THE OLD MILL.

BY HOLLS W. FIELD.

Lonely, in a spot uncanny,
Standing dark and grim and still,
Moss-grown wheel and rusted shafting,
Is the old deserted mill.

Only hissing, foaming waters,
Dashing, swirling in the race,
Or the hoot of lonely owl
Breaks the silence round the place.

Years have passed since thrifty farmers
O'er its threshold ceased to come;
Since its wheels, with ponderous motion
Turned with ceaseless, droning hum.

Stilled forever are its grindings,
And the windows in its roof,
Like the eyes of giant goblin,
Seem to stare as in reproof.

Of man's false and fickle nature—
When in service worn away,
Let to Time's eternal changes
And the inroads of decay.

But the miller sleeps forever
Where the river skirts the hill,
And its waters sing his requiem,
Dancing idly past the mill.

In the mill, in musty corners,
Hangs the spider's silken snare;
Clings the bat to blackened rafters
High above the broken stair.

In the night the simple rustic
Hurries by with nervous thrill,
Peering backward o'er his shoulder
For the ghost that haunts the mill.

—Noon came, and then 1 o'clock, and then 2, and no signs of the boat.

I went to the cabin with my first officer and the officer of the Alabama, and we held a council. One of them thought I ought to run on another course, and he gave his reasons for it, and then the other, who had been wavering on the subject, joined him. I persisted in my belief, and stood alone in it. Somehow I could not see their reasons as they did, and I had a firm conviction that I was right, and if the Captain of the Alabama had done what I should do under similar circumstances, he would be exactly in the track I was running.

The afternoon went on, and about an hour before sunset I went into the cross-trees to have a look on my own account. I swept the horizon with my glass over and over again, but saw nothing, and felt what a terrible responsibility rested on me, and what would be said of me for holding my course against the advice of the others, if I should not find the boat.

Just as the sun was within a hand-spike's length of the horizon I saw a speck on the crest of a wave. It went down as the wave fell, and I believe my heart stopped beating till the speck came up again and showed itself. There it was, and no mistake, and it was exactly dead ahead as near as you could draw a line.

I hailed the deck, and sent the first officer to take the wheel. I told him not to vary the breadth of a hair from the course we were running. Then I came down, and sent a man up to take my place.

"Have you seen anything?" everybody asked as I reached the deck.

"Nothing I'm certain of," I answered; "but we may have developments presently." I don't know if my heart was beating then, but presume it was.

In a little while—it may have been a quarter of an hour, and just as the sun was dipping into the horizon—the man in the rigging called out, "Sail ho!"

"Where away?" I asked.

"Dead ahead, sir. I think it's the boat."

"My heart went up in my mouth but I tried to appear as cool as an iceberg. Of course, everybody else was all excitement, and that was the more reason why I should not be. Besides, I was Captain, and nobody else was, as I had shown them by sticking to my course.

The night came on clear and beautiful, and we kept straight on. We lost sight of the boat as the daylight faded, but in half an hour or so we saw her again, and we still had her right in line. As we neared her I kept the ship up a little, so as to bring the boat under our lee, and I put men in the fore chains and along the sides with plenty of lines, and made all possible preparations to make fast. I knew the men in the boat would be so chilled with the cold that they would be nearly helpless, and whatever was to be done would have to be done by ourselves.

We got them out all right, and it was as I had surmised, they were the first officer in command, and he said they left the ship at 2 in the morning, and lost sight of the longboat soon after. She was nearer the ship than they, as the Captain had been the last to leave her.

"The weather was cold, and they suffered considerably from their cramped positions, but in a little while after coming on board they were warmed up and all right. Nothing could be seen of the longboat, and it was not certain whether she was still afloat. I determined to save her if possible to do it, and the great question was to determine what course to steer to find her. I reasoned that Captain Hitchcock would try to get out of the Gulf Stream as soon as he could, in order to find smoother water, and, after carefully studying the situation, I changed my course in accordance with this theory. I sent men aloft to keep a sharp look-out, and report the least sign of a boat, and to watch for anything that would indicate she had gone down and was past all help.

"Noon came, and then 1 o'clock, and then 2, and no signs of the boat. I went to the cabin with my first officer and the officer of the Alabama, and we held a council. One of them thought I ought to run on another course, and he gave his reasons for it, and then the other, who had been wavering on the subject, joined him. I knew the men in the boat would be so chilled with the cold that they would be nearly helpless, and whatever was to be done would have to be done by ourselves.

We got them out all right, and it was as I had surmised, they were most of them too much benumbed to climb up the sides, and had to be helped. When they were all safe on board we tried to hoist the boat in, and she broke in two with her own weight. How she ever lived as long as she did is a mystery.

"Captain Hitchcock told me they rowed as long as they could after leaving the ship, with the intention of getting into smoother water beyond the Gulf Stream, and he thought that in case I fell in with the other boat I would do just as I had done. The two cabin passengers took their share of the labor with the rest. They were both young men, with a difference of perhaps five or six years in their ages, and had been traveling in Europe, the elder of the two being tutor for the younger, who was the son of a prominent citizen of New York. They took passage at Leghorn for New York, and when their turn came to enter the long boat they had done so without complaint and had borne the privations of the night and day as cheerfully as any one else.

"All day they had watched and hoped, hoped and watched, but there was no sign of a sail. The night threatened to be cold, and there was little expectation that any of the party would live till morning even if the boat continued to float. As the sun neared the horizon the younger man was lying in the bottom of the boat, wrapped in his overcoat and a blanket, while the elder sat in the stern with the Captain.

"Just as the sun was dipping into the waves the elder of the twin said to Captain Hitchcock that, with his permission, he would offer prayer. Of course it was given at once. 'And I never, in all my life,' said Captain Hitchcock, 'heard a more beautiful prayer from the lips of mortal man. And as he said 'amen,' and I said amen too, I raised my eyes and saw your sail.'

"Perhaps," said Captain Raymond to his group of listeners—"perhaps you'd like to know the names of those two passengers? They are familiar to you all, and you'll find them at the bottom of this letter, which I received, with a silver pitcher, a few days after we reached New York. I haven't seen it for some time, until it turned up to-day while I was overhauling my desk. It is an old letter, you see, and was written before the envelope was invented."

The letter was passed around and handled with great care. It was then read aloud by one of the group, and ran as follows:

NEW YORK, Dec. 28, 1844.

"DEAR SIR: Desirous of testifying our grateful sense of the noble disinterestedness with which you stood from your course on the 12th of December last in search of the ship Alabama, which foundered on that day at sea, and of the kindness we received at your hands while your guests, we beg your acceptance of the accompanying piece of plate.

"We know that no offering of ours can add to the proud feeling of satisfaction which must have animated your bosom when upon your own deck you saw the eighteen human beings whose lives you had saved; but we wish you to possess some slight token which in after days may serve to remind your children and your friends of how nobly you did your duty to your God and your fellow men; and we desire that other ship masters, incited as well by their own humane impulses as by the approbation which so noble an act never fails to call down from the public, may 'go and do likewise.'

"In conclusion, we congratulate you upon the opportunity you have enjoyed of gratifying the most generous promptings of the soul, we pray that Heaven may shower its choicest blessings upon you and yours, and we beg you to be assured of the lasting gratitude of, very truly, your friends,

"EDWARD COOPER,
"ABRAM S. HEWITT,
"Passengers."

"To Captain George B. Raymond of the ship Atalanta of New York."

"A day or two after receiving and answering this letter," said Captain Raymond, "I received an invitation to go to Mr. Peter Cooper's house, as the family was very desirous of meeting me. I was so busy with the affairs of my ship that I could not respond at once, but sent word that I would call on New Year's day. When I called, and my name was announced, they did not wait for me to go into the parlor, but all came out into the hall to greet me; the ladies pressed around me, and I assure you it was rather embarrassing for a young sea-dog to receive so much attention. I had done nothing more than my duty, and somehow felt that I was being thanked and praised a good deal beyond what I merited. I tried to tell them so, but they wouldn't listen to me, and all the time I was there they made such a hero of me that I didn't know what to say, and wondered how I would be able to escape.

"None of the Cooper or Hewitt family have ever forgotten me, but, on the contrary, they miss no opportunity of referring to that incident of the 12th of December. When the Lotos Club gave a dinner to Mayor Cooper I wanted to come as much as I ever wanted to do anything in all my life, and I thought I would do so; but I don't like to be called up for a speech, and I knew that Hewitt or Cooper would be sure to have me out and make me say something; so I stayed away, and saved the club from listening to the story of the loss of the Alabama."

"If you had told the story as you have told it now," said one of the listeners, "you would have made one of the most effective speeches ever made at a dinner party."

"So say we all."

A GERANIUM SLIP.

Mamma, what are you doing?" I asked Willie, looking at his mother as she filled a little earthen pot with mould. "I am going to plant a little geranium slip," said mamma.

"Oh," said Willie, "what for?"

"That it may grow," said mamma, "and then next summer I shall have ever so many of those pretty red flowers you liked so much in Aunt Fannie's garden."

"Yes," said Willie. "If you plant things, they always grow, and you always get a good many more of 'em?"

"Yes," said mamma, thinking of geraniums.

Then the pot was placed in the sunny window, and every morning Willie peeped into it with a queer, solemn look, as though a new mystery had dawned upon him.

One day he asked mamma for a little flower-pot of his own, and having obtained it, he placed it carefully beside the other, and took to peeping into that with even more solemnity. One day a few weeks after, papa came home with tickets for the opera in his pocket. Of course one wears one's very best to the opera, and mamma went to her room to attire herself in hers. But when the dress was on, and the gloves and the white cloak and cloud at hand, the finishing touch, the diamond pin and ear-rings were not to be found. Some one had taken them from their velvet casket in a room which was seldom, if ever left alone.

Mamma was not rich and these were valuable possessions. Naturally there was much search and commotion, and the whole evening was spoiled in a great degree, for not only the loss, but the mystery of it, weighed upon the loser's mind. It could not be supposed that a faithful old nursemaid could be guilty, and the cook never came up stairs. Who had been in the house?

A ne'er-do-well cousin of the family, who had paid a visit of some weeks when out of business, and a young dressmaker.

It was so terrible to suspect any one, but a professional thief would not have taken the diamond and left a watch that lay beside them, and mamma and papa put their heads together in vain to solve the mystery.

There were inquiries made, hints thrown out that would have led any repentant purloiner to restore the lost jewels. But nothing came of them. And as they were too valuable to lose, serious measures were at last taken to discover the real thief. A detective was employed, and he, a grave serious man, with an acute eye and a deep voice, after a prolonged interview with papa declared that he thought he could put his finger on the person.

A few days after, he returned with the information that he had

IN these days when the license of the Press goes almost unrebuked, it is a mighty impulse in favor of home purity, as against the prurient tendencies of the publishers to note that Queen Victoria has forbidden the admission into the household of Windsor Castle or its precincts, of newspapers containing reports of the Campell divorce case.

A DESTITUTE locksmith's apprentice named Boehnke on Sunday threw a stone through the well-known corner window in the imperial palace at which Emperor William is accustomed to sit. The apprentice was at once arrested and locked up. His action, it is supposed, was inspired by a desire to attract attention to his needy condition or to secure notoriety. He succeeded in making an immediate sensation, and a great crowd assembled near the window. The Emperor was not struck, and he appeared at the window to assure the people of his entire safety, and he cheered enthusiastically by the throng.

The Kaskine Co.—DEAR SIRS—"The first greatest success I had with Kaskine was in chills and fever, malaria, nervous debility, rheumatism, and all the other diseases caused by malarial poisons at that time that it was undoubtedly the best medicine ever discovered, but I was even then unfamiliar with its really wonderful powers in curing the most obstinate cases of dyspepsia, indigestion, particularly where the blood had become impoverished or impoverished and the digestion impaired. Strictly speaking, Kaskine is the only blood purifier we have. I use it also very largely in all the cases of skin diseases, especially in women and children. In over three hundred cases I have cured there has never been the slightest bad effect following its use, and it is the best medicine I have ever used in my long life devoted to the medical profession."

SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE for January 1887 has appeared and will be welcomed by the old friends and admirers of the original "Scribner's Monthly," as the return of a much loved friend. As the publishers propose to make it a magazine of general literature, and each number will be fully illustrated by skillful artists, the readers may expect to find every number attractive, entertaining and elevating throughout. The names of those whose writings will be presented in its pages, are a guarantee that the readers will not be disappointed in the expectations formed of a work issued under the popular name of Scribner. This initial number has for a Frontispiece, "Gambetta Proclaiming the Republic of France," with an account of the "Downfall of Empire," by Ex-Minister Washburne; an article on "Our Defenceless Coasts," by F. V. Greene; "Glimpses at the Diaries of Gouverneur Morris," "Socialism," "The Babylonian Seals," &c., &c. The Stories are "Seth's Brother's Wife," by Herold Frederic, "The Story of a New York House," by H. C. Bunner, and "In Mexico," by Thomas A. Janvier. Published monthly by Charles Scribner's Sons, Broadway, New York, at $3.00 a year.

A Valuable Medical Treatise.

The edition for 1887 of the sterling Medical Annual, known as Hostetter's Almanac, is now ready, and may be obtained, free of cost, of druggists and general country dealers in all parts of the United States, Mexico, and indeed in every civilized portion of the Western Hemisphere. This Almanac has been issued regularly at the commencement of every year for over one-half of a century. It combines with the soundest practical advice for the preservation and restoration of health, a large amount of interesting and amusing light reading, and the calendar, astronomical calculations, chronology, local history, &c., are prepared with great care, and will be found entirely accurate. The issue of Hostetter's Almanac for 1887 will probably be the largest edition of a medical work ever published in any country. The proprietors, Messrs. Hostetter & Co., Pittsburgh, Pa., on receipt of a two cent stamp, will forward a copy by mail to any person who cannot procure one in his neighborhood.

Persons who take precautionary measures, with fire-arms, to be ready, for chicken thieves &c., cannot be too careful in providing against accidents, that may arise from the careless handling of them, or the insecure positions they may occupy. The loss of valuable life in such cases always occasions wide spread and bitter regret.

THE HOLIDAY ATTRACTION for this season will be the performance of "The Chain of Guilt" at Gelwicks' Hall on Monday evening, Dec. 27, for the benefit of the Emmitt Cornet Band. This drama will be given by a well selected company of performers from our own community, and can be recommended to all as first class.

TOBACCO, cigars and cigarettes at Smith's confectionery.

THAT Scribner's Magazine is likely to be a success in America, as well as here, is abundantly proved by the fact that Henry Warner & Co., of London, who are to act as the agents for the sale of the magazine in Great Britain, have bought outright 20,000 copies of the new magazine.

We don't any of us really know how near the dawn of Christmas Day is until we see the sunny faces of little children, glowing with the joy of the season.

Beautiful! The most fitting picture of "Belsnickle" we have ever seen. Behold the children fleeing before the jolly editor, clad in the "infinite glow of joyful anticipation!"

Elevator Burned.

The grain elevator of the Western Maryland Railroad Company at Geon Village, near Chambersburg, was destroyed by fire on Friday of last week. There were 1200 bushels of wheat in the elevator which were totally lost. Mr. Oliver Chambers, Agent, who was sleeping in the building, was seriously burned.

Death of Josiah Bowles.

This gentleman, son of Mr. Joseph Bowles, of this valley, died on Thursday last week, at his residence, between Hagerstown and Williamsport, Washington county, of Bright's disease, in the 50th year of his age. Less than two years ago, Mr. Bowles purchased a small farm near Hagerstown, and removed thither from the vicinity of Myersville, this valley. He leaves a widow, daughter of the late Christian Koogle, of this valley, and two children, a son and daughter. His remains were interred at Hagerstown.—Valley Register.

Will Rebuild.

Mr. John Rouzer, with an energy that gives evidence of a courage and strength of will that should be emulated by our younger men, has had since the fire that destroyed his tannery, from twelve to twenty men at work upon the labor of rebuilding. In one week, the ruins had been cleared out, the heavy timbers replaced and the rafters up. It will be in running order at most in two weeks and this valuable industry again restored to our people. Mr. Rouzer will introduce some modern methods and appliances. The building is being erected by Jos. A. Weddle and Mr. Chas. Foreman is the millwright in charge.—Clarion.

Grand Army Post Organized.

Arthur Post No. 41, of the Grand Army of the Republic was organized at this place Tuesday evening, December 14. After the election of officers the Post was mustered in and the officers installed by Eli Frost, commander of Reynolds Post No. 2, Department of Maryland, G. A. R., of Frederick, Md., assisted by Jno. Q. A. Sands, chief mustering officer G. A. R., of the Department of Maryland, from Baltimore. George L. Gillelan was appointed Adjutant of the Post, and also elected a Delegate to the Department Encampment, and Joseph W. Davidson an alternate to the Encampment to assemble in Baltimore, January, 1887. A great deal of interest was manifested in the meeting, eighteen of the Charter Members being present and "mustered in." The meetings at present will be weekly, on Tuesday evening at 7 o'clock. The Post was named after the late ex-President Chester A. Arthur. The following persons were elected officers of the Post: Maj. O. A. Horner, Commander; Samuel N. McNair, Senior Vice-Commander; Harvey G. Winter, Junior Vice-Commander; Joseph W. Davidson, Chaplain; E. C. Wenschhoff, Surgeon; George T. Eyster, Officer of the Day; William A. Fraley, Officer of the Guard; John H. Mentzer, Quartermaster.

PERSONALS.

Commander Eli Frost, of Reynolds' Post, No. 2, G. A. R. of Frederick, and Jno. Q. A. Sands, Chief Mustering Officer G. A. R. of the Department of Maryland, of Baltimore, were in this place on Tuesday and organized Arthur Post, No. 41, G. A. R.

SOME printers grow poetical about this time, in the hope of enlisting needful coin from reluctant purses. Unfortunately for us, though we greatly need the money, we have not the poetical vein, except in so far as a straw cut 13 cents long, and projected along the composition may represent the requisite numbers in feet. But all the same, money paid us now will be duly appreciated and thankfully acknowledged to the heightening of our holiday delights. One at a time however.

THE Washington County Water Company, at Hagerstown, have contracted for the sinking of an artesian well near their reservoir, at Cavetown, in the hope of securing an increase in the supply of water at that point. It is hoped to overcome the deficient supply in times of drought. That people could end all their turmoil on this water question by simply removing to Emmitsburg, we have the best and purest supply that nature gives, and the allowance to persons and animals, &c., is unrestricted the year through.

Fortunate Escape.

The Walkersville Enterprise says that a narrow escape from a fatal accident was made one day last week by Messrs. John Fox, Jacob Geisinger and J. S. Perry, of Walkersville, this county. Fox was employed at Perry's place digging a well. To hasten the progress of his work, he placed a quantity of dynamite at the bottom of a six inch hole, which had been drilled seventy feet below the depth of the old well. Six pounds of the explosive, to which was attached a long fuse, were used. Fox lit the fuse, and stepped back to await the result. The explosion did not occur, and thinking the fuse had been extinguished, he stepped to the well and attempted to draw the charge. As he did so the dynamite exploded, throwing him into the air, and severely bruising and shaking him and Messrs. Geisinger and Perry, who were standing by.

DIED.

FOR THE NEW YEAR.

We are happy to promise our readers a trip to Europe during the coming year, starting on the first of January, which though it cannot be made in person by all or perhaps any of them, can be engaged in the next best way, through the Reminiscences of a young friend, who made the trip during the past summer, in company with two other ladies, and made careful notes of all the interesting places and events by the way, which, on his return were prepared for publication in the EMMITTSBURG CHRONICLE, under the title of "Reminiscences of Travel." As most of our accounts of foreign lands, come from male travelers, there will be something fresh and original in the view of Europe from a woman's standpoint, and our young friend being a close observer, as well as a fluent and graceful writer, our readers will enjoy the "Reminiscences" as they appear from week to week, in place of the usual newspaper story, knowing that the incidents are "Founded on Fact."

Dwelling Burned.

On Monday night last about 12 o'clock the dwelling house owned by Mr. Sampson Kinney and tenanted by his son Mr. Edward Kinney, about one-half mile from Lantz postoffice, was discovered by one of the inmates to be on fire. The family had but time to dress, secure a portion of their clothing and a small part of the furniture. This was one of the best properties in Harbaugh's Valley. It will be better known to some of our readers as the Shultz Mill property.—Clarion.

Agricultural.

A Use for Corn-Cobs.

Deep gullies can be kept out of 'washy' land only by closing the little water-ways, after each heavy rain. Delay makes the work greater, not only because the large gully will require more material, but smaller gullies will form toward it which must be closed, and which make it more difficult to retain obstructions in the larger gully. For closing small water-ways, corn-cobs from the feeding floors serve an excellent purpose. These are usually water-soaked, or soon become so, and then the water will not move them. They do not interfere with plowing or harrowing. The plow or harrow will pass through them and remove very few from their places, to which they can be returned easily. If brush is used it must be stacked down, and either plow or harrow will pull the stakes and brush from their places. If more solid obstructions are opposed to the water, they suffer all the greater from the passage of implements. Many farmers neglect to fill small wash-outs after the fall rains, and, of course, fail to get them filled before the spring freshets begin, and before the washing can be stopped large gullies are formed. If cobs are placed in the wash-outs late in the fall, they will become so compacted and firmly fixed until spring that even the heavy spring rains will not remove them, while the winter thaws will bring enough soil to the water-way to fill the crevices between them, and thus aid in filling the gully.—American Agriculturist for December.

Oiling Boots and Shoes.

The efficacy of oiling depends much upon the way in which it is done. In the evening brush the shoe clean, and then wash it with lukewarm water, rather to moisten than to clean it. Set it where it will dry slowly. It should not be perfectly dry the next morning, when the oil is applied, but feel damp, not wet, however. The best mixture for oiling shoes is made of one-half of neat's-foot oil—be sure you get the genuine article—one-third beef tallow, and one-sixth castor oil. Mix thoroughly over a gentle heat. Depend upon the rubbing rather than the heat to get the oil in—to express it differently, two parts of rubbing to one of heat. If shoes are pegged, as farmers' shoes usually are and always should be, get the oil in well between the uppers and the sole; it will prevent the sole pulling loose, or the leather breaking away from the pegs. Shoes worn at farm work should be oiled at least once a week. It requires only a few minutes to do the work, and it is decidedly profitable labor.—American Agriculturist.

An Injured Foot.

Horses' feet are compelled to travel thro' so many rough places, they are constantly receiving injuries more or less serious. These injuries generally come from thorns splinters, or jagged rocks, but sometimes from calking, by stepping one foot upon the other. In the event of a foreign substance getting in the foot, the remedy is slow work, and a poultice, with sufficient cutting when necessary to loosen the article that makes the trouble. If the injury comes from calking, there must be rest, the horse's system toned up first with mild cathartics, and then sufficient cooling and nourishing food. A liberal pasture is the best possible place for such a patient as that, says the American Agriculturist.

The Journal of Health says to stop bleeding, if from a cavity in the jaw after a tooth has been extracted, shape a cork into the proper form and size to cover the bleeding cavity, and long enough to be kept firmly in place when the mouth is closed. This, we believe, is our own invention, and we have never known it to fail. It has served us in desperate cases.

Some Indian arrow heads were lately shown at the Societe d'Anthropologie which were poisoned with curare over a century ago, but still retain their deadly power. Small animals scratched with them died in half an hour.

Synonyne can be used to advantage in washing bedsteads. Hot alum-water is also good for this purpose.

Remove flower-pot stains from window-sills by rubbing with clean wood ashes and rinse with clean water.

Miscellaneous.

CLAIRVOYANCE IN INDIA.

All who have read Gen. Wallace's 'Fair God' will remember the scene in the underground chamber between the old priest and the little girl. The child is made the instrument through which the fair god's coming is announced, she going into a trance under the priest's influence at the time. Several months ago the general and a number of gentlemen were discussing the supernatural and were elating personal experiences, when some one asked Gen. Wallace where he got the idea for the incident mentioned.

'I was practising law in a small country town in this State, a number of years ago,' said the general, 'and was at work upon the novel during odd moments. I had never paid any attention to clairvoyance and that sort of thing, and scoffed at all who believed that man may have knowledge of what pertains to the other world. There was a tailor living in the town who was exceedingly superstitious. He had frequently invited me to witness some of his manifestations, but I had always refused. One night as I was walking toward home, after having been engaged in some work at my office, I saw a light in the tailor's shop window and something prompted me to stop. My friend and a boy apprentice were at work when I entered. The tailor gave me a chair, and we began talking over mesmeric influence and kindred matters. After a while he asked me if I would care to hear some rappings. I told him to suggest something else, as anybody could make rappings. He then suggested clairvoyance, and I told him to go ahead.

'Now, at this point it is necessary to say that for the following day I had made a business engagement with a farmer who lived near town in an old-fashioned log house. I had driven past the place a number of times, and was familiar with the house and road to it.

'The tailor proceeded with his arrangements by placing the boy on his bench with his face to the wall. The man turned down the lamps in the shop and directed his attention to the little fellow, making passes with his hands around and above him. In a few minutes the boy, who was pale and sickly in appearance, went into a sort of trance and the tailor told me to take hold of one of the little chap's hands and fix my mind on some incident in my life or on some place that I had visited. The farm house I alluded to a moment ago came into my mind at once and I thought of it intently. Almost immediately the boy's lips began moving, and in a loose, disconnected way he described the log house, the roads leading to it, and many little details as they passed through my mind. But after following me for a time he stopped, and then began speaking something of his own volition, or rather that of which I was not thinking. He said that it was night and that the house was dark. And then he said that the door opened, and a man came out carrying a lamp in his hand. He walked out to the hen house and opened the door while he looked into it; then closed the door, returned to the house and all was dark again. At this point the boy seemed to be growing very weak, and I told the tailor to rouse him, which he did by waving his hands in the air.

'I left the shop in a short time, noting the time, which was about 10 o'clock. Next day my farmer client called promptly at the hour which had been set. We went through the business which was to be attended to, and as he started to go I asked him where he had been at 10 o'clock the previous night. He was surprised at the question, but answered that he supposed he was asleep. I told him to think about it for a minute.

'Oh, yes,' he said presently, 'I remember now. There was an animal of some kind causing a disturbance in my hen house, and I got up just about that time to see what the matter was. Everything had quieted down when I got there, and I returned to the house.'

'I told the story to my client, who was greatly interested,' the general said in conclusion, 'and the incident made such an impression upon my mind that I wove it into the story.'—Indian Dis-Sentinel.

'At all events,' said a young doctor, as he heard of another one of his patients' death, 'I can take life easy, if I am poor.'—Life.
