THE CENTENNIAL ENDED.

The demonstration in Philadelphia in honor of the Centennial anniversary of the promulgation of the Federal Constitution closed on Saturday evening last, having proved successful beyond the most sanguine expectations of its projectors, just as the Constitution itself has worked out results infinitely beyond the conceptions of its illustrious founders. The celebration was grand in conception, and as regards the numbers of persons present, estimated at 600,000 strangers; the glory of its pageantry and the enthusiasm of the crowds throughout, has never been equalled in the country. Every thing passed off in due order, and to the satisfaction of the officials engaged; and as if by miraculous intervention, without accident among the myriads who were present or took part in the processions. The weather too was propitious, and altogether the occasion will become historical, as one of the grandest celebrations of its glorious record.

The one thought conspicuous above all others that illustrates the occasion is the fixed and ineradicable devotion of the people to the form of government that has been handed down to us from the Fathers. Embodying as they did the tried and approved will of the people, they as if by supernatural direction gave expression to principles which deriving their power from the inner consciousness of the Citizens, composed a body of organic law, designed to meet the unfolding of its inner life. The Constitution therefore appeared as the protector of the infant republic containing the elements of its ever growing influence to govern and preserve its possible expansion.

Such influence as it has manifested the world has never elsewhere witnessed. The few States in existence at the time of its promulgation were hemmed in by the Atlantic Ocean on the one side, and towering mountains on the others, with no prospect to the most sanguine hopes for future enlargement. But with the veil of a Century uplifted, we behold the mountain ranges cut down, or tunneled, and with the Pacific Ocean for the Western limit, the Continent with its Thirteen original States has expanded into Thirty-eight States, embracing every species of production that human wants can require, which are being cultivated with all the energy and perseverance that the money, the skilled labor, and improved machinery of the age can direct.

As therefore the genius of our institutions is peculiar in its origin, and has been peculiar in its development; embracing the interests of all peoples, protecting all who come under its power, with such beneficence in its authority as to oppress none, the inference is clear from this celebration that our people have again ratified the work of the Fathers, and have resolved anew that that work shall go forward in the order of its original spirit, calling to the nations to come and enjoy the benefits of the Asylum provided for the oppressed and the hopeful of all climes.

Those who have been educated under the contemplative spirit that too often crops out amidst the oppressions of European governments and coming here, find our freedom affording a convenient opportunity to put into practice, the spirit that has long rankled in their bosoms at home, the Socialists, Anarchists, Dynamiters and their kindred evil plotters, must learn once for all, that they have been mistaken in their aims, and must pay the penalty which defiance of Law will surely bring upon them.

The field for work is boundless, and the prosperity that opens to honest endeavor invites to cultivation, but everywhere emblazoned is the sentiment that the basis of liberty is—Law and Order.

The nomination of the Republican convention of Maryland, of August 24th, have all formally accepted, and entered upon the work of the Campaign.

GEN. WILLIAM PRESTON died at his home in Lexington, Ky., on Wednesday, in the 81st year of his age. He graduated in law at Harvard in the Class of '38, and began the practice of his profession in Louisville, 1840. He served a term in the House of Representatives and two terms in Congress. Under President Buchanan's administration he ably served as Minister to Spain.

THE EQUINOX ON LAND AND SEA.

The New York Herald under the above caption, says:

The autumnal equinox arrives this week, and all the weather conditions on land and sea undergo important modifications. There is a popular notion that the sun's crossing the Equator is an event always celebrated by the outburst of an equinoctial storm. Though there is much reason to question whether this is a sound weather rule in all localities, modern meteorological researches leave no doubt that the equinoctial season, covering the last half of September and the first half of October, is one of immense atmospheric disturbances. It is a matter of little moment whether the precise day put down in the calendar as the autumnal equinox is stormy at any particular spot on the globe. But it is highly important, especially to the meteorologist and the mariner, to consider the influence of the sun's withdrawal from the northern to the southern hemisphere, and to determine the effect of this astronomical event upon the meteorology of the continents and oceans.

And then with the help of nicely drawn charts, proceeds to discuss the subject at length.

Years ago, Prof. Joseph Henry said in effect, that the talk of equinoctial storms was a delusion, that the period of time indicated was no more subject to storms than any other.

Since the above enunciation, we have observed in the course of the rolling years, the correctness of the view. We have autumnal, winter, spring and summer storms, but none peculiar to a given time in any season. It was well therefore to relieve the popular mind of a false impression that has been proven, and which any one's observation may further verify to be misleading and wrong.

The Herald has well shown that the position of the sun being changed from the perpendicular to the tangential relation to the earth, gives rise to meteorological conditions which the cooler temperature induces, and brings about the autumnal storms. These it is known vary in time often many weeks, and they come with an intensity at times that seems unprecedented, to be followed by the calm periods of October and November, denominated "the calm before the storm"—the advent of winter.

It is of course proper to speak of autumnal storms, but not to call them equinoctial.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND delivered three short addresses at the Centennial on Saturday last. The first was on the formation of the Constitution, the difficulties involved, the overruling Providence attending, its sufficiency for the past argues its sufficiency for future needs, and concluded:

Another centennial day will come and millions yet unborn will inquire concerning our stewardship and the safety of their Constitution. God grant that they may find it unimpaired; and, as we rejoice in the patriotism and devotion of those who lived a hundred years ago, so may others who follow us rejoice in our fidelity, and in our jealous love for constitutional liberty.

The second was at the Hibernian banquet at St. George's Hall in response to the toast—"The Constitution of the United States."

The third was at the banquet in the Academy by the University of Pennsylvania, the Pennsylvania Historical Society, and others. In the last named, he emphasized the position of the President as being the servant of the people, who are the rulers. He spoke of the atmosphere surrounding "nearest to the events and scenes which marked the birth of American institutions."

"The first Continental Congress and the Constitutional convention met here, and Philadelphia still has in her keeping Carpenter's Hall, Independence Hall and its bell and the grave of Franklin."

The President was in his happiest mood and gave expression to his thoughts in that felicitous manner which always enables him to lay hold of the salient points of a subject, and to impress them with force, and the deepest interest upon his hearers.

FATHER ALBINO MAGNO, who has just died at the monastery of the Order of Passionists, at West Hoboken, N. J., was the most prominent member of the Order of Passionists in the United States. He was born in Naples in 1816, and early inclined to a religious life. Finding the career of a secular priest too narrow for him, at 19 he joined the Order of Passionists and entered the monastery of Pagliano. Immediately after his ordination he entered upon his missionary career, journeying through Italy, France, Spain and other parts of Europe, and came to this country in 1852.

WASHINGTON GOSSIP.

Special to the Emmitsburg Chronicle.

The management of the Patent office building is giving great dissatisfaction not only to the employees of the office but to those inventors who come to the city and find that their business has been delayed by the constant changing of rooms, and the crowding of the examining corps into inadequate quarters.

This immense building is owned by you might say by inventors, and they have at this time to their credit in the Treasury Department about three million dollars.

This office is the only self-sustaining one under the Government, and yet it is the most meanly treated. It is under direct charge of the Secretary of the Interior, but we have had no Secretary so far who could sufficiently divert his attention from politics and other duties to give this important office its dues.

Very few persons and not many even interested in Patents stop to think of the vastness of the good which the Patent system has been and is liable to be to the country at large. There is more capital invested in Patents, patent machinery, and the general products of machinery, and processes the results of inventors brains than in almost all of the other industries combined. See the millions of dollars invested in the telegraph, in the telephone, in the printing press, in railroads and steamboats, and in agricultural machinery and implements to say nothing of thousands of things which have been developed by inventors. Almost everything that we eat or wear and almost every convenience and comfort we have in life is to be traced to the efforts of the inventor. Yet the Government practically ignores him in many ways. He is not considered a factor in politics as the soldier is. Congressmen have been vying with each other as to who could vote the most millions to soldiers. On the contrary they are not willing to give to inventors the benefit of the surplus they have and which is constantly increasing. They are scattered and pay no attention to politics or politicians—therefore the treatment they receive. I knew a member of Congress several years ago who wanted to see the whole patent system abolished because he considered himself treated abruptly by a clerk in the office who did not know who he was and consequently was liable not to recognize his importance or the stupendousness of the occasion.

With such representatives we have but little to expect from Congress. Apathy and politics are what stand in the way of inventors and progress.

Offerings of four and a-half per cent. bonds to the amount of $5,175,000 were opened at the office of the Secretary of the Treasury this week. Prices ranged from 107.98 to 110 for registered, and from 107.98 to 109 for coupon bonds. Of the above sum proposals were accepted to the amount of $4,199,900.

Exports of Breadstuffs.—The exports of wheat flour for August amounted to 1,144,490 barrels, valued at $5,278,318. For the same month last year the exports were 675,824 barrels, valued at $4,495,721. MARRIAGE NOTICES.

As the outgrowth of the communistic teachings, the loose notions about divorce, and such like tendencies that have advanced, with the Socialism so progressive since the close of the civil war, it has become quite common to read marriage notices, representing that Mr. so and so and Miss — were married.

We have heretofore remarked upon the point, and again allude to it as a custom that has grown in the way of imitation, as fashions are copied, and apart from any consideration, in most cases, of its real bearing which we insist is subversive of the true idea of marriage. The term marriage is derived from the Latin mas, a male. In the sacred record it is said "Male and female created he them," and God sent them forth with the command "Be ye faithful and multiply and replenish the earth and subdue it," the way ordained for its development.

It can thus be comprehended that the man is the true mate to the woman; he is maled to her; and etymologically there is no and in the case. Physiologically, anatomically and in every respect the headship of the family belongs to the husband, and the true glory of the woman is the due recognition of the fact. The native weakness of the female, finds its support and security in man's greater physical strength, and every tendency to depreciate his position, is but to lower the high dignity of the conjugal relationship.

The Oft Told Story

Of the peculiar medicinal merits of Hood's Sarsaparilla is fully confirmed by the voluntary testimony of thousands who have tried it. Peculiar in the combination, proportion, and preparation of its ingredients, peculiar in the extreme care with which it is put up, Hood's Sarsaparilla accomplishes cures where other preparations entirely fail. Peculiar in the unequalled good name it has made at home, which is a "tower of strength abroad," peculiar in the phenomenal sales it has attained.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Is the most popular and successful medicine before the public today for purifying the blood, giving strength, creating an appetite. "I suffered from weakness and low spirits, and also had eczema on the back of my head and neck, which was very annoying. Snyder, Pottsville, Penn.

From the Catoctin Clarion.

On a very dark night last week, Mr. Frank Heeson, in driving down the mountain, got off the road and upset his brand-new buggy. Very slight injury was done and nobody hurt.

On Monday afternoon last, a six-year-old child of Mr. Thomas Brice, residing at the Ore Bank, one mile south of this place, in the absence of his father and mother, got the coal oil can, which was full of oil, and held an ignited match to the spout of the can. The oil exploded and was thrown in a burning sheet all over the child. It was burned from head to foot, into a crisp. The fire was smothered by parties attracted by the report of the explosion and the screams of the child. It lived about an hour.

The mother had taken her husband's dinner to the furnace, when the accident occurred. This should serve as a warning to those parents who, in the presence of children, use coal oil to start the fire.

Matches and coal oil should not be kept where the children can get them.

Useful and Hurtful Medicines.

There is a certain class of remedies for constipation absolutely useful. There are bismuths and potions made in great part of podophyllin, aloes, rhubarb, gamboge, and other worthless ingredients. The damage they do to the stomachs of those who use them is incalculable. They evacuate the bowels, it is true, but always do so violently and profusely, and besides, gripe the bowels. Their effect is to weaken both them and the stomach. Better far to use the agreeable and salutary aperient, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, the laxative effect of which is never preceded by pain, or accompanied by a convulsive, violent action of the bowels. On the contrary, it induces a regular, easy, and comfortable evacuation of the bowels, and cures and prevents malarial fevers, no medicine can compare with it, and it remedies nervous debility, rheumatism, kidney and bladder inactivity, and other inorganic ailments.

School Commissioners Meeting.

At the meeting of the County School Commissioners on Tuesday, it was decided to exchange Cornell's Geography, now in use, for Appleton's New Geography, and Brook's Arithmetic, now in use, for White's Arithmetic. It was also decided that all scholars who are using their own books may exchange them for the new ones.

The scholars of the Public Schools will be admitted to the County Fair on Wednesday and Thursday, October 12 and 13, for 10 cents each, on presenting a certificate from their teacher.

Death of Mrs. Maria Flohr.

Mrs. Maria, wife of Mr. John Flohr, of this place, died on Sunday night last, at an advanced age. About 36 hours before her death she suffered from an attack of paralysis and from this never rallied. The deceased had been more or less an invalid for several years, but through all maintained a strong will and energy and would at times be strong enough to attend her church, of which she was a devoted member, ardently pious, she died a devoted Christian. The funeral took place on Tuesday; her remains were interred in the hill cemetery. She had attained the age of 82 years, 11 months and 10 days.—Clarion, Sep. 15.

A Good Man Deceased.

Rev. George H. Martin, D. D., died suddenly at Timberville, Rockingham County, Va., at 10 o'clock on Sunday night, September 18, 1887. He was born near Stony Branch, about three miles from Emmitsburg, in 1815, and was a son of the late John Martin. He was reared on his father's farm, doing his part in its work until about his eighteenth year, when he entered the High School of the Reformed church, at York, Pa., where he pursued the course of a classical education, and on the removal of the school to Mercersburg in 1836, where it became Marshall College, he was among the number of its earliest students and a member of the second graduating class, and for a time acted as Tutor in the Institution, whilst pursuing his Theological studies in the Seminary, and on the completion of his course, located in Virginia, first at Lovettsville, Loudoun county, where he remained for many years, and for twenty years succeeding the Civil war, ministered in Woodstock. Thus his long course of usefulness found its most congenial field of exercise in the State where he first settled, and continued except for a year or more at Burkittsville, Md. Dr. Martin was a man of excellent native talents and was highly educated, he was always edifying and eloquent in the delivery of his sermons, and was everywhere beloved by all who knew him.

Don't Worry.

It is useless to anticipate trouble; results rarely fit the preconceived conditions. All the talk about a severe winter to come is idle. He who holds the winds in the hollow of his hands alone knows what may be. Our concern is to be ready for the journey, with the house in order, fuel, clothing, &c., provided we can calmly await the future and meet its demands as they arise.

Woman's Christian Temperance Union Convention.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Frederick County held a Convention in Frederick on Thursday last, September 15th. Delegates from Monrovia, Urbana, Woodstock, Adamstown, Buckeystown, Burkittsville, Liberty and Middletown were present, and both the morning and afternoon sessions were exceedingly interesting. Mrs. Dr. Riley was unavoidably detained, but Mrs. L. A. Black, State Organizer, was present and addressed the Convention. One important action taken was the appointment of a committee to draw up resolutions, requesting the managers of our Frederick County Fair to prohibit the sale of liquors on the grounds. This petition will go to them rich with the warm and sincere prayers of all temperance people for its success. And He, who rules all things, will in His own good time bring about the desired effect.

In the Peach Belt.

The Hagerstown Globe of last Friday says:—"In three days last week Mr. Mitchell Stover shipped one thousand bushels of peaches from his orchards at Edgemont. Some varieties brought as high as $4 per bushel, but the average price obtained was $2.50. It costs 40 cents per bushel to market them. Mr. Stover has sixty acres of peach orchard in bearing condition and his neighbor and relative, Mr. Nicodemus, has one hundred acres in peaches. Mr. Stover until a few years ago resided near Greencastle, and having several thousand young trees for which he had no sale he planted them on a portion of Mr. Nicodemus' land to cultivate on the shares. In this way the discovery was made that portions of the mountain side were suited to peach culture and of much more value than limestone farms in the valley. It is said that Mr. Stover will have ten thousand bushels of peaches the present season alone, and any one looking over his sixty acres of peach orchard will not greatly question the statement. He has late varieties which will not be ripe for several weeks yet and will command high prices.

"Hem! yes didn't leave ye anything, did he?"

"Nothing, I came to try and get in office."

"Office, ha? Well, I dunno. Passed the civil service?"

"Not yet, but I am ready to do so as soon as possible. Oh! Mr. Jimpson, I must get in; my mother is dependent on me, and there seems to be nothing else."

"Look here, young lady, don't you cry; I ain't been in but since since last March, an' I'm a little green yet, but I know there's thousands of 'em wanting office, an' none of 'em resignin' and few being turned out. But John Leroy was kind to me when I came in here, a stranger, an' if I can—mind I say if—you shall just get the best clerkship a goin'."

Go on home, now, an' be all ready to pass, an' if I don't try for ye, my name ain't T. Jefferson Jimpson, and a copious stream of tobacco followed the words.

"Mr. Jimpson, I've been in Washington two weeks, and I've talked to lots of papa's friends and acquaintances, but yours are the first words of real sympathy and kindness I've had. Thank you for them."

"Never your mind about thanks, ma'am, what we want's office. Look in again in a day or two. Good-bye."

And blinded with tears Alice groped her way out, not without hearing the gurgle of a strong smelling liquid before she reached the door. Her next move was to give up her room at the boarding house and take a small one where lodgers only were taken, then she rented an oil stove and made arrangements to cook her own breakfast and lunch and buy her dinner at one of the cheap restaurants so common in Washington. Then she felt that she was really settled, for she knew now that she would have to wait many weary months, and her stock of money was small and no more would come until she earned it. Then she found out the isolation of a great city, the place had always seemed full of people whom she knew, but now that she no longer received or attended receptions, she never seemed to meet any one she knew. Some few acquaintances she passed on the avenue or saw in church, but they bowed uncertainly, not having heard of her presence in town and fearing a mistake. Other men had become bankrupt or died since John Leroy, the nine days wonder, was not only over but forgotten.

Col. Tallet came to see Alice and encouraged her. One day he brought her a geranium which made a fine show in her one window. When she saw it Alice thought with a dull pain of the heliotrope in the sitting room at home. Once or twice the Colonel took her for a Sunday afternoon walk through the squares or out to Oak Hill. He confided to her that he provided for an invalid sister and had to deny himself the comforts she needed there. No other visitors came.

She went to see Mr. Jimpson. When he could receive her he revived her drooping hopes. "Pass the exam., and all's right," he said.

The awful day came at last, a sunny, spring-like day, but with sharp winds lying in wait in the broad squares and sweeping unexpectedly round the corners. The sun shone gaily in at the windows and fell on the pale faces of the men and women who sat in the room. On one side of Alice was an elderly lady who told her that she had three grandchildren to support and was the widow of a Chief Justice of a Western State. On the other side sat a pretty young woman with a hard, highly colored face and fussy golden locks. She said she was from near Boston, and was tired of teaching little imps to read and write, and meant to get in it if it took a year. "But it won't," she said. "I know the ropes, I've a sister in office."

"I thought two members of the same family could not hold office," said Alice timidly.

"Baby, that's all you know. My sister's a widow, different name, and appointed from another State. Who'll know. Good joke on Uncle Sam, I say."

The hours went by, awful hours to Alice whose brain seemed numb and her memory slipping away from her. Once or twice she feared to fall to weeping, to give it up and steal from the room, as other white-faced women had already done, but still her pen went on and the clock seemed ticking in her head.

The woman in black went slowly and painfully yet steadily on, and the high-colored girl sometimes whispered a question as to the spelling of a word. She had some notes on her cuffs which seemed to help her. At last it was all over, and Alice crept home faint and dizzy, and fearful of the consequences. When the time was up she went to see Jimpson. He was in committee meeting; the next time he was doing white honors to some constituents. At last she saw him:

"Well, here you are, ma'am, did pretty well, didn't ye? Better'n I expected. Got some good stuff in ye. Between you and me I don't know as I could pass it myself. Lucky it ain't necessary for a congressman, ain't it?"

Alice smiled. "I'm so glad I did pretty well. Shall I get in soon?"

"Soon, well I guess not. Lots of folks in a head of you. Now you go home an' wait, an' I'll make myself such a nuisance to them fellows, that they'll put ye in just to get shut of me. Just you go home an' wait, a big envelope'll be comin' for ye some of these days."

So Alice went home and waited, waited while spring came to Washington with blinding sun and merciless winds with enervating heat and lurking malaria. Her whilom friends trooped off to Old Point for rest and recuperation. By and by some of them came back for a bit of Lenten gaiety, then they too melted away; but Alice waited in her little room and hoarded the small sum of money left to her. At times she was tempted to give it up, but for those appealing letters from her mother and Col. Tallet's gentle sympathy.

At last only a few dollars remained. She had been doing all her own cooking for days and stinting herself of necessary food, but even this she could not do for many more days, and then what should she do? Finally, after a sleepless night and scanty breakfast, she determined to see Mr. Jimpson once more though he had promised that she should know at once if news came, for it was the long session and June still found him at his desk. Alice seemed all at once to have sunk into utter despair. She even thought of the river as an end to it all.

"But for mama," she whispered as she wearily walked the long squares between home and his office, a black shadow in the late June sunshine. In one of the squares she paused to rest, but the scent of the heliotrope drove her on again. Yes, the Representative was at home and would see her. The room seemed fuller than ever of brandy and tobacco smoke.

"Well, here ye are, Miss Leroy. Come to be congratulated, have ye?"

"Congratulations. I—I don't understand."

"Haven't got your appointment yet? Well, it's all right. I was just going to let you know. They told me so this morn', a nine hundred dollar clerkship. Bless my soul! for Alice fell at his feet in a dead faint.

Presently she was conscious of awkward hands at work at her, and something falling on her face that was not water or cologne.

"Poor child!" said a rough voice. "Their Civil Service has a high killed her. Civil Service indeed, Unclev Service I call it, that let's women starve while they're waitin' for work. You tell 'em I said so, Jimpson, do you hear?"

And then Alice opened her eyes, to find a stout woman with a red face and a purple velvet dress, bending over her, petting her like a child.

"Never your mind, my dear. It's all right now, and you're comin' right home with Jimpson and me, an' I'll send for your poor ma, and you shall both stay till you're fixed in a little home o' your own—I don't care what that stuck-up English butler says about it."

"Ah! yes we do, Melindy, but I don't. I'll make it all right with him. You take her right along."

So Alice went home with the washer-woman's daughter, and was treated like a royal princess by her. Then Mrs. Leroy came too, and they found a nice little house on Capitol Hill, and took in Colonel Tallet as a boarder, and the Jimpsons went home for the summer.

"So Alice got in office, and her salary will one day be a thousand dollars a year, while the man at the next desk receives twelve hundred for the same work."

J. O. RUDEKE, a Washington Territory farmer, owned a Holstein bull worth $500, which was a little inclined to be cross. It got into the yard one day last week and Mr. Rudeke, intending to frighten the animal, loaded up his shotgun with an extra charge of powder and a large wad of paper. Then, planting himself squarely in front of his bullship, he let drive short range. When the smoke of battle cleared away the bull was lying on the ground as dead as Julius Caesar.

SPEAKING of pictures, a friend of ours took her four-year-old girl to a photographer. The child couldn't be made to sit still. He of the camera was as suave as could be, and worked every device of gentle persuasion to make the little wriggler sit still. Finally he said to the despairing mother:

"Madam, if you will leave the little dear alone with me a few minutes I think I can succeed."

The mother had scarcely withdrawn when she was summoned back by the triumphant photographer, who exhibited a satisfactory negative. When they reached home the mother asked:

"Nellie, what did the man say to you when I left you alone with him?"

"He said, 'Nippid, Nellie, this child, you damn little rascal, or I'll shake you!'—Buffalo Express.
