POEM.

Among the beautiful pictures
That hang on memory's wall
Is one of a dim old forest,
That seemeth the best of all;
Not for its gnarled oaks olden,
Dark with the mistletoe;
Not for the violets golden
That sprinkle the vale below;
Not for the milk-white lilies
That lean from the fragrant hedge;
Not for the vines on the upland,
Where the bright red berries rest;
For the pink, nor the pale, sweet cowslips,
It seems to me the best.

I once had a little brother
With eyes that were dark and deep—
In the lap of that olden forest
He lieth in peace asleep.
Light as the down of the thistle,
Free as the winds that blow,
We roved there the beautiful summers—
The summers of long ago.
But his feet on the hills grew weary,
And one of the autumn days
I made for my little brother
A bed of the yellow leaves.
Sweetly his pale arms folded
My neck in sweet embrace
As the light of immortal beauty
Silently covered his face;
And when the arrows of sunset
Lodged in the tree-tops bright,
He fell, in his saint-like beauty,
Asleep by the gates of light.
Therefore, of all the pictures,
That hang on memory's wall,
The one of the dim old forest
Seemeth the best of all.

—Alice Carey.

NEVER ALL DARK.

"It is all dark," said baby Nell,
"The sun has gone away."
"But God will send the stars to us,"
Said little sister May.
"He never lets it be all dark,"
"Cept for a little while;"
And then I guess he hides his face,
So we can't see him smile."

Dear child, what comfort comes to me
Through these few simple words;
Sweeter they are than melody
Of early singing birds.
"Never all dark," I softly say,
"But for a little while,
And then, somewhere behind the clouds
There gleams a hidden smile."

Entertaining a Clergyman.

Old Mr. Bittleston had a charming house and grounds on the Thames, near Marlow, including a pretty little eyot. One sultry afternoon he was enjoying a placid daze in a shady arbor near the water's edge, when he was aroused by the splashing of oars, and beheld a young man in a boating costume in the act of alighting upon the lawn. Mr. Bittleston sprang to his feet in an instant, prepared to lose his temper on small provocation. He knew the stranger's errand, for he received half a dozen promiscuous visits of this kind in the course of the day. When the young man drew near he proved to be rather a mild looking youth who wore spectacles and seemed diffident and embarrassed.

"Have I the pleasure of speaking to the proprietor of this island?" he inquired, politely lifting his straw hat from his head.

"Yes, the island belongs to me," said Bittleston, shortly.

"Will you permit me to hand you my card?" said the stranger, producing a card case.

Mr. Bittleston felt somewhat mollified by the young man's polite and respectful demeanor, and he took the card. It bore the following inscription: "The Rev. Mark Avery, 14 Hoyer street, St. George's in the East." "Oh! you are a clergyman," remarked the old gentleman, who had a good old fashioned regard for "the cloth."

"Yes, in spite of my dress, which is decidedly anti-clerical," said the young man, smiling. "I suppose you can guess why I trouble you. We are on our way to Oxford, and I wished your permission to camp out on your island for the night with my friends."

"I'm sorry to say that I've been obliged to put a stop to that," said Mr. Bittleston; "I'm afraid I cannot make an exception in your case."

school. They have both earned a holiday, and I wish to do all I can to promote their enjoyment."

"You will find plenty of accommodation at Marlow, at all events," said Mr. Bittleston.

"Undoubtedly; but the fact is, we cannot afford to pay for it," returned the Rev. Mark, candidly; "my companions have no money, and my own purse is, unfortunately, very narrow."

"Oh! then you are paymaster?" said the old gentleman, whose kind heart was touched by the parson's artless confession.

"Yes, it is my treat, in fact," answered the Rev. Mark, smiling; "of course, if you object to our landing on your island, we must try elsewhere. But it is a convenient spot, and I hoped—"

"Well, for this once I will make an exception," interrupted Mr. Bittleston, unable to resist any longer. "I must ask you to fix your camp on the most remote corner of the island, and not damage the underwood. When you take your morning bath, please bear in mind that the windows of my house overlook the island."

"We will do nothing that can possibly offend you," returned the young man, offering his hand to Mr. Bittleston, who grasped it in a friendly fashion; "I am exceedingly obliged to you for your kindness."

"Don't mention it," said the old gentleman, walking by the parson's side across the lawn; "any little thing we can do for you, or supply you with, do not hesitate to ask. Have you any fresh milk? I know that it is a commodity which is generally in request."

"Thank you. We won't trespass further on your kindness," returned the Rev. Mark, heartily; "we have our provisions."

"Would you and your companions come and dine at the house with me to night?" inquired Mr. Bittleston, who was a hospitable old gentleman, and had taken rather a fancy to the young man; "my wife and daughters would be pleased."

"You are extremely kind, but the fact is my companions, though excellent young men, are not quite refined enough to sit at your table," said the Rev. Mark, cautiously lowering his voice, so that the occupants of the boat should not hear him; "for myself," he added aloud, "I should only be too pleased, but, unfortunately, I have no clothes but these I stand up in. We are only away for the inside of a week, and must be back on Sunday."

"Never mind your clothes," said the old Mr. Bittleston; "we shall be quite alone to night, and my wife and daughters are accustomed to see guests in boating costume."

"In this case, I shall be only too happy," said the Rev. Mark, as he stepped into the boat; "what time do you dine?"

"At 7 you will hear the gong," answered Mr. Bittleston from the bank as he glanced at the young parson's companions. The latter were very unprepossessing young men, and would evidently have been out of place in a gentleman's dining room. On seeing them, it occurred to Mr. Bittleston that he had been a little too precipitate with his invitations, and it was partly owing to this reflection that he took down the clergy list on reaching the house, and searched for the Rev. Mark Avery's name. He found it duly recorded, and learnt that the young man was curate of St. Blaise's Church, one of the largest and poorest parishes in the east of London.

The parson made his appearance at dinner, and created a favorable impression. He won Mr. Bittleston's heart by taking an immense interest in the house and grounds, and insisted on being shown over them. His tales of the suffering poor of his parish, and his modest references to his own arduous life, elicited the sympathy of the ladies, and, in fact, the evening passed off so well that on his rising to leave old Mr. Bittleston pressed him to remain a day in the neighborhood so as to visit the church and other objects of local interest.

"No, thank you. I'm afraid we must not linger," he said, shaking his host warmly by the hand; "we have our work cut out to row to Oxford and back to town by Saturday."

"Well, at all events, come and have breakfast with us to-morrow," said the old gentleman.

"We must be several stages on our road before your breakfast hour," he said, as he saluted the ladies in turn; "bye-the-bye," added he, addressing Mr. Bittleston, "there is one small favor I venture to ask of you. May I leave a portmanteau here, and fetch it on our way down on Friday or Saturday?"

"Certainly," said the old gentleman promptly.

"I find we have a good many things we shall need, now that the weather has set in fair," he explained; "there are always some cooking utensils we can dispense with. It is desirable to lighten our boat, and by leaving the portmanteau here I shall have an excuse for calling on our way back."

"We shall be delighted to see you," said Mr. Bittleston; "and if you leave the portmanteau at the house to-morrow morning it shall be taken care of."

The Rev. Mark then took his departure. Next morning the party had left when the family came down to breakfast, but the parson had entrusted the portmanteau to one of the servants. The following day wrote a few lines to Mr. Bittleston from Reading, sending a piece of music which he had recommended one of the young ladies to get, and begging that she would accept it, as he happened to come across it in a music shop in the town. The little act of politeness excited less attention than it might otherwise have done, because the letter arrived while everyone was in a great state of excitement. The discovery had just been made that a large quantity of jewelry, plate and other articles had been abstracted from a safe in Mr. Bittleston's dressing-room. The loss was so considerable that Mr. Bittleston immediately telegraphed to Scotland Yard, not caring to entrust the matter to the local police.

In response a detective appeared upon the scene and made a careful inspection of the premises. The safe was uninjured, and the lock had not been tampered with.

"It's a puzzle, and that's a fact," said Hardiss, when his inquiries had been satisfied; "I've come to the conclusion it has been done by some one in the house. No stranger has been in the neighborhood, and it's downright impossible that any one could have got away with the swag without being noticed in a little place like this."

"Where are the things, then?" inquired Mr. Bittleston, testily.

"Not very far off, I can't help thinking," answered the inspector; "with your permission, I will search the premises thoroughly, including the garrets and cellars."

While the inspector was speaking, Mr. Bittleston's youngest daughter, a girl of 14, came running across the lawn. "Papa," she cried, "isn't that Mr. Avery? He is rowing stroke in that boat, and he has evidently forgotten the house, but his portmanteau is here."

"By Jove! I believe it is Avery and his friends," cried Mr. Bittleston, as the boat swept quickly past the lawn in midstream at the best place the oarsmen could command. "Hi, you! Confound him! why can't he look round? Boat ahoy!"

But though Mr. Bittleston had good lungs, and though a broad sheet of water is an excellent conductor of sound, his voice failed to arrest the attention of the occupants of the boat, who were straining every nerve to reach the next lock. While Mr. Bittleston was still shouting they began to disappear from view round the top reach, without once turning their heads.

"Silly fellow!" exclaimed Mr. Bittleston in a state of excitement, as he hastily descended from the garden seat on which he had been standing; "he must be deaf, and blind, too! Here, Ada! quick! Tell Robert to run to my room and bring Mr. Avery's portmanteau. Lend me a hand, inspector. If we look sharp, we shall be able to catch him at the lock."

He led the way to the boat-house as he spoke, followed by the inspector. But by the time the boat was ready, and the footman had appeared, with the portmanteau, several minutes had elapsed. "Here, Robert! put the portmanteau in the bow and jump in," said Mr. Bittleston impatiently. "I want you to row me to the lock as quick as you can."

"Let me lend a hand," said Inspector Hardiss, divesting himself of his coat in a very business-like manner.

The party started down stream in pursuit, Mr. Bittleston steering and frequently bobbing up and down in his excitement to try and catch sight of the boat ahead. In spite of their efforts, however, they found the lock gates closed against them and the parson's boat out of sight. What was more tantalizing, the lock had been emptied by the time they got there, and was awaiting a boat which was coming up stream. An abrupt turn in the river at a short distance already hid from view the boat just relieved from the lock.

"What a nuisance!" exclaimed Mr. Bittleston, mopping his forehead as he stood on the banks of the lock, having taken in at a glance the position of affairs. "Boat with three gentlemen just gone through, Smithers?" he added to the lock keeper.

"Yes, sir, but they are coming back. They pulled their boat round by the back water and went ashore, after asking me to keep an eye on it till they returned," said the man.

"Oh! that is all right," said Mr. Bittleston in a tone of satisfaction; "we will get back, inspector, to attend to business. Hi! Bring up that portmanteau, Robert. Smithers, will you take charge of it and give it to the Rev. Mr. Avery, who is one of those three gentlemen, with my compliments?"

"I think you mentioned my name, sir," said a voice from the lock, proceeding from one of the occupants of a boat which had just entered.

"Not that I am aware of," said Mr. Bittleston, politely; "the gentleman I referred to was the Rev. Mark Avery."

"I am the Rev. Mark Avery," said the stranger promptly.

"It's a puzzle, and that's a fact," said Hardiss, when his inquiries had been satisfied; "I've come to the conclusion it has been done by some one in the house. The Telephone.

We had an agreeable call on Tuesday, from Messrs. Edgar L. Miller, Superintendent, and G. H. Morgan, Manager of the Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Company, from Frederick City. The object of their visit was the introduction of the Telephone into Emmitsburg. They are certainly the right men in the right place, courteous in manner, thoroughly conversant with their business, and apt and lucid in the explanations of its details their visit was altogether entertaining. We arranged for the introduction of the instrument into our office, and we are pleased to learn that the gentlemen have made fifteen contracts in this place, and among the others, at St. Joseph's House and at Mt. St. Mary's College. Thus we overcome the complaint of the past, that communication with Baltimore was easier than with the town, but two miles distant, while Baltimore is 60 miles. Taken all in all, our town has made a vast stride in the way of progress this week, and the enterprise of our people, with the proper chances, has been shown in the fact that this whole work has been accomplished in a single day. Emmitsburg will be an exchange station.

Where we Stand.

There are always persons in this world who estimate things more on the ground of cheapness, than their intrinsic worth. It has been suggested to us that the terms of this paper might be lowered; but the EMMITSBURG CHRONICLE does not claim public favor on the ground of being a cheap paper. Cheap literature, like cheap articles of commerce, will of ten, plague the buyer, more than it can profit him.

To state the grounds on which we stand, it may be proper to say, we claim to publish a good family journal, calculated to instruct, amuse and benefit the Home Circle.

We do our own work, and it is all home production; every line of its selections is carefully chosen with a view to the interest and entertainment of intelligent readers, and the printing is all the work of our own efficient compositors, hence we know exactly what we lay before our patrons, and manifested our judgment, in fulfilling the trust reposed in us.

Our work being home-made the expenses of its production are much greater than those borne, by what are regarded cheap papers, and consequently we cannot in justice to our patrons enter that field; our charges therefore are adjusted to the character of the work, we produce, and we claim to give full value for the consideration, and the price represents the lowest sum that justice demands. Papers from afar do not and cannot represent local interests.

We do not reflect upon the work of any one, but have enough of self-respect to estimate our own at its proper worth, and in so doing rely upon the intelligent appreciation of those we seek to serve. We deem this explanation due as well to our readers as to ourselves, inasmuch as it will serve as an answer to the unsatisfied and a justification of our course in claiming proper valuation for services rendered.

The water was turned in the C & O Canal on Monday, and by this time navigation has been resumed.

ORANGE peel is said to make good kindling. If it can be used that way, why is it allowed to render the streets so unsightly?

Mr. WENDEL BOLLMAN, the distinguished engineer and bridge-builder of Baltimore, died on Tuesday of Bright's disease, aged 70 years.

WILLIAM TAYLOR, a stone-cutter, about 60 years of age, fell dead while at work, on Thursday afternoon at Frederick. The cause was apoplexy.

Retained.

We are glad to learn, that Mr. Daniel Z. Padgett, the new collector, has retained the efficient and obliging clerk of the present collector, Mr. John H. Cuthshall.—Examiner.

Tan now Duches of Westminster, wife of one of the richest men in Europe, was married in a dress of white toulard, costing seventy-five cents a yard. This certainly is economy, and economy it is to use Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup, the great remedy for coughs and colds.

The Squirrels.

It is all right, give the few playful and always interesting squirrels that remain among us, all the legal protection they deserve, they must not be exterminated.

MR. ANDREW K. SHIVER, a very prominent citizen of Carroll county, died suddenly on the 2nd inst., at his residence, at Union Mills, aged 82 years. He was related to the numerous Shivers in Carroll, Frederick and Allegany counties.

PAPER soap is a new article on sale in New York. It comes in the form of a small book, and on being rubbed over the hands with water produces a fine lather, and is thorough in its cleansing properties. It is mainly intended for the use of travellers.

Trust not the Weather.

For the few gleams of sunshine we had on Thursday, we are repaid today (Friday) by a snow storm that has ruled the morning, and the snow melting as it falls makes the ground beneath as wretchedly repulsive, as the air is moist and unbearable.

For a speedy return to that lively vigorous feeling of which you were so proud in your healthy days, use J. M. Larouque's Anilobion Bitters; its effects upon the human machine is truly wonderful. All druggists sell it. 25 cents a paper or $1 a bottle. W. E. Thornton proprietor, Baltimore, Maryland.

The sale of Mr. Ezra Fuss, on last Wednesday, was largely attended, and was auctioneered by the veteran erier of the firm of Abs. Smith & Son, the sale amounted to $1,950, of which $1,000 were in cash, although a credit of nine months was offered. Horses brought from $86 to $179, and cows from $40 to $61. The sale bills were printed at this office.

PUBLIC sales have had an unprecedented range this season, and yet the changes leave no appreciable effect upon the course of business; very little of the property leaves the neighborhood of the sale, and prices are well maintained. It is never theless wonderful to contemplate what becomes of the things; every vacuum is filled at once and things move smoothly along, for in the end there is but a change in the working force.

Bara Barut.

On Thursday night, about 8 o'clock, fire broke out in the large bank barn of Mr. Jerome Fickes, about four miles west of New Oxford. The fire spread with such rapidity that it was utterly impossible for the men who had gathered about the scene of destruction to liberate the cattle, and three head of milch cows and three head of young cattle perished. Another cow was gotten out, but is also so badly burned that she will die. The horses were all saved through the heroic efforts of the family and neighbors. All the farming implements and machinery were burned; also the harness, several hundred bushels of wheat, oats, corn, a lot of hay, straw &c. Supposed incendiaries. We were unable to learn whether there is any insurance.—Item.

Mr. Fickes is said to be insured in the Munnasburg Company for $1200, but his loss is much larger.—Star and Sentinel.

Fire at Union Bridge.

UNION BRIDGE, March 10.—Fire broke out in the frame grocery store, and dwelling of A. M. Cramer, at 8:30 o'clock to night, caused, it is supposed, by the explosion of a lamp. Through the efforts of citizens the flames were gotten under control and a great conflagration averted. Cramer's loss from water and breaking in of doors and windows is covered by insurance in the North American of Philadelphia. The property is owned by Jesse Clary, of Frederick county.—Star.

Died on the Way to a Funeral.

Miss Sarah Danuth, about 24 years of age, the daughter of David Danuth, Esq., residing near Mechanicstown, started last Saturday to attend the funeral of Capt. Wilhide, in that place. While on the way she complained of feeling badly, stepped into a house near by and in a few moments she was a corpse. Physicians soon after arrived and pronounced apoplexy the cause of death. She was a very estimable young lady and much esteemed in the community.—Daily News.

Knabe Pianos for Brooklyn Schools.

The award of the contract to supply the Brooklyn, New York, public schools with twelve pianos has been made to Messrs. Knabe & Co., this being the entire number required, the award was made after a test of merit. The board of education having determined to secure the piano which they believed to be the best in the market, without regard to the difference in price. After a thorough examination and comparison, the Knabe pianos were unanimously chosen.—Baltimore D. News, 6th inst.

Death of an Aged Lady.

About 7 o'clock last Sunday night Mrs. Susan Font, wife of Mr. John H. Font, died at her residence, on West Patrick street, this city, in the 79th year of her age. Mrs. Font was a lady highly respected and much esteemed by a large circle of friends, and to those nearest her death was unexpected. She leaves an aged husband, with whom she lived in conjugal relations for almost a half century, and a daughter. The funeral took place at 10 o'clock Tuesday morning. Rev. Dr. Echbach officiating. The interment was made in Mt. Olivet Cemetery.—Maryland Union.

The County Statement.

We lay the County Statement before our readers this week, as here before, in the form of a supplement, and thus also present our usual amount of reading matter. The statement will be highly interesting to all readers in the county; and to those at a distance, it will convey substantial and official information as to the condition of affairs in Old Frederick County; and we republish below the summary of contents, which we gave last week in anti-cipation, that gives the whole matter at a glance.

"For holding elections there was paid $414; for new road pensioners, $6,693; for foreign and relocating same, $5,336 6; printers' accounts, $3,741 78; magistrates' accounts, $7,159 28; constables' accounts, $6,504 47; attorneys' accounts, $2,170 87; appropriation for public roads, $18,586 47. The levy laid by the commissioners was sixty five cents on the hundred dollars on $24,781,962 for assessment, being the amount of property liable to assessment, and taxation in the county, which yielded $161,082 75.

The Ladies Floral Cabinet for March has reached us, it is a most excellent periodical devoted to its name imports to the subject of flowers, and very handsomely gotten up on fine paper and is copiously illustrated. It opens with an excellent article on the flower work for the month and treats of "How to make a hot-bed," "Hanging flowers," "Rose gossip," "Climbers," "The Oleander," "Night-blooming Cereus" &c. The chapters on "Home Decorations" are very good. "Spring Fashions," "Housekeeping," "Notes and comments" are very interesting. It is just the sort of a periodical, the ladies will highly prize. It is published at the very low price of $1.25 per year, at 22 Vesey street, New York.

The Moon During March.

The moon full on Tuesday at 40 minutes after 2 o'clock in the evening standard time. She was in conjunction with Neptune on the 2nd, and with Saturn on the 3rd. Next Friday she comes in conjunction with Jupiter, with Mars on the 3th, and with Uranus on the 12th, paying her respects to each outer planet in the order of his distance from the Sun. On the 26th the moon is in conjunction with Mercury the day before her change. The new moon of the 27th commences the same unceasing round, passing near Neptune on the 29th, and paying her respects to Venus and Saturn on the 30th.

Wonderful to Tell.

Wonders never cease, it is said; and here comes the Telephone, with its vast capabilities. All things are strange till the novelty wears off, no doubt we shall soon reach that state in this particular. But to stand in one's room and talk to friends many miles away does seem incomprehensible. With an instrument at the Reservoir, our Water Company officials can stay at home and always know the state of the water and the condition of things, and transmit orders forthwith, and so on; there is no end to the conveniences that may arise in sending orders wherever the lines may reach. We hope to present every facility at our office for sending and receiving matters of business or interest when it may be desired.

Sudden Death.

On Saturday last Miss Sarah Danuth, sister of Maj. C. A. Danuth, of this place died suddenly of heart disease. The deceased had suffered several attacks of a like nature before and had been cautioned by her physician against indulging in too violent exercise. At the time of her death she was on her way home to attend the funeral of Capt. Joseph Wilhide and being late walked too rapidly. The attack came on her as she arrived at Mr. Simon Lohr's property, near town, at which place she died, in about a half hour. Miss Danuth was the minstrel of her aged father, a lady of kindly disposition and her distressing, though brief suffering moved the hearts of a large circle of friends to profound sympathy.—Clarion.

A Narrow Escape.

Mr. Levi Leatherman, of near Lewisstown, this county, made a narrow escape from a serious accident at the first railroad crossing on the Woodsboro' pike yesterday morning. He was on his way to this city with a four-horse wagon load of wheat. When near the crossing he halted his team for the purpose of discovering whether or not a train was coming. Not hearing anything, he started the team, but had only proceeded a few yards when the train passed and frightened his horses. They attempted to turn and in doing so broke the tongue of the wagon on short off. They ran a short distance before they could be stopped. The harness was slightly damaged. The wagon was repaired and the wheat brought to this city. A bill now pending in the Legislature provides for a flagman at that crossing. The travel on the pike is heavy and the crossing a dangerous one, as it is impossible, owing to a deep cut, to see a train going north until it is within twenty-five or thirty yards of the pike.—The Call.
