J. C. ANNAN.

A RUKAL CHURCH.

BY HORATIO NELSON POWERS.

Nesting mid vines and leafage, where the lawn

Slopes toward a softly-lingering valley stream,

The little church hides, like a soul withdrawn

From the world's noise to worship and to dream.

Simple the cool gray pile, embowered in green,

With every charm that modesty can yield,

As one of winning face and artless mien

Is lovelier still with features half concealed.

Near by are sumptuous hills, and lordly trees;

Their summits crown and fringe the pools below,

Where, under their majestic canopies,

Daisies and golden-hearted lilies blow

It is the Sabbath, and the summer morn

Is sweet with flowers, and birds, and new-mown hay,—

As if a spirit breathed, and life new born

Blossomed in all that glorifies the day.

Within, the church is redolent with blooms

Fresh from the fields whose orisons they bear:

God's peace is on them, and their smile relumes

The hopes of hearts awary with their care.

O sacred hour! the vain world far away!

Doth He not hear who marks the sparrow's fall?

How good it seems in this dear place to stay,

Musing on Love that filleth all in all!

Sometimes, in concert with the sacred song,

A thrush's trill floats in upon the air;

Sometimes, a breeze wafts, with its sweets, along

The purer fragrance of the breath of prayer.

Sometimes, upon the open window's sill

Poises, among the flowers, a butterfly

And on a homed banquet takes its fill;

Then, like a spirit, passes to the sky.

The brook sings on; the fragrant treecrops stir;

Bees softly hum; a plaintive dove is heard;

But, to the rapt and happy worshipper,

All that is sweet accentuates the Word.

Discordant notes or dulcet tones may come—

It is enough that One beloved is near;

Lips that tell not His loveliness are dumb

To those who breathe this heavenly atmosphere.

And now the bread is broken, now the cup

Of blessing is received with grateful tears,

And souls that languish now are lifted up—

The peerless beauty of the Christ appears!

THE OLDEST MONUMENT IN AMERICA.

[The following is taken from a newspaper clipping which was handed to us some time ago by Miss Helen J. Rowe, principal of the Samuel Ready Orphan Asylum.]

The oldest monument in the United States is that yet standing about 100 yards north of Boundary Avenue, facing Broadway, on the grounds of the Samuel Ready Asylum, Baltimore. It is a plain shaft, terminating in a point, being an exact prototype of the great Washington Monument, the dedication of which was performed on the 21st of February, 1885, with elaborate ceremonies at the National Capital. The material of which the monument was constructed was probably bricks, covered with some sort of impervious cement, capable of withstanding the ravages of time much better than marble or brownstone, or any of the modern materials used for building purposes. At a distance the shaft has the appearance of marble. On one side, deeply engraven, is the inscription:

CHRIS. COLUMBUS.

MDCLXXXIV.

Tradition has handed down somewhat imperfectly and in an unsatisfactory manner, the history of this ancient monument, and only the outlines of the story can now be gathered. It was erected in 1784—104 years ago—by General De Amador, who was then the French Consul for Maryland and Virginia. On the 12th of October in that year it was dedicated to the discoverer of America with appropriate ceremonies. Immediately after the landing of Lord Cornwallis at Yorktown the French army, under the command of Count de Rochambeau, came to Baltimore in boats, and thence marched to New York by land. Some 500 of the soldiers whose time had expired settled in and around the town. While the French remained here they quartered one division near General Howard's residence, about where the Cathedral now stands, while the cavalry of the Duke de Sanzan fixed themselves at the house lately owned by the McKims, on the eminence near the old York road at its intersection with Harford avenue, or, as it was formerly known, Britton street.

A widely-extended and popular French organization during that period was the "Sociedad Latino-Americano," the purpose of which was the perpetuation of the name of Columbus and the memory of his discoveries. The society met regularly at the home of Consul De Amador, on the site of the Samuel Ready Asylum, and the monument was planned and erected in furtherance of that aim. It was about 30 feet in height and 8 feet square at the base, and it is evident from the materials used that it was designated more for posterity than for that generation. The Consul's house was a pleasantly-situated chateau, surrounded by extensive, well-laid-out grounds, plentifully planted in shrubbery, and the monument stood in plain view from the window of the dining-room, where, no doubt, many a toast was quaffed by the gay soldiers to the memory of Columbus. In 1797 the consul disposed of his estate, which he had purchased in 1783 from Dr. Von Wyck, to Thomas Tennant, a wealthy merchant, and the latter, after a period, sold it to Colonel Samuel McClean, who, in his turn, transferred it to Zenos Barnum, from whom it was purchased by the trustees of the Samuel Ready Asylum. The original house was burned in 1808, and that erected by Colonel Tennant was likewise consumed by fire in 1841. The stable and outhouses met the same fate in 1860.

For many years after the departure of General De Amador the monument was practically hidden from public notice, by reason of its secluded position, and at one time it was almost entirely surrounded by a thicket of woods. Indeed, it was never visible except to persons passing along the public road to Towson, then called "Brown's Lane," and when, in 1798, the Harford road was opened, Brown's lane was closed, thus completely isolating the shaft. The grounds were never thrown open to the public until 1862, when the trees were cut down, thus exposing the monument to view. It was often said by uninformed persons after this that it had been built to commemorate a favorite horse of the consul, and this story some years ago gained currency, but was without any foundation.

On the Framing of Pictures.

The framing of engravings is a matter of great nicety. Firstly, the margin should be cut to suit the size of the

To reduce all salaries and construct all expenditures to the narrowest limits means to get meagre officials, and imperfect service when the people desire the best. We will pay well therefore, rather than see their affairs neglected. They do not wish to save at the spigot whilst the bung discharges freely.

P. S.—Since the above has been in type we learn through the Frederick Citizen, that our county delegation in the Legislature favors extending the same pay to the present Sheriff as his predecessor received.

Representative Cram's joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution, changing the time for the assembling of Congress, is considered by the House Committee on Election of President Vice President, and will be favorably reported to the House. A new article which it is proposed to submit to the State Legislature substitutes the 31st day of December, at noon, for the 4th of March as the commencement and termination of the official term of members of the House of Representatives and requires Congress to assemble at least once in each year on the first Monday in January.
