given in Southey's "Life of Nelson." I have related the traditional account preserved in the family of the admiral exactly as it was told me by its chief.

A PERPETUAL SKATING POND.

There is a lake on the Saw Tooth Mountains, California, that probably has no equal in the United States. It is about sixty-five miles from Bonanza, and at an altitude of nearly twelve thousand feet. The lake lies in a basin among the sharp crags of the snowy Saw Tooth, in a sheet of perpetual ice. It was discovered by a party of prospectors, and named the Ice Lake. The sun seems to have no effect upon it except in places adjoining the shores. It is simply a great bowl in the hard mountain rock brimful of solid ice, upon which the rays of the sun descend with no power to penetrate.

THE TERROR OF THE SOUTH.

JASPER, FLA.—Mr. Boardman W. Wilson, traveling for A. G. Alford & Co., dealers in Firearms and Cutlery, Baltimore, was prostrated here, with the "break-bone fever;" he asserts that in his own, as well as in the case of others, the only thing found to relieve this painful malady was St. Jacobs Oil. This wonderful pain-cure has the endorsement of such men as Ex Postmaster General James, Senator Daniel W. Voorhees, and an army of others.

THE COFFIN WAS READY.

The office of the Milwaukee Journal is next door to an undertaker's establishment, and there is usually a coffin box or two on the sidewalk waiting to be used. It is related that a man came to the Journal office to have a fuss with the editor over something that had been said in the paper, and he was pretty mad when he accented the general business manager, Mike Kraus. He spoke of desiring blood, and desire to gallop all over the manly frame of the editor, and offered to chew a few reporters. Mr. Kraus stood in the door, and pointed to the box on the sidewalk he said: "How would that fit you? It may be a little short, but we have larger ones," and calling the undertaker, who was on the sidewalk, Kraus said: "Measure this man, please. The undertaker took out a tape line and came forward, and the man with the hot box, who was being measured for a cold box, began to feel small. Just then the editor, Neiman, came down stairs, and Mike said: "See here, Neiman, here is a man in a hurry to whip somebody, and I don't know but you will have to let me have that coffin that was made for the South Side man, who was going to come in this afternoon to whip us. He can wait." Neiman looked at the man who wanted to fight and said to Mike: "No, you must make one for this man. The South Side man will be here at 4 o'clock and I make it a point never to disappoint a man. Say," says Neiman, turning to the man who came for a fight, "couldn't you get along without a fight till Saturday? We are a little crowded now," and Neiman rested his cane on the coffin box. The man said, come to think of it, he didn't want to fight, anyhow; but he did think that article in the paper was confounded mean. "Of course," says Neiman. "Of course," says Kraus, and the mad man walked down the street, the undertaker went in his store, and the editor and manager winked at each other and went to work as though nothing had happened. —Peck's Sun.

Newspaper Honor.

Said Col. G. A. Pierce in an address to Fort Wayne, Ind.: A short time ago a discussion arose in Chicago as to the relative duty of lawyers and newspaper men, and the following query occurred to me; What would be said of any respectable journalist that would take a fee for trying to make black appear white—that should undertake the defense of a notorious murderer, for instance? Not secretly, and while pretending to be impartial—that, of course, would be intensely hypocritical and dishonorable—but openly and notoriously? The accused party would say: "I want a defender, I will hire lawyer Such-a-one and newspaper So-and-so." What an outcry would go up, and yet what is it that makes such an act highly dishonorable on the part of an attorney? Is newspaper honor held too high, or is legal honor too low? I believe the time will come when a lawyer's duties will be confined to seeing that murderers and highway robbers have a fair and just trial according to law, and when no amount of money will be allowed to convert them into paid eulogists of dangerous men.

THE POLITICAL GAME.

The political outlook, just before the nominating conventions are to meet, is highly interesting.

The number of patriotic citizens who stand ready to serve the dear people, in the several positions for which they regard themselves eminently fitted, is almost unprecedented.

Primary meetings now, are invested with an importance, nearly equal to that of general elections.

The factions of the parties, and the individual rivalry of would-be candidates, present scenes as harmonious as Kilkenny cats.

OUR PHILADELPHIA LETTER.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 8, 1883. Extensive fires seem to be epidemic in this city at present, and the high winds favour their development.

The warfare in this city between Gas and Electricity has not as yet resulted in victory for either, but the fact, that the latter is steadily gaining ground, notwithstanding the serious objections to its use, cannot be denied.

If one were searching for solid and substantial evidence of enterprise and skill, the establishment belonging to the firm of Trymby, Rahn & Co., on Market street above 12th would fill the highest expectation.

Although the stock market has improved considerably it is still in a very depressed condition, and the probability is that it will continue so.

The shape was generally like a jockey's cap. Seen from a distance the figures reminded one of a scene on the stage in a spectacular play. Yet, at the same time, these bodies looked very attractive in the sun-light.

Coaching to Saratoga will be one of the features of fashionable autumn life. The old stage road to Albany will be worked again, and it is certainly one of the most picturesque drives to be had in the country.
