NUTTING.

Out in the pleasant sunshine of a bright October day, Rollicking, frolicking through the woods scaring the birds away. Went a group of laughing girls and boys to play till the sun was set; Martha and Robbie, and Tom and Will, and Dolly, the household pet!

They "made believe" they were foragers bold, scouring the country o'er. To add to their scanty soldier fare from an enemy's fruitful store, And they charged on the squirrels' leafy homes till they beat a quick retreat;

While their precious hoards came rattling down at the noisy victors' feet. They played tag and follow my leader and scampered up and down, Covering each other in their glee with the leaves so crisp and brown,

Till they huddled down to talk and "rest and plan some pleasurable deed, While Martha unpacked the "goodies" for the hungry, bright-faced crew. "I'm too little to work," said Dolly, tossing her curls away— "You made the dinner, Mattie, dear— then I'll be papa, and pray! I know just how he does it, 'cause I've looked through my letters, so; And God will hear me better out doors than he would in the house, I know!"

Then clasping her baby fingers, and bowing her leaf-crowned head, With its tangled tress half over her face, shading its flush of red— Sweetly the innocent little voice stole out on the wafting air, And up to the child's father floated this childish prayer:

"I thank you, God, 'way up in the sky, for these nice things to eat; For this breezy day in the pleasant woods, for the squirrels and birdies sweet; For father's and mother's to love us— my Robbie, his mother's dead; But I guess you know all about that, God—you took her away, they said!

"If you please, don't make my mother die; I shouldn't know what to do! I couldn't take care of myself at all; you'd have to get me, too! Make all the days just as good as this, and don't let Robbie cry— That's all little Dolly knows to pray, our Father in Heaven, good-bye!"

Then the sweet child voices rose anew like a beautiful refrain, And the birds in the brown leaves overhead caught up the merry strain, And twittered it back "til the yellow sun was lost in the hazy west, When birds and children fluttered home, each to a sheltering nest!

MY VEILED CLIENT.

At the time of the incident I am about to relate, I was a young solicitor, with no very considerable practice, and therefore not always so discreet as I might have been, had I been able to pick and choose my clients.

My business hours were ostensibly from ten to five; but the fact of my house adjoining the office made me subservient to the wishes of the public beyond the time stated on the brass plate at my office-door. In fact, it was after business hours that my most profitable clients came; and though I can say I refused many a time the agency of some shady business, still, I must confess with regret that once or twice I found myself unwittingly involved in transactions which I would have much rather left alone.

One of these I have occasion to remember too well, and I can never think of it but I thank Providence for saving me from becoming an accomplice unwittingly in a most daring piece of imposture.

I was interrupted one night at tea by the servant entering and saying that a lady wished to see me. Hastily finishing the meal, I hurried to my business room. As I entered and bowed, a lady rose, made a slight courtesy, and remained standing. I begged her to be seated, and asked of what service I could be to her. It was a little time before she answered, and then it was in a nervous, frightened way, glancing round the room as if she were afraid somebody else was present. I saw that, although she was dressed in good style, she had not the air of a lady; but as she wore a thick veil, I could not distinguish her features, though I made out a gray hair here and there.

"I suppose I had better explain who I am and what I want," she began. "I am Miss Howard of Graham Square, and I want you to make out my will."

I started involuntarily, for this elderly person, though I had never seen her before, had been the subject of many a surmise and many a gossip with the neighbors. She was reported to be very wealthy; but had apparently abandoned the world, for, during the last five years, she had shut herself up in her house, seeing no one but her servants. My curiosity was therefore piqued at the idea of making out this old eccentric's will. Taking up a pen, I asked her to give me the particulars of how she wished the property disposed of.

"That is very simple," she said. "I wish my whole property to go to Mr. David Simpson of Stafford Street here. I have never been married; and I want the will framed so as to cut off any heir who might claim relationship to me. I also wish you to act as my executor in seeing my will carried into effect."

I made a note of the instructions, and asked when it would be convenient for her to call and sign the deed.

"If you could have it written out to-morrow night, I could call then and sign it. I would like if you could arrange to have a doctor present to be a witness to my signing—a young doctor, if possible." "Certainly, madam. To-morrow night at this time will suit, and I will arrange to have a doctor present. Is there nothing else you wish mentioned in the will?"

"No; nothing," she said, rising. "But be sure you make it so as to cut off all relations."

I assured her everything would be as she desired; and after assisting her into the cab which was waiting, noticing the while that she had a slight limp in her walk, I retired to my room to frame the will in accordance with my instructions. Next night, punctual to a minute, she called; and as I had a doctor present, the ceremony of signing was soon over, the doctor signing as a witness along with my clerk, and appending a certificate of sanity, as desired by my client; and the deed was consigned to my safe.

The affair had almost completely passed from my mind, when I was startled one morning by receiving a note from Mr. Simpson the legatee in the will, informing me that Miss Howard was dead. I immediately proceeded to the house, performed the usual duties devolving upon a solicitor in such circumstances, and made what arrangements were necessary. After the funeral, I had a meeting with Mr. Simpson, and explained to him the position of affairs—that he was sole legatee, and that I was executor. He seemed to take the matter very coolly, I thought, but was anxious that everything should be realized as soon as possible. Our interview was very short; and I came away with a strong feeling of dislike for the man, who, I found, had acted as a sort of factor for the deceased lady.

Acting within the duties of my executorship, and also with a desire to find out if possible the relations the old lady had been so anxious to cut off, I inserted a notice of her death in most of the leading newspapers in the kingdom. This had the desired effect; for in the course of a few days I was waited upon by a young gentleman, Edward Howard, who informed me he was a nephew of the late Miss Howard, and had called upon me, having got my name and address from one of the newspapers to which I had sent the advertisement.

During my interview with Mr. Howard, I was much impressed with his bearing on my telling him the position of affairs, as he was much more concerned at his aunt's death than at the purpose of her will. He told me that five years ago he had married against his aunt's wishes; she had refused to recognize his wife; and though he had written her several letters, he had never heard from her in reply. He thanked me for my information, and said he would like to see me again, as he was coming into town to a situation he had just been offered.

Some weeks after this, as I was returning home in the evening from a consultation, my attention was arrested by the figure of a woman in front of me. She was hurrying along as if trying to escape observation; but there was something in her style and the limp which she had, that struck me as familiar, though I could not remember where I had seen her. Just as she was passing a lighted part of the street, she happened to look round, and the face I saw at once explained to me the familiarity of her figure—both face and figure being an exact counterpart of my late client's, Miss Howard!

Somehow or other, a suspicion flashed across my mind; my instinct told me something was wrong and I determined to follow her and see where she went to. Pushing my hat well over my brow and pulling the collar of my coat well up, I followed through two or three streets, and was almost at her heels when she suddenly turned into a public house, when, so close had I followed her, I heard the attendant say in answer to an inquiry by her, "Number thirteen, ma'am;" and I saw her disappear into the back premises. I immediately followed, heard the door of number thirteen shut, and glancing at the numbers, quietly opened number twelve, and after giving an order for some slight refreshment to the attendant who had followed me, I took a hasty look around the room.

I found it was divided from the next one only by a wooden partition which did not reach the ceiling, and that, by remaining perfectly quiet, I could hear that a whispered conversation was being carried on in the next room.

My first idea was to lock the door of the room they were in, and go for help; but as that was likely to cause a disturbance, I determined to slip out and trust to being back in time for their arrest. As luck would have it, nearly the first man I met outside was a detective whom I had known very well in connection with some criminal trials in which I had been engaged. A few words explained my purpose; and signaling to the nearest policeman, he placed him at the door of the shop, and both of us walked in. He nodded familiarly to the bar-tender, and leaning over the counter, whispered in his ear. The shopman started, and gave a low whistle.

"You'll do it as quietly as you can, for the credit of the house." "Of course," said the detective. "Show us in."

In another minute we were inside the room, with our backs to the door, the detective dangling a pair of bracelets and nodding smilingly around the room. The woman fainted. We had no difficulty in securing the men; and in half an hour we had them safely housed in jail.

Before their trial came on, we had worked out the whole story. The woman who had called on me and signed the will was Mrs. Simpson, Miss Howard's housekeeper, the mother of Simpson in whose favor the will was made; and the other man was a lawyer's clerk who had suggested to the feasibility of such a scheme. The fact of Miss Howard's self-confinement and my own imprudence had made the plot a success, but for my accidental recognition of the housekeeper. Each of the prisoners offered to turn Queen's evidence; but as we had no difficulty in proving the case, this was refused, and they were sentenced to various periods of penal servitude. I had then the pleasure of handing over the estate to the rightful heir, Edward Howard, who, notwithstanding that I had nearly been the means of depriving him of his inheritance, made me his agent.

The estate turned out to be much larger than I had at first thought, as I succeeded in proving that a large number of investments in Simpson's name really belonged to Miss Howard, and the management of so large a property fairly put me on my feet as regards business. I have had a good many clients since then, but I have often thought that my Veiled Client was my best one, as she was the means of giving me my first lesson in prudence, and my first start in life.

"Well, well," said Simpson, "that is all right now. But the present question is, what is to be done in the way of hurrying him up with the realization of the estate without exciting suspicion? The sooner we get away from this the better. I am glad that young fellow Howard didn't ask any questions. But one thing's certain, we must get the old woman away from this immediately, or she's sure to get recognized. She's been keeping pretty close lately; but I dare say she's getting tired of it. Aren't you, old lady?"

"Indeed," was the reply, "I would be glad to get away from this place to-morrow, if I could. I'm sure I only wish you could have been content with half of the estate with Mr. Edward, instead of burning the will, when you found it was to be divided between you and him, and getting me to do what I did. I'm sure it's a wonder my mistress doesn't rise from her grave to denounce us all."

"Keep that cant for another occasion, old woman; it's no use getting religious now. But I'll tell you what—I've got an idea."

Here the conversation got so low that I could not catch more than an occasional word, and what that idea was I never found out, as he never got the chance to try it on me, for I had heard enough to know that next door to me were three of the most daring conspirators I had ever come across, who had duped me and made me, though unwittingly, the chief actor in the conspiracy.

The house itself had long ago grown grey, but with its stout oak timbers and stone foundation, bid fair to hold its own through the fierce extremes of the New England winter and summer for many a year to come. So it waited patiently beside the road, peacefully resting under the blue sky, and seeming lost in the memories of its long and useful life. Scores of children had it seen creeping about its smooth floors, and prattling to their corn-cob dolls. Some of these children had soon crept through the little low-browed door to the great world outside; some of them remained on the farm, passing to and fro under the roof, and wearing deeper and harder each year the grass-bordered path to the old well. So it watched them as they grew taller, stronger, braver in the battle of life; as they married and gave in marriage; as each sat by the west window for the last time, looking out through the little panes upon the grassy road, the orchard, the waving tops of the pines beyond the meadow, and then—lay down to sleep. Whenever one of its foster-children had been harshly treated by the busy, heedless world, which God help them! they had been in such eager haste to enter; and had come home again with trembling lip,—yes, and with bowed head and faltering step; the dear old house had held its arms wide open, and, pitiful as a mother, had taken them to its bosom, where they at last found rest. Before its peaceful aspect, its faint, herby odors, its dawn-colored roses and lilies, unquiet and care and trouble vanished; in the presence of its simple, quaint purity, its nearness to sky and earth and all lovely things of field and wood, sun crept back, ashamed, to its haunts in the city by-ways.—W. Curing Rheumatism with Celery.
A German correspondent of an English paper writes as follows: "I have had a severe attack of inflammatory rheumatism, and was healed in two days' time by a soup made of the stalks and root of celery; therefore I desire to make this simple remedy known through the columns of your valuable paper, for the benefit of all sufferers from gout or rheumatism of any form. I was induced to try it by seeing the following notice:

"Numerous cures of rheumatism by the use of celery have recently been announced in English papers. New discoveries—or what claim to be discoveries—of the healing virtues of plants are continually being made. One of the latest is that celery is a cure for rheumatism; indeed, it is asserted the disease is impossible if the vegetable be cooked and freely eaten. The fact that it is always put on the table raw prevents its therapeutic powers from being known. The celery should be cut into bits, boiled in water until soft, and the water drunk by the patient. Serve warm, with pieces of toasted bread, and the painful ailment will soon yield. Such is the declaration of a physician, who has again and again tried the experiment and with uniform success. At least two-thirds of the cases named heart-disease are ascribed to rheumatism and its agonizing ally, gout. Smallpox, so much dreaded, is not half so destructive as rheumatism, which, it is maintained by many physicians, can be prevented by obeying nature's laws in diet."

Here in Germany we boil the root and stalks, as the root is the principal part of it, and afterward eat it as a salad with oil and vinegar. I received such immediate benefit, that I am anxious to let all the rheumatic sufferers know of it.

A YEAR OF DISASTERS.

The rolling years have all of them some strikingly great events to mark their courses, but the one now nearing its close has been so remarkably illustrated, that it seems likely to occupy a prominent place in history as the year of terrors, in the heavens, the seas, on the earth and within it.

Every new occurrence brings its lamentations and its periods of terror, and each is soon forgotten in the onflow of daily cares.

Decay is stamped upon everything in nature; it meets as at every point of life's progress; the work of death is everywhere around us, and we recognize its certainty, yet prefer to think of it as something that is too far off to claim our personal attention.

Divine revelation alone points the way in which to rise superior to the environments in which we are held.

THE UNOBSERVED ELECTION.

That "all is fair in politics" is a most pernicious sentiment, one that no honest person can entertain for a moment.

Trickery, misrepresentation, and other dishonest practices may deprive a citizen of his vote, but those who resort to such means would on the same grounds not hesitate to steal on a convenient opportunity.

It is altogether legitimate by fair argument and honest representations to try to induce others to concur with you in opinion, but the right to vote is the badge of citizenship and is in such view a more sacred one than the possession of property, hence it is that the right is hedged around with legal enactments, entailing severe penalties on any one who may invalidate it.

The approach to the polls should be free and unobstructed, or the whole system of popular government is a mockery.

A CONSUMING FIRE.

A fire broke out on last Sunday evening in Salisbury, Wicomico county, Md., and consumed more than fifty buildings, and entailed a loss of over one million dollars.

The knights of labor ended their General Assembly at Richmond on Wednesday evening. Among various resolutions passed were those favoring the coinage of silver to the full extent of the present limit, and the government obligations be paid in it, also one in favor of woman suffrage.

A destructive fire in Eastport, Maine, occurred on Sunday of last week, that swept through the business parts of the town entailing $500,000 in losses.

The Barthold Statue of Liberty enlightening the world will be dedicated on next, Thursday Oct. 28.

The President and his cabinet will be present and representatives from all over the land.

SWEPT AWAY BY A FLOOD.

The town of Sabine Pass in Texas, was swept away by a flood last week. The waters came to the town from the lake and gulf with unprecedented rapidity. The haste was so great the citizens could not realize its urgency until in vain, and betook themselves to the houses and resorts supposed to be safe, the smaller ones of course in time were moved from their foundations by the continued rising, and turned over on their sides and some upside-down, soon after the larger houses followed the same course, and death by drowning stared all in the face.

The revelations following the above described calamity, have greatly enlarged the damage done. Six miles east of Sabine Pass was the village known as Johnson's Bayou, La., which was also destroyed, together with the postoffice, settlement of Radford adjoining, their populations aggregated 1200.

An examination of the country back of Sabine and immediately in the vicinity of Beaumont shows that the salt water came back from the coast fully forty miles through the swamps, and hundreds of thousands of acres are still submerged by water that was forced back and has no outlet.

The jury in the case of Janitor Titus, charged with the murder of Tillie Smith, rendered a verdict of murder in the first degree on the 15th, inst. Tillie Smith, the murdered girl was a pretty domestic employed at the Hackettstown Institute, N. J., of which Titus was janitor. It was charged that on the night of the murder after returning to the Institute, she was met by Titus, outraged and murdered.

GEORGE F. EDMUNDS was re-elected United States Senator on Tuesday by the Vermont Legislature, receiving 238 out of 264 votes. There was but one vote against him in the Senate and thirty-five in the House.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND with several members of his cabinet visited the Agricultural Fair at Richmond on Thursday and met a most enthusiastic reception.

THE Grand Duke Czarewicz, heir to the Russian throne, who is afflicted with a pulmonary disease, is in a precarious condition. He is not expected to recover.

A BEE hunter of Vermontville, Mich., discovered a bee tree in which the honey was in a limb six inches in diameter and sixty feet from the ground. The owner of the tree would not permit him to cut down the tree, so the hunter cut off the limb by firing seventy-five bullets into it.

ABOUT 8 o'clock a. m. Wednesday of last week a girl went into the basement of a house on West Colliery street, Shenandoah, Pa. She opened a door and found herself standing on the brink of a cave-in about eighteen feet in diameter and perhaps a hundred feet deep.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Special to the Emmitsburg Chronicle. OCTOBER 20.—It was quite a surprise to all when it became known that the President had left Washington this week, on a hunting expedition. The arrangements were conducted rather furtively, and no one save a favored few, had any idea that Mr. Cleveland was going away. The party consisted of Col. Lamont Secretary Fairchild, Hon. Joseph Miller and Captain French. It is reported that a magnificent buck was killed the day following their arrival at Romney. The animal was killed by French, who narrowly missed Mr. Miller in the excitement of the moment. It is understood that Senator Kenna will join the party to-morrow, and that they will not be back for some little time. From a remark dropped by one of the party, it would appear, that the lives of any newspaper men, who present themselves during this little hunting trip, will be considerably jeopardized. He said "we don't want any correspondents prowling about this diggings. If they come, we will not be able to discriminate between them and the deer." It is advisable to stay away, after such a warning. Callers at the White House yesterday were greatly disappointed that the usual afternoon reception was not held, owing to the absence of the President. The day was a very quiet one, there being no official callers.

"Oh plague on this vagary—we are in a nice quandary," is a pretty but pathetic little verse, just now being sung by republican clerks in the departments. These faithful servants are in a state of exasperated perplexity, over the question—whether they can safely go home to vote the republican ticket. Although the present administration has issued no instructions concerning the matter, there exists among these unfortunate people, a dread of the consequences. While in Washington, clerks, whether democratic or republican, profess an everlasting affection for the party in power. This wise conformity is severely shaken however, when brought to a test like the present case. The veracity of the biblical statement, that a man cannot serve two masters, is by no means equivocal in this instance. It is in point of fact, one of those disagreeable truths, which we would gladly disprove, by sophistry, if it were possible to do. We can all sympathize with these clerks, but beyond that, we are powerless to act. The democratic campaign committee, have made arrangements with the railroad companies, for the transportation of democratic clerks, who intend to go home. Only those however, who have not exhausted their leave of absence will get permission to go from the departments.

The great and only Hermann, who is correctly termed—prestidigitator, necromancer, magician and wizard, has been spending a short season at the NATIONAL. It is no figure of speech to say, that he has succeeded in knocking established facts and reasons into a cocked hat, nor indeed to observe, that the laws of gravitation and attraction have been totally ignored by this supernatural visitor. His audiences were held spellbound by the many wonderful tricks, and showed their honest appreciation, by rounds of applause. On Tuesday, Hermann gave an exhibition at the Insane Asylum. Nearly every correspondent and newspaper man, in the city was present. The audience was composed of self-called kings, queens, presidents etc., who at first did not appear to understand the nature of the entertainment. It was not until the great magician had performed several remarkable tricks, like converting cables into cough drops and dumb-bells into ten penny nails, that their minds appeared to grasp the idea, and to awaken to a sense of understanding. From this time on, the poor creatures evinced appreciation and enthusiasm, showing their approbation by clapping their hands and whistling. Hermann is to be commended for this kind action, which was purely voluntary, and without any solicitation.

It is an established fact, that the influence of theatricals upon the insane is beneficial, serving as it unquestionably does, to stimulate the mind, and to break the dull and lethargic state of deranged intellect. Hermann's tricks and feats, are calculated to awaken a sense of the extraordinary, in even a wooden indian.

A CALF was killed in Zionville, Pa., one morning, the skin was at the tannery by noon, was tanned and turned over to a shoemaker that evening, and by the next morning was made into a pair of boots which were worn by the man who owned the calf that had worn the skin the day before.

THE 291-foot python which recently got away in the City Hall Park, New York, again escaped on Monday morning while being transferred from his box to a cage at Austin & Stone's museum, Boston. Crawling under the stage, the snake broke away several boards, entered the cellar, got into the cold-air box of the furnace, and bust open its sides, the bricks flying in all directions. Four men seized him, and after a terrible struggle, lasting an hour and a half, they succeeded in caging him. During the fight the python wound himself around two thick joists and snapped them as easily as if they were only pipe stems. He bit one man in the wrist and squeezed the breath out of another by jamming him against the wall.

THE twenty-fifth anniversary of Emperor William's coronation and fifty-fifth anniversary of the birth of Crown Prince Frederick William were observed quietly the imperial family. Reliable private advices from Baden affirm that the bulletins reporting Emperor William as being in good health are positively untrue. According to these advices, the Emperor is subject to daily attacks of syncope and prolonged drowsiness, and recently was in a semi-comatose condition for twenty hours, from which the doctors were unable to rouse him. His condition is aggravated, it is said, by chronic disease of the bladder. It is feared that it will be impossible, with the utmost care, to preserve his life for more than a few months longer.—American.

DEACON Amos P. Kendall of Palmer, Mass., died on Saturday of a curious disease that had caused the death of his grandfather, father, and two brothers. In effect it was paralysis, and yet it came on very gradually, without any shock. Less than a year ago Deacon Kendall noticed a lameness in a finger on his left hand. The disorder developed gradually, until about five months ago the left hand became helpless and dangled from the wrist, next the calves of his legs were attacked, and in a couple of months more he was forced to stop walking, and soon after he was unable to move the left leg at all. His mouth and throat were then approached, the muscles controlling the salivary glands weakened, which caused a ceaseless flow of saliva. After that the progress of the disease was rapid, and at the time of his death he had lost his speech save a few guttural sounds, was unable to swallow or to move any member save one arm slightly and turn his head somewhat. The paralyzed portions retained the sense of touch and his mind was perfectly clear to the last.—N. Y. Sun.

HE MUST WALK OR DIE. A Man Who Covers 27,000 Miles a Year—Interesting If Not True.

One of the strangest penalties that eccentric fate has ever inflicted on a member of the human family is shown in the case of John Snyder who resides at Mile Grove, a small station thirty miles east of here, on the Chicago, St. Louis and Pittsburg road.

Snyder's strange affliction dates back to a little over two years ago. At that time he became the victim of some sort of nervous complaint, from which he found relief in a measure by walking until completely exhausted.

Jefferson declared that cities were sores on the body politic. If this was true 80 years ago, it is much more so now, when the size and iniquities of the city have so enormously increased.

A "THREE-YEAR-OLD" discovered a neighbor's hens in their yard scratching. In a most indignant tone she reported to her mother that Mr. Smith's hens were "wiping their feet on our grass."

GRASS AND ROSES. Translated from the Persian Saadi, by JAMES FREEMAN CLARKE, D. D.

I looked where the roses were blooming They stood among grasses and weeds; I said, "Where such beauties are growing, Why suffer these paltry weeds?"

Keeping Winter Apples. An experienced fruit-dealer says he does not want to put apples in the cellar or fruit room, until there is a little hoar frost inside the barrel.

How to Keep Cider Sweet. Pure sweet cider that is arrested in the process of fermentation before it becomes acetic acid or even alcohol, and with carbonic acid gas worked out, is one of the most delightful beverages.
