THE DINNER HORN.

By W. F. DUMAS, Emory College, Monticello, Georgia.
When lazy diads point to noon,
And clocks are chiming out the hour;
When stable Phyllis' gins to croon,
And pigeons nod upon the tower.
Black Tom, beneath the spreading tree
That shades the pleasant farm-house yard,
Looks out across the shimmering lea,
And blows the bugle long and hard.
Blow, bugler! let the echoes float
The fields and woodland slopes along,
Till every wild but mellow note
Bursts on the distant hills in song.
Sound thro' the valleys, cool and green,
Where twirling brooklets purr and creep;
Sound where the nodding flowers are seen,
And wake the poppy from its sleep!
Where cattle drink by shady streams,
Where wave the yellow fields of wheat,
Where plow-boys drive their sweating
teams,
Send out thy notes prolonged and sweet.
The lab'rer casts aside his hoe,
The horse, delighted, gins to neigh;
What says the bugle, well they know,
Although it speaks a mile away:
"Come to the cool and dripping well,
And at its mossy curb-stone kneel,
And lave thy sweaty face a spell,
And eat the simple noonday meal."
There's cider from the oaken press,
Hid in the cellar dark and old;
There's many a sweet you can not guess,
There's tempting cream the hue of gold.
Sing loud, sing with all thy power,
And let thy last note be the best;
Thou hast announced the golden hour,
The noonday's hour of drowsy rest.
O bugle of the good old days,
For ever silent in the South,
Poor Tom has grown too weak to raise
Unto his lips thy mellow mouth,
No darkey of the younger brood,
Tho' he should blow his lungs away.
I can send afoot, o'er field and wood,
The note that he was wont to play.
The songs the red-lipped maidens sing
Along my pulses bound and thrill;
They charm, but no such pictures bring
As that old bugle on the hill.
I seem again with blushing June
To stand amid the fields of corn,
We've'er thro' languid airs of noon,
I hear the distant bugle horn.
And, oh, I sigh for boyhood's time,
For our old homestead on the hill,
And for the drowsy drowning rhyme,
Sung by the busy water mill.
The cherry's blood was richer then,
The peach was of a deeper hue,
And I have wondered if again
The skies can ever be so blue.
Ah! could I be again a boy,
And could I be where I was born,
I'd kiss thy lips with rapt joy,
And hug thee, battered bugle-horn.

ing the fact that White and Miller swore that they would kill Peters, but that they were overheard to declare that they would drown him. They were held over and were indicted by the Grand Jury.
When the case came up before Judge Quirk, of the Circuit Court, some of the ablest lawyers in the State were in attendance, for White and Miller were not friendless, and, moreover, they were not without means.
After more than a week of skirmishing a jury was impanelled and then the great trial was begun. The majority of the people, including the press, a four-column folio set in small pica and printed in the back room of P. B. Whitson's cross-roads store, believed that a verdict of guilty would be rendered, and bets were made with persons who believed that the prisoners were guilty but who thought that the jury might be "oustered."
The trial had not proceeded far when it could be clearly seen that the Judge was convinced that White and Miller were guilty. This jurist was something more than a peculiar old fellow. He was a decided character, and so set were his opinions when once formed that no argument and no proof could change them.
"Gentlemen of the jury," said the Judge, when all the testimony had been heard, "I don't think that it is necessary to go into an argument concerning this case. The guilt of these men is so clear that it would be a criminal act to waste the county's money in prolonging this trial. Now, prisoners, the best thing you can do is to confess your guilt and throw yourselves upon the mercy of this Court. Have you any confession to make, Mr. White?"
"No, Your Honor, except that I am innocent."
"Have you any confession, Mr. Miller?"
"None, except to say that I had nothing to do with the killing of our friend Peters."
"All right," said the Judge. "I see that you do not desire any mercy. But if you expect to escape punishment by making a prolonged fight, let me tell you that you will meet with nothing but disappointment. I have made up my mind. I am determined that you are guilty, and nothing on earth can change me. Gentlemen of the jury, you may retire and agree upon a verdict."
The jury without leaving the box rendered a verdict of guilty.
"Gentlemen," said the Judge, "to expedite matters and thereby save expense to the county, I will sentence these men now. The law may be in favor of delay, but justice is not. The law might permit the sheriff to take these men to jail and feed them, at the county's expense, until some distant day of execution should arrive, but justice, the one bright flower in our great judiciary garden of weeds, looks up and says: 'No, Mr. Sheriff, these men must be hanged forthwith; so take them out, when the death sentence has been passed, and hang them to the most convenient tree. Prisoners at the bar, stand up and receive your sentence.'"
The prisoners stood up, and just as the Judge had pronounced the last words of the sentence the wife of Mr. Peters uttered a shout and, bounding towards the door, threw her arms around a man who had just entered the court-room. A wild commotion followed.
"What's the matter?" the Judge demanded. "Who is the man that the bereaved widow is hugging?"
"I ain't no bereaved widow, Judge," the woman answered, "for this is my husband, safe and well."
"Silence, woman," the Judge demanded. "You ought to have better sense than to interrupt this Court."
"Your Honor," said a lawyer, "I suppose my clients can now go free."
"And why so, sir?"
"Can Your Honor ask such a question when Mr. Peters stands here before you?"
"Who is Mr. Peters?"

"Your Honor, I cannot understand you."
"But you will pretty soon. The Mr. Peters that this Court has taken into consideration is dead."
"No, I'm not!" exclaimed Peters, stepping forward.
"You may think you are not, Mr. Peters, but you are. Never in all my professional career," the Judge continued, "have I ever seen facts that so clearly and strongly establish the guilt of two men."
"But, Judge," Peters pleaded, "that cannot be, for no murder has been committed."
"Mr. Peters, you have not examined the evidence as closely as I have."
"But here I stand in refutation of all evidence."
"Mr. Peters, you have not read as many text-books on evidence as I have. The case against these prisoners is perfectly clear. They swore that they would drown you, and your coat was found near the river. Is not that strong evidence?"
"Yes, but—"
"Hold on. The body of a man was taken from the river and identified as your remains."
"But I am here to refute the identification."
"Ah, you are here to throw an obstruction in the way of justice, are you! I have heard on several occasions that you are a man who has very little respect for the decision of a court. And you have come around here to bully me, and that, too, in the face of the strongest evidence that was ever brought before a court of justice. Mr. Sheriff, issue a bench warrant of arrest for this man on the grounds of contempt of court, and then proceed with the hanging. This Court, blind as it is to everything but justice and the true form of law, is getting tired of being browbeaten."

The Judge was Determined

BOUND TO HANG THE PRISONERS WITHOUT DELAY.
It Made No Difference to His Honor Whether the Murdered Man Was Dead or Not, the Innocent Men Were Guilty—Why Poor Peters Was in Contempt.
One of the most sensational legal complications that has ever aroused the interest of a law-abiding neighborhood was the outgrowth of a trial recently held before Judge B. W. Quirk, of the Hickory Flat Circuit. The circumstances told, are as follows:
One John Peters, a sober and industrious man, failed to come home one night. This occurrence was so unusual that his wife, becoming alarmed, aroused the neighborhood; and men, women and children turned out in a general search. The next day John Peters's coat was found near the river bank. Marks of a struggle were also discovered. Immediately there arose a cry that the man had been murdered; and, about this time, there came along a reputable citizen who declared that he had, several days before, heard Sim White and Al Miller swear that they would kill Peters.
The two men were arrested and taken before a Justice of the Peace. They avowed their innocence, and their lawyer declared that they could not be held for murder until it was proved that a murder had been committed. This proof was not long wanting, for a fisherman soon arrived with the information that he had found the body of Peters. The body was identified and the preliminary trial proceeded, resulting not only in establish-

WITNESS AND JUDGE.
Divinity Does Not Hedge a Squire in Maine.
An amusing scene was recently enacted in a country court room in Maine. The trial Justice, a big, pompous official, with a voice like a trombone, took it upon himself to examine a witness, a little withered old man, whose face was as red and wrinkled as a smoked herring.
"What is your name?" asked the Justice.
"Wy, Squire," said the astonished witness, "you know my name as well as I know yours."
"Never you mind what I know, or what I don't know," was the caution given with magisterial severity. "I ask the question in my official capacity and you're bound to answer it under oath."
With a contemptuous snort the witness gave his name, and the questioning proceeded.
"Where do you live?"
"Wal, I shum!" ejaculated the old man. "Why," he continued, appealing to the laughing listeners, "I've lived in this town all my life, and so's he," pointing to the Justice, "an' b' gosh, to hear him go on you'd think—"
"Silence!" thundered the irate Magistrate. "Answer my question or I'll fine you for contempt of court."
"Alarmed by the threat the witness named his place of residence and the examination went on.
"What is your occupation?"
"Hub?"
"What do you do for a living?"
"Oh, git out, 'Squire! Jest as if you don't know that I tend gardens in the summer season an' saw wood winters!"
"As a private citizen I do know it, but as the court I know nothing about you," explained the perspiring Justice.
"Wal, 'Squire," remarked the puzzled witness, "if you know somethin' outside the court room an' don't know nothin' in it you'd better get out an' let somebody try this case that's got hoss sense."
The advice may have been well meant, but it cost the witness $10.

A SHEPHERD DOG'S JOKE.
R. H. MARTIN.
I once witnessed a display of intelligence on the part of a shepherd dog that was remarkable from the fact that the trick he performed and enjoyed, with seemingly human intelligence, was planned by himself without previous instruction, and was executed without assistance.
His name was Shep, and he was a handsome animal, with markings of pure white and seal brown, a most intelligent head, and a large and beautiful eye that flashed with great spirit. He was a great pet with the children, and entered into all their sports with as much zest as they.
I was standing at a window one day, when I saw Shep coming around the house with Jim's cap in his mouth. (Jim was a colored boy, ten years old, who did light chores about the place.) Looking hurriedly around, to see if he was watched, the dog dropped the cap into a hole beside the bottom board of the fence, where it was well hidden and would require a close search to be discovered. Then, with another hasty look, Shep scampered off in the direction he had come. I took a short cut through the house to see the end of the matter.
When Jim came out the back-door there stood Shep in the very spot where Jim had left him, with the appearance of having never budged an inch. But, when Jim reached for his cap on the floor beside the door, where he always placed it before he entered the house, lo! it had disappeared. Jim rubbed his eyes and looked again. "There was the dog, and there wasn't the cap."
The negro boy then turned to the dog and spoke to him in the familiar way characteristic of the race, as if animals could understand human language. And, strange to say, animals do appear to understand, in a great measure, what colored people say when they talk to them.
"Yer ole rassel, w'at yer done did wid my cap?" Jim demanded of the dog, half angry, half laughing.
Shep could not answer in words; he could only act his part. He looked up into Jim's face with an expression of injured innocence, mingled with great perplexity over the sudden disappearance of the cap.
"Yer ole rassel," said Jim, threatening the dog with voice, language, and gesture, "yer done stole my cap, an' ef yer don't git hit, Jim'll beat yer brains clean out wid a club."
Finding Shep was not greatly scared, Jim sprang at him, but the dog easily and quickly eluded him and bounded off out of his reach.
"Whit! whit!" whistled Jim. "Come yere, ole feller! Nice dog! Jim won't hurt de poah dawg," pleaded Jim, kindly and softly. But Shep was not to be caught by any such trick, and wagged his tail and bounded about, and barked, and scampered away whenever Jim approached him, while his eyes fairly danced with fun and excitement. Finding pleadings as vain as threats, Jim started in a search for the lost cap, closely watched by Shep, who followed at a safe distant in the rear.
All the while he was hunting for his cap, Jim was giving utterance to threats of what he would do to the dog in the way of punishment; and if poor Shep could have understood, he must have feared greatly for the promised beatings, and the lack of food and other punishments Jim declared he was laying up for him. But Shep did not seem to take the matter at all seriously. Perhaps he thought that the best offset to the bad time coming was to enjoy as much as possible the good time he was now having. So he frisked and barked with every manifestation of delight that a dog could show. When Jim at last found where the cap was hidden, Shep barked furiously and turned and scampered off, followed by Jim at full speed, cap in hand.
But Shep was sharp enough not to let Jim catch him until he had given him a long race, as well as time to get over his anger, and then the two could be seen rolling over and over on the green grass, the dog barking and playfully biting at Jim, and Jim scolding and exhorting the dog in the most extravagant terms. And, had any one so much as offered to harm a single hair of Shep's long and glossy coat, there would have been a fight on the spot with Jim.—Agriculturist.

Not One in Ten Of the people you meet from day to day has perfectly pure healthy blood. The hereditary scrofulous taint afflicts the large majority of people, while many others acquire diseases from impure air, improper food and wrong indulgences. Hence the imperative necessity for a reliable blood purifier like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which eradicates every impurity, and gives to the blood vitality and health. It cures scrofula, salt rheum, humors, boils, pimples, and all other affections caused by impurities or poisonous germs in the blood. All that is asked for Hood's Sarsaparilla is that it be given a fair trial.

TAX-COLLECTOR APPOINTED.

Emmitsburg District Secures the Appointment for Another Term. On Wednesday afternoon the County Commissioners appointed Mr. I. M. Fisher of Motter's Station, this district, tax-collector for the ensuing two years. We congratulate Mr. Fisher on his success in securing the appointment and also the Commissioners in their selection. As far as we can learn the appointment gives general satisfaction throughout the county, except perhaps among other aspirants, while his friends declare that there was no deal between his men and commissioner Biser, as charged by the Frederick correspondent of the Baltimore Sun. On the contrary, Fisher was not elected until the third ballot, when Mr. Biser cast his vote for him, Commissioner Derr, having refused to vote at all.

Mr. Fisher is a thorough business man and will fill the office with credit to the party he represents and the county at large. He has remarkable executive ability in financial matters, quick perception and sterling integrity. It is both remarkable and pleasing to note that Emmitsburg district has carried off this prize for two terms in succession, it being the most important, and best paying office at the disposal of the County Commissioners. The efficiency with which the retiring Collector, Mr. Charles F. Rowe of this place conducted the affairs of the office, has proved both a credit to himself and to this end of the county.

Not Correct. Rev. Edw. P. Allen, D. D., President of Mt. St. Mary's College, says "the ridiculous report about the loss of meat by the College is absolutely without foundation." Last week we merely stated that the Frederick News said the meat had spoiled, but were unable to find out whether it was true or not in time to correct it in this issue, although from our knowledge of the management of affairs at the college we didn't believe it.

Ship Building in Maryland. The Pennsylvania Steel Company's Works at Sparrow Point, Baltimore, which for several months have had under construction extensive manufacturing plant for the production of Bessemer steel, contemplate the addition of ship building yards, which may rival, in the extent and value of its production, even the celebrated Clyde works. The first vessel to be built will be for the company's own use. It is thought two ships will be completed by the spring of 1891.

The Sun in New York. The New York correspondent of the Baltimore Sun says: "A representative of one of the chief maritime papers, in spite of a driving rain-storm on Saturday, spent some time in hunting up The Sun correspondent. The Sun is a daily morning in the office, he said, and by some mischance Thursday's issue, with the report of the meeting of the American Shipping League, had gone astray, and another copy had to be procured to make the editor rest easy. The aching void was filled and the marine man sent back rejoicing. He said the editor found more solid news and comfort in The Sun than in all the New York papers put together, and lots of news that the New York papers didn't have."

Disastrous Fire. The Compiler says: "About 1 o'clock on Friday morning, the barn on the farm of Mr. Abdiel Slonaker, in Cumberland township, about three miles southwest of Gettysburg, was discovered to be on fire, but nothing could be done to save it. The barn was nearly new and contained most of the year's crops, and the live stock of the tenant, Mr. Samuel L. Null. All were lost, two horses and a colt and five cows. The only one left is a heifer, which somehow escaped. The barn was insured in the Adams County Company for $900, with $200 on crops for Mr. Slonaker. The tenant has about $1,000 in the Agricultural New York, Martin Winter agent. Judge McClean released Abdiel Slonaker on his own recognizance, to appear before Court March 31."

The above fire was plainly seen from this place.

When the news was received here on Wednesday evening that our worthy citizen Mr. I. M. Fisher had been appointed tax-collector for Frederick county every person seemed pleased. Mr. Fisher is well qualified for the position and your correspondent joins his many friends in congratulating him.

Poor Humanity! The common lot is one of sorrow say—at least—the pessimists, they who look at the worst side. Certainly what would otherwise be a bright existence, is often shadowed by some ailment that overshadows it like a pall, obscuring as it is the radiance that else would light the path. Such an ailment, and a very common one, is nervousness, or in other words, weakness of the nervous system, a condition only remedied by the use of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup. It is taken to relieve it. The concurrent experience of nervous people who have persistently used Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup, is that it cures entirely superfluousness of the nerves, as well as disease—so called—which are invited and sustained by their chronic weakness. As the nerves cast stamina from the great tonic the trouble disappears. For the Bitter Melancholia, the nervousness, the nervousness and kidney troubles.

A Story That Kansas Has a Vast Valley For It.

Ephraim Baker, one of the oldest residents of Kansas and for a quarter of a century a citizen of Topeka, reports a discovery which surpasses the fables of ancient and stories of modern wealth.

Some days ago Mr. Baker displayed to a few friends a bottle filled with pearls of various colors, shapes and sizes.

The measurements of the pyramid differ, Humboldt giving the sides of the base at 1,440 feet each, and Bandlerer made the north side 1,000 feet, and the east side 1,026 feet, the south side 833 feet and the west side 1,000 feet.

A view which Humboldt gives shows that formerly the four terraces of the pyramid were very distinctly to be seen, but now, owing to the crumbling of the sharp edges of the terraces by the action of rain and time, the pyramidal aspect is not so immediately to be discerned.

There is some ground for supposing that this mythological personage was a Christian missionary who found his way from Greenland in old times a fairly civilized land to Mexico, who lived with the forefathers of the later Aztecs and taught them many arts.

This pyramid and the smaller ones in the vicinity resemble marvelously the Assyrian and Chaldean temples, which Layard and other explorers have so minutely described.

At the time of the conquest, in cutting off an end of the pyramid to make room for a more direct route from Pueblo to Mexico, a vast hollow chamber under the structure was disclosed to view.

It was built of stone and sustained by beams of cypress. In it were two skeletons, some idols and a large number of glazed vessels.

From the top of the pyramid there is to be seen a good-size hill lying up under the base of Popocatepetl, it looks like a sailboat alongside of the Great Eastern.

In other directions one sees Malinche the most curious of mountains, and the lofty, "star-shining" peak of Orizaba.

AN AMERICAN PYRAMID.

A Monumental Structure in Mexico Equal to the Egyptian Cheops.

It is not necessary to leave North American soil to visit a genuine pyramid which will compare in size with the pyramid of Cheops itself.

Although it is on American soil, nobody knows when the pyramid was built. It is very old—that we know—and may be older than that of Cheops, in Egypt.

The Aztecs invaded Mexico a thousand years ago, and it was standing then. Perhaps the Toltecs or the Olmecs had a hand in its construction, or perhaps it was there when they came.

Who they were, what they were, why they built this huge structure—all these are questions which have been asked in vain.

The measurements of the pyramid differ, Humboldt giving the sides of the base at 1,440 feet each, and Bandlerer made the north side 1,000 feet, and the east side 1,026 feet, the south side 833 feet and the west side 1,000 feet.
