THE LITTLE LONE HOUSE.

A TRUE STORY. BY BRUCE W. MUNROE.

Away out in the country, far from any other habitation, a little brown house stood on a hill by the roadside. Its occupants were a widow and her two little children, a dog and a cat. A small garden surrounded the house, yielding a scanty supply of vegetables.

Mrs. Carlyle eked out a living by teaching a small school. It was hard work to teach this school and take care of her children, while the remuneration was pitiful; but Mrs. Carlyle had a brave heart, and she bore her privations patiently, hoping for brighter days.

This little lone house seemed to be strangely attractive to beggars and vagrants, and they haunted it by night and day. It was annoying to Mrs. Carlyle, and sometimes terrifying to the children, especially when, as often happened, a drunken man would stagger up to the house, pound on the doors and even try the windows.

They had a dog to be sure; a big, loafing, yelping creature, which had been a plaything for the children so long that its usefulness as a dog was a thing of the past. When an objectionable caller came to the house this dog would make a tremendous uproar, and scare the intruder away, if he were a stranger and unacquainted with the dog's peculiar habits. But once let the doughty dog out of the door, instead of flying at the intruder neck and heels, it would either profess the greatest friendship for him, or else chase him hurrying after a stray cat or a bird. It delighted exceedingly running promiscuously after flying things.

Again and again poor Mrs. Carlyle resolved that she would never pass another twenty-four hours in the house; but the place was her own, and she could support herself there. Further, it was her children's birthplace.

So they lived on in the little brown house; often harassed by beggars, tramps and drunken men; often having a hard struggle to keep the wolf from the door. It was a hard life and a wearisome one.

One day in winter the daughter of a neighbor having been at school all day was going to stop over night with Mrs. Carlyle and her two little girls. The children were amusing themselves greatly while Mrs. Carlyle busied herself preparing supper.

Suddenly a tall and gaunt figure opened the door of the kitchen and deliberately walked in. This alone was sufficient to alarm Mrs. Carlyle and the three frolicking girls; but—the man was an Indian!

There really no reason to be alarmed, for a peaceably disposed Indian was less to be feared than a strolling white man. But Mrs. Carlyle did not consider this, and she was more frightened than she cared to admit. As for the two little girls and their visitor, they had read that very day in their reader about the barbarities practiced by Indians in the early days of the country, and they sickened with horror, feeling certain that they should all be massacred in cold blood.

First the dog was appealed to. The three little girls motioned silently, but beseechingly for it to attack the Indian. Carlo, noble dog, understood, he obeyed their entreaties without hesitation, and squatting before the Indian he stretched out his paws to shake hands, opened his mouth and panted contentedly.

"Poor dog," said the Indian, "good dog, missus, this un." "The Indian has charmed him," whispered the little visitor shrilly. "Indians always do charm people's dogs."

"Oh, I hope he won't poison him," gasped little Edith Carlyle. The three posted themselves in a position from which they could watch proceedings but from which they could beat a retreat at a moment's warning.

"Boss in, missus?" asked the Indian. "No, he is not," said Mrs. Carlyle.

"I don't care," whispered Gertrude, the elder of the two sisters, "I don't think it would have been wrong for mamma to say that we are expecting our uncle from California."

"Can't you give me a bit of food?" asked the Indian, "I'm hungry; victuals smell awful good." Mrs. Carlyle, not so much frightened as confused, took up a generous slice of meat, and hurriedly gave it to the Indian. He did not ask for a plate, but said politely, "Needs a knife to cut it, missus, my own all 'baccy."

Mrs. Carlyle was so flurried that she gave him the first knife that caught her eye. To her own and the little girls' consternation it was what is familiarly known as a butcher's knife!

The poor Indian gave a grunt of surprise and disapproval, but did not ask for a better one. It was high time for the little girls to retreat. There was a patter of little feet over the floor—they had fled. The sanctuary they sought has probably been sought by every little girl (and boy, too) that the sun ever shone on. They hid in their bedroom! Here they felt quite safe for the time being; but Lizzie, their visitor, quavered, "I'll never come to visit you again, Gertrude."

"Oh don't be afraid, Lizzie," said Gertrude, her voice trembling, "we'll get him to let you go, as you're a visitor."

"Oh, he'll kill us all with that big knife, I know he will!" sobbed Edith. "Listen!" hearing a rasping sound from the kitchen, "Oh, Gertrude, he is sharpening the knife to kill us! O dear!"

There was a scrambling noise—Edith had disappeared. A moment later Gertrude and Lizzie had also disappeared. They had not fallen through a trap-door, nor been spirited away; they had only gone where they believed they would be safest—they had crawled under the bed.

Mrs. Carlyle, finding herself deserted by the three frightened children, felt her native courage return. She went on with her preparations for supper, though still so excited that she made little progress. She remembered the knife she had given the hungry Indian was the dulllest one in the house; and perhaps this comforted her not a little.

The door of the little girls' room opened quickly, and a figure appeared in the door-way. Three stifled screams and three gasps of terror came from the trio, and they huddled closer together.

"Gertrude," said Mrs. Carlyle's voice earnestly, "come out I want to speak to you."

Three little golden heads peered warily and fearfully out from under the bed. Seeing no one but Mrs. Carlyle, and that she did not appear so very much frightened, three little figures emerged from their hiding-place.

"Gertrude, dear," said Mrs. Carlyle in a hushed voice, "I want you to put on your thick boots and your wraps, and run up to Mr. Colfax's for some of them to come and take the Indian away."

"Oh, it's so cold, and the snow is so deep," sighed Gertrude. "Yes, dear; but there is no other way to get rid of him."

"All right, mamma; I'll start, anyway."

Mrs. Carlyle's presence began to inspire them with courage. "What's he doing now?" Edith whispered.

"He is still eating his meal, Edith. You mustn't be frightened, Gertrude."

"Can't I go with Gertrude, Mrs. Carlyle?" asked the little visitor. "Oh, do come, Lizzie! You'll be such company!"

But when they had put on their wraps and started out, they found the snow so deep and soft that Gertrude's poor little boots sunk through it, chilling and wetting her feet.

"O dear!" she said, "my feet are going to get soaking wet; and then I'll catch cold; and then mamma will have to make me onion syrup."

"I wish you had nice long-legged boots like mine, Gertrude; they are just like boy's boots. Pa got them for me on purpose to go to school when it's wet and the snow's deep."

"I wish I had, too," assented Gertrude. "I'll tell you what to do, Gertrude! Let us turn back, and I'll take off these boots, and let you wear them."

"Oh, will you, Lizzie?" How good you are! I shouldn't be a bit afraid. But what will you do, Lizzie?"

"I'll stay and talk with Edith till you come back."

"And won't you be frightened?" "No, I'll try not to be; and perhaps if the Indian should go to kill you, she might help to resist him: She was a bright little girl, but she could not always say exactly what she meant.

So they returned to the house. Gertrude drew on Lizzie's top boots, and then bravely went out into the cold alone. The snow was deep, but with the magic boots on her feet she did not mind it, although she sank into the snow the same as before, and progress was slow. These boots kept her feet dry and warm, and she trudged on bravely and hopefully.

At last she reached Mr. Colfax's house. Her story was a startling one—so startling that it frightened the little Colfax girls so much that they declared they would never go to school any more. But Mr. Colfax did not look frightened, though he immediately put on his cap and overcoat.

"Won't you please take your gun, Mr. Colfax?" Gertrude ventured, "I'm sure the Indian is all right to fight any person."

"No, Gertrude; he wouldn't be afraid of a gun."

Gertrude stayed a few minutes to rest, and then set out for home, half expecting to see her mother's house burst out into flames before she reached it. But no, there stood the house, all right.

Mr. Colfax easily prevailed on the Indian to go home with him, where he was given a good supper and a night's lodging, and sent on his way rejoicing.

Once rid of their unwelcome visitor, the three little girls became exceedingly brave, and gravely told what they would have done to circumvent the Indian in case he had attempted to kill them.

But Gertrude had proved herself a little heroine, and she knew it. Some weeks after this occurrence another little schoolmate was spending the night with Gertrude and Edith. This time it was one of those same little Colfax girls that had declared she would never go to school again. Far from doing this, however, she had gone to school regularly, and never rested till she was invited to "stay all night" with the little Carlyles.

"Do you suppose anybody will come tonight?" Phoebe queried. "Oh, I hope not!" devoutly said Gertrude and Edith in chorus.

"So do I," assented Phoebe, "unless it should be something romantic—that is, that would not be too terrible, and would not seem romantic afterwards."

Romantic Phoebe's wish was partially gratified. After supper, while the little girls were getting up their lessons for the next day, Mrs. Carlyle heard the sound of a drum in the distance.

Then she opened the door again. All was still; no sound except that of the far-away drum. Growing bolder, she opened the door to the extent of about two inches, and with her hand firm on the knob, held it so.

"Isn't it nice," said Edith. "Yes; but then it's only some common drum, you know, Edith, so it can't be much;" said Miss Phoebe, who did not seem to have a very exalted opinion of the music. Of course if she could have imagined it was a gallant little drummer-boy drumming to his regiment, she would have been enchanted.

"I don't care, I like it," declared Edith.

"Well, if you don't care for it, we'll come in," said Gertrude. "I don't like to have the door unlocked, anyway."

As she finished speaking she perceived that something was pressing gently against the door, trying to shove it open. This was so terrifying that she screamed aloud, though she did not quit her hold on the door.

"What's the matter?" cried two voices. "Some one is trying to get in!" Gertrude screamed.

"Oh, hang on! Shove it shut! Quick!" cried Phoebe. Then, at the top of her voice, "Mrs. Carlyle!"

"Oh, it won't shut!" panted Gertrude. "Help me, Phoebe, my strength is all gone! I can't shut it! Ma! Quick!"

Poor little Phoebe! Poor little girl! She did what she would never do; what she despised. She followed the example of Lizzie; she ran and hid with Edith in Gertrude's bedroom!

Mrs. Carlyle came into the room in alarm. "What is the matter?" she demanded.

"Oh, mamma! Some one is trying to get in, and I can't shut the door any farther!"

"Stop, Gertrude! It's Stripy, our cat!"

Yes, it was Stripy.

THE APACHE "ALAMANS."

From Tombstone, Arizona, comes an appeal, signed by the county judge, the clerk of the district court, the Episcopal clergyman and other prominent citizens, praying that Congress will act favorably upon the bill of Delegate Beam, which offers a reward for the capture or death of Geronimo and the other chiefs engaged in murderous outrages upon the people of that Territory. It is now a year since the outbreak of Geronimo and his band. Hundreds of white persons, it is alleged, have been killed in that period by his Apaches and not half a dozen of the savages. As this state of things to continue indefinitely? it is asked. Unless prompt and adequate measures are taken to suppress the raiders the outlook for civilization in the harassed region is exceedingly gloomy. The renegade Apaches have been reinforced, it is thought, either from the San Carlos reservation or from the recently-discharged scouts of Gen. Crook. Thus strengthened, they have broken up into small bands, which are said to be now engaged in murdering and pillaging throughout Southeastern Arizona. Over forty persons are reported to have been killed by them within the last six weeks, and outside of the towns there is no security—a state of things recalling the condition of the regions of Northeastern Persia wasted by the "alamans," or raids of the Turkomans of Merv. The alamans of the Apache is more to be dreaded, it appears, than that of the Turkoman, as the latter selects his victims, while the renegade Indian butchers indiscriminately. As our government is stronger than the Shah's, it may be expected to make more vigorous efforts to put an end to this disagreeable state of affairs. —Balto. Sun, May 24th.

THE funeral of Mrs. Alice Pendleton, wife of Minister George H. Pendleton, who was killed on Thursday of last week, while riding in Central Park, N. Y., took place from Zion P. E. Church in that city on Tuesday. Mrs. Pendleton was a daughter of the late Francis Scott Key who wrote the famous ode, "The Star-Spangled Banner." Mr. Pendleton is at his post in Berlin.

TREES WANTED IN THE STREETS.

The sanitary influence of tree planting in this city was discussed by the New York Academy of Sciences at Columbia College recently. Dr. Stephen Smith read a paper, in which he declared that from 3,000 to 5,000 people die every year in this city from the effects of the summer temperature, the death rate rising with the rising heat of the summer months.

The heat in the arid, treeless streets and avenues often runs, he said, from 130° to 150°, Fahrenheit, when under the branches of a thick shade tree, which could occasionally be found in a side street, the thermometer would register no more than 70° or 80°. Because there were no trees to shelter the streets the temperature of the stone and brick walls gradually increased from day to day with the summer, the night bringing little or no mitigation. If the streets were lined with trees the heat of the pavements and adjacent walls would not only be many degrees less, but the trees would absorb the deleterious gases that were thrown off by decomposing matter.

The value of trees systematically cultivated in the city, he said, could not be estimated. Their beautifying effects on the city were only briefly referred to.—N. Y. Sun.

THE funeral of Mrs. Alice Pendleton, wife of Minister George H. Pendleton, who was killed on Thursday of last week, while riding in Central Park, N. Y., took place from Zion P. E. Church in that city on Tuesday. Mrs. Pendleton was a daughter of the late Francis Scott Key who wrote the famous ode, "The Star-Spangled Banner." Mr. Pendleton is at his post in Berlin.

THERE are said to be 2,500 socialists in New York, many of them drilling in companies with arms.

ORDINANCE OF THE CORPORATION OF EMMITSBURG.

ORDINANCE NUMBER 61. PASSED MAY 24th, 1886.

AN ORDINANCE providing for the Assessment of the Real and Personal Property, and the appointment of the Assessors with useful regulations, pertained thereto in Emmitsburg.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted and ordained by the Burgess and Commissioners of Emmitsburg, that all Real and Personal Property, within the limits of the Corporation, shall be valued, reably to the provisions of this ordinance, and the same shall be taxable, proportionately according to the Assessment as herein directed, at such a percentage as may from time to time be fixed by ordinance. Provided however, that houses of Public Worship and all Church property, School Houses, and the two of Medicine, and wearing apparel, all home manufactures, wagons, carts and other farming utensils with other property, exempted from taxation by law, and the property of any individual person, or company of persons, the aggregate value of which shall not exceed the sum of One Hundred Dollars, shall be and is hereby exempt from all manner of tax on within the meaning of this ordinance.

SECTION 2. And be it enacted and ordained, that whenever in the opinion of the Burgess and Commissioners of Emmitsburg, or a majority of them, the interests of the Corporation, may so require, they the said Commissioners or a majority of them, shall appoint two sensible and discreet persons whose duty it shall be to Assess all the taxable property as aforesaid, at such sum or sums of money as they in their judgment, believe the same to be worth in cash. The said Assessors shall enter upon their duties within five days from the date of their appointment, and make a full return thereon within fifteen days after the said return shall be arranged in four columns, the first of which shall present in a alphabetical order (as nearly as may be) the name of the property holders, the second, the assessment of real property, which shall be assessed on each tract or parcel, lot, or parts thereof, according to the number of the same as indicated upon the plan of Emmitsburg, and "Shield's Addition to Emmitsburg," opposite the name or names of the owner or owners thereof, as assessed, and the amount shall represent the aggregate of personal property, set opposite the real property assessed, and the fourth column shall in due order following, present the sum in dollars and cents, of the real and personal property contained therein.

SECTION 3. And be it enacted and ordained, that the said Assessors as aforesaid, shall take and subscribe before the Burgess or any Justice of the Peace, the following oath or affirmation: "We do solemnly swear or affirm as the case may be, that we will faithfully execute the office of Assessors of the Real and Personal Property within the Corporate limits of Emmitsburg, without favor, or action, or partiality, and will, well and truly value and assess the same. Property which shall come to our sight and knowledge, agreeably to the laws and ordinances of said Corporation, to the best of our judgment, skill and ability."

The said oath or affirmation to be recorded and subscribed upon the record book of the Clerk of the Commissioners.

SECTION 4. And be it enacted and ordained, that any person or persons having in his or her possession any property liable to be assessed, shall refuse to give in a particular account thereof to the Assessors, when they shall apply for the same, he she or they shall on conviction, forfeit and pay to the Corporation the sum of Five Dollars, with costs of prosecution for each and every refusal, the same to be recovered as the other fines are recovered by the Corporation.

SECTION 5. And be it enacted and ordained, that whenever any person is appointed Assessor of this Corporation, and after such appointment having accepted, shall refuse or neglect to serve therein, or through negligence, does not discharge the duties of his office, he shall on conviction, forfeit and pay to the Corporation for each and every such refusal or neglect, the sum of Five Dollars, with costs of prosecution, to be recovered as other fines aforesaid.

SECTION 6. And be it enacted and ordained, that if any property holder or holders, shall conceive himself or themselves aggrieved by the valuation of his, her or their property, by the said Assessors, he, she or they, after the assessment is made, may appeal to the Commissioners, and it shall be the duty of said Commissioners, or a majority of them, if in their judgment, they shall not otherwise, to redress such grievance and direct the valuation to be decreased to such an amount as they may determine, all appeals as aforesaid, shall be applied for to the Clerk of the Commissioners, whose duty it shall be to make an entry in his record book, together with the action had thereon, and in case of any change or changes, in the valuation, it shall be his further duty to present a certified copy thereof to the Treasurer, who shall correct the tax list accordingly.

SECTION 7. And be it enacted and ordained, that upon the transfer improvement, or increase, or diminution in value of any of the assessable property within the limits of the Corporation, which may be made after the completion of any valuation, when said property may be taxed, it shall be the duty of the Commissioners, or a majority of them to make and direct the Treasurer to make such changes in said valuation for the time being, as the upon due consideration of the facts of the case in their judgment may deem just and necessary. Provided however, that the same right of appeal as herein before provided, shall be, and remain applicable to any such changes in like manner, as prescribed in the foregoing section.

SECTION 8. And be it enacted and ordained, that each and every Ordinance, heretofore in force, in relation to the valuation of the Real and Personal Property in Emmitsburg, shall be and is hereby repealed.

APPROVED, WILLIAM G. BLAIR, Burgess. JAMES O. HOPP, Clerk. May 25, 1886.

TO OUR FRIENDS:—Our gratification in the substantial manner in which the people, in a radius of thirty miles of Gettysburg, have shown their appreciation of our live, wide-awake way of doing business, in the year just past, has improved our stock and assortment for this Spring, to such an extent that we are truly the leaders, not only in prices, which we have always been, but in every department of our store you will find the newest and best, obtainable for the money. The trade received from this particular section (Emmitsburg) has been particularly gratifying to us, and the fact, that the persons who come once, have become regular customers shows the gratification to have been mutual. We will not particularize any thing this week, can only say that our stock is as complete with seasonable goods in every department as it can be made, and our prices are one price cash prices, which of course means, very shortest profits. To those who have not already visited us, we ask a visit, for our mutual benefit. If you are prevented from coming, send for samples, to compare with goods from anywhere.
