ROBIN REDBREAST.

When I see the Redbreast Robin, And happy song I hear, Telling us of life that's waking And that springtime draweth near.

There returns the story olden,
How the robin's breast was dyed, When the world's great springtime waited.

When the Lord was crucified.
Crown of thorns His head encircled, Pressing cruelly His brow, Mockingly the crowd about Him Saw Him in His anguish bow.

But the little plain brown robin Pity felt for Him who saith:
"Not a sparrow falleth earthward But the Father noteth it."

Straight, with wings the swifter speeding
For the pitying love she knew,
On the cruel thorn crown lighted, Plucked a thorn, then backward flew.

Just a little was it lightened, That cruel crown our Saviour bore, And the little Robin Redbreast Bears the blood-stain evermore.

MR. LYNN'S BIRTHDAY PARTY

Samuel Lynn lingered over his dessert, though, as he said every day, he hated kickshaws. But both of his children were at home for dinner this evening, a thing that rarely happened. He knew that as soon as he had finished his ice, they would say they had engagements and leave him alone to his cigars and coffee.

He had but a hazy idea as to these engagements which filled their lives—balls, and operas, and literary clubs, and dinners to foreign noblemen or noted actors, and committees on charitable work, for both Joseph and Margaret Lynn belonged to that class of fashionables who try to be of use in the world.

Mr. Lynn was a shrewd manufacturer from New Jersey, who, by a lucky turn in trade had become enormously rich late in life. He then had done for the children what he thought their dead mother would have wished him to do—given them the best education which money could procure, brought them to New York and settled them in an imposing house on Murray Hill.

What more could he do?
He had succeeded as far as they were concerned. They were happy and at ease in the new life. They belonged to it. It must be his own fault if he did not.

But he was uncomfortable and cramped in it. There were times when he hated it all, from the dress coat in which he dined, to his club of millionaires who controlled by a few words the vast movements of trade.

What a good time he had when he had the little mill down on the coast, and he and Polly and the children ate their dinner at noon.
When his birthday came, on the twentieth of March, Polly used to have turkey. It was something to have turkey then. How the children used to clap their hands when she carried it in, big and brown, and he stood up to carve it. Polly never could grow used to his wonderful skill in carving.

Sometimes now they had turkey, but he never saw it. His dinners were served a la Russe and a thin slice of white meat was laid on his Serves plate during the tiresome succession of courses, butler and footmen ranged grave as bishops behind their chairs.

To-morrow would be the twentieth of March, but there would be no one to remember it now.

He nibbled at his macaroon more slowly, talking eagerly of an address which Joseph was to give before the Social Science Association, and a charity ball of which Margaret was a patroness. He did so want to be a comrade with them. They listened politely, but were both grave and preoccupied. It seemed to him that try as he would to think with their thoughts and see with their eyes, he always bored them.

Samuel Lynn was not a father of whom his children could be ashamed. He was short, powerfully built, with shaggy white hair and quick, challenging eyes. A man of great force and vitality, who easily controlled other men, yet with all his efforts he could not bring himself on a line with these children with whom he had lived since their birth.

Margaret rose to leave the room.
He took her hand as she passed him.
What a rare delicate face she had; how like her mother! He would have kissed her if the servants had not been present. He wished he could call her Peggy as he used to do and joke and laugh with her.

"What shall I give you for Easter, my dear?" he said.

She smiled. "There is really nothing you have not given me."

"Let me meet you at Tiffany's to-morrow," he said eagerly, "and let us choose some pretty thing together."

"No. I have an engagement for to-morrow," she said, sweetly, and went out, nodding good-night.
Her brother followed her.

It was ridiculous for this stout capitalist to have so sore a heart.
Nothing had happened. His children were well and happy and kind.

Here was the splendid room with the Corots and Fortunys on the wall, and the table glittering with cut glass and silver.

But pictures and goblets are poor company.

A few minutes later a telegram was brought in. He glanced at it and gave a whistle. It certainly was an odd coincidence.

Just when he had been thinking of the old place in Jersey, here was a message calling him to it. Mr.
Lynn still owned the mill and farm, and Frew, his agent, wired him to come down next morning on special business.

The business was of small account, of course. A telegram could settle it—but, the old place. And to-morrow would be his birthday.

He wished he could tell the children of the queer coincidence. But what would they care? He rose with a long breath.

"Pack my bag, Lewis," he said,
"and if Miss Lynn should ask for me to-morrow tell her I have been called out of town."

The rain was falling in torrents the next day as the train rushed along the sandy ledges below Seagirt, the pine woods on one side and the vast heaving water on the other.

It was nearly noon when he reached the little station. Aaron, with his lean gray horse and ragged wagon, crept in sight as the train puffed away. The old fellow looked just as he did when the children used to make fun of him and Polly would silence them. It was Polly who gave him that very overcoat that he had on, ten years ago.

"Mr. Frew sent you?" Aaron nodded, and grunted out some remark on the storm. It seemed to Mr. Lynn that he had heard those very words a thousand times before. How often he had jogged along this beach behind the old mare!

Nothing was changed. There was Doctor Roden in his buggy with the same patched bag. Van Storm had had his field in corn this year, but Hills, the blacksmith, had put up a porch to his house.

As they drove past the marshes along the great road, two of the old neighbors passed, and nodded laughingly, as if he had been gone but a week or two.

Had he been gone long? It seemed as if he might wake up and find himself going home from the mill with Polly at the door and the children beside her, waiting for him.

There was the house now, with the well at the side and the big walnut trees, and—why! there was smoke coming from the big chimney, and a glow of fire shining through the windows into the cold air.

"Who has Frew put into the house?" he shouted angrily to deaf Aaron, who nodded and turned the mare up to the door.

It opened. Was that his wife Polly in the braided merino gown he used to like so much, and her white apron and her hair tucked back? She was waving both hands and laughing, and she ran to open the door of the wagon.

"Polly! Oh, my dear, is it you? I thought—you are so like your mother."

He grew blind for a moment as he stood on the ground.

She had him in her arms and gave him what she used to call when she was a child, Christmas hugs. "Come in, come in," she cried, dragging him along. "Here is Joe piling up the fire, and there is old Susy in the kitchen just as she used to be. And the turkey is nearly ready, and the table is laid.

I did it. Do you see all the old china and mother's spoons? This is your birthday party, dear. I thought of it, but Joe carried it all out."

Joe came up, and stood beside his father. He had on a suit of rough clothes, gray just now with wood ashes. The young social philosopher laughed rather sheepishly as a man does when trying to express feeling.

"How do you do, sir?" he said, shaking hands.

"Come in." She pulled him gently through the hall. There was the table just as Polly used to lay it, with the bunch of lilies in the middle, and his big chair by the fire and his warm jacket and slippers.

"I don't understand, Margaret —Peggy dear."

"Yes. I kept all those things, the jacket and all. I did not like to lose hold of the old time. It was so good. And dear—the tears ran over her cheeks.

"I did not think you cared—either of you," stammered her father, looking from one to the other.

"No. We did not understand each other up in town, so Joe and I thought that down here—" She made him sit down in his old chair, and drawing his head close to her breast, stroked his cheeks.

The day seemed to fly. They had dinner, and Mr. Lynn carved the turkey and piled the tid-bits on their plates in heaps, and then they gathered around the warming fire and one neighbor after another dropped in to tell the homely village news and the old stories.

When night came on they were left alone. It was strange how far the town and business, and clubs and operas, had dropped away from them. Joe dashed out to the beach, sure that he heard minute guns, and secretly hoping that there was a wreck.

Peggy sat by her father, her head on his knee. "I remember hearing that story of Captain Foulk's when I was a child," she said. "The people here are so simple and sincere. They are such real friends to us. It is different from the town."

"Yes, it is different," her father said. "Why, child, it seems as if I had come back to my real life today, as if your mother was here beside me."

"I think she is," whispered Peggy holding his hand closer.

After a while she said, "Joe and I would like to come down here with you, for all our birthdays and Christmases, and we will never misunderstand each other again, father, will we?"

He shook his head and patted her hand, but he could not speak.—

Household.

An Ancient Darky.

The old "Uncle" of the Southern plantation was so proud of his age, that he would tell the most astonishing stories. A correspondent, living in Virginia, sends us the following humorous illustration of a negro's ambition to be thought very old:

While picking on the banks of the Potomac, a group of soldiers encountered an old negro, whose bent form and frosted head betokened great age. Struck with his venerable appearance, they inquired his age.

"How old are you, Uncle?"
"Deed, Massa, I don't know."
"Are you a hundred years old?"
"Oh, yes, sah; Ise mo' dan dat."
"How much more?"

"I kaint tell, sah. But you may judge for yerself: when I first cum beah, dis heah Potomac ribber wa'n't nothin' but a little bit of a creek!"

"Boys," said one of the soldiers, "he's older than Methusalem."

THE CHINESE SACRED LILY.

This lily is called Water Fairy Flower, or Flower of Gods, by the Chinese. It is a variety of narcissus, bearing in profusion flowers of silvery white, with golden cups.
The beauty and perfume are exquisite.

The bulbs are grown by a method known only to the Chinese, whereby they attain great size and vitality, ensuring luxuriant growth and immense spikes of flowers; in fact the incredibly short time required to bring the bulbs into bloom (four to six weeks after planting) is one of the wonders of nature. "You can almost see them grow,"—succeeding everywhere and with everybody.

They do well in pots of earth, but are more novel and beautiful grown in shallow bowls of water, with enough fancy pebbles to prevent them toppling over when in bloom. A dozen bulbs started at intervals will give a succession of flowers throughout the winter. As the plant is partially aquatic in its nature, plenty of water is necessary.
If it is grown in soil, it should be light and sandy.

After the bulbs have been planted, they should be kept in a closet or in a cool, dark place for a few days, to

LAX ADMINISTRATION OF LAW RESPONSIBLE FOR LAWLESSNESS

The following extract from a sermon delivered by Rev. Thomas Dixon of New York, on Sunday last furnishes so startling a picture of the dangers menacing us on every side from the lax administration of the laws, the venality and corruption of public officials and the worse than farcical exhibition of trials by jury, as now conducted, that the thoughtful reader cannot but be appalled in view of all that is involved in this open defiance of law, and mockery of justice.

We recommend a serious reading of this extract as well as an earnest consideration of the subject so emphatically dwelt upon by Mr. Dixon, for it is time that American citizens should awake to the dangers that threaten their institutions and call a halt before it is too late.

The Rev. Thomas Dixon, Jr., pastor of the Twenty-third Street Baptist Church, preached yesterday morning on "The Mafia of New York." He said:

"The triumphs of organized crime in New Orleans, which led up to the recent terrible tragedy, present to every American citizen food for most serious thought. It is time other cities asked themselves the question, Whither are we drifting?"

"Is not New York drifting towards a crisis such as that which confronted New Orleans? Is not organized crime becoming more and more defiant and daring? Is it not becoming more and more difficult to execute criminal law? Are not our criminal courts in this city falling more and more into universal contempt? Is it not now next to an impossibility to enforce a criminal statute against any man who has either money or a 'pull'?"

"Look around you at the innumerable evidences of the triumphant power of the criminal classes of the community and the contemptible force of legal procedures. You see at least five thousand saloons openly engaged in violating the laws of the so-called sovereign State of New York. The District Attorney knows it; the judges know it; the police know it; the Grand Jury know it—have known it so long that they have grown tired of presenting thousands of indictments to which the District Attorney does not give a passing thought. It is next to impossible to convict a saloon-keeper in New York for anything."

"Last Sunday morning I walked from this hall, after preaching, up Fourth avenue, and passing a saloon saw a man come out of the front door wiping the liquor from his mustache. On the other curbstone stood a big policeman looking straight across at that man as he opened that door and walked out. He did proceed to investigate? Hardly. He twirled his billy and leisurely strolled in another direction. Of course, he knew who stood behind that bar. The price had been paid. He was in no danger of disturbance. His politics were orthodox."

"Is the influence of money in our Courts increasing or decreasing? Do the criminals of to-day find a field for the use of funds in the Courts of New York? Ask the Boodle Aldermen who have returned from exile in Canada, now that the newspapers have ceased to press the case against them."

"Ask John Stephens, of Newark, who ought to be in a cell at Sing Sing, but under that false name was fined $1,000 for assaulting a little girl, paid the fine, walked out a free man and is now in the bosom of his family in his luxurious home in this city. Ask Sheriff James Flack, that arch conspirator, criminal and brilliant Tammany light. Ask James Barker, ex-Alderman and member of Tammany's Executive Committee, who brutally assaulted a man smaller than himself."

"You have in the Mayor's office of this metropolis a man who naively confessed before a legislative committee the crime of having appropriated thousands of dollars in illegal fees in violation of the laws of the sovereign State he has sworn as an officer to uphold and serve."

In conclusion the preacher gave the newspapers credit for standing in the breach against a flood of lawlessness which was the natural result of the condition of things he has described.

IT LOOKED WARLIKE.

Wednesdays daily papers were embellished with immense sensational headings, suggesting the possibility of war with Italy, growing out of the lynching at New Orleans on the 14th of March. The cause of all the commotion was the presentation to Secretary Blaine by Baron de Fava, the Italian minister at Washington, a letter from his government recalling him to Rome because the United States government had not given the assurances expected by Italy in connection with the affair. Speculations were indulged in, concerning the possible result of such hostilities, the strength of the Italian navy reviewed, presenting its advantages and disadvantages, ending with the final conclusion that should they determine to invade our ports, their navy would never get back to the land of King Humbert. Yesterday affairs assumed a more peaceable aspect. Secretary Blaine's sensible reply to the Italian Charge d'Affaires, in which he rebuked the impatience of the Italian government, and gave it a chance to understand that the course of the law should run and would not be hurried, was received cordially, and evidently echoes the sentiments of the majority of our people. It is safe to predict that with all its powerful navy, the Italian government will not be too hasty in "monkeying with Uncle Sam's buzz saw."

A SENSATION has been caused at the Treasury department by the discovery of a counterfeit $2 silver certificate so nearly perfect in all its parts as to be almost impossible of detection.

Heretofore all counterfeiters of our paper currency have been readily detected by the failure to imitate the distinctive character of the paper on which government notes are printed, which is so arranged that each part of it forming a complete note contains a small silk thread running through it lengthwise. This paper is for the first time almost perfectly imitated in the counterfeit just discovered. So far as is known it has been used only in counterfeiting the $2 silver certificate of the series of 1886. This note contains on its face a vignette of Gen. Hancock.

$100 Reward. $100. The readers of the EMMITSBURG CHRONICLE will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address, F. J. THE SPOUSE OF CHRIST.

BY FLOSCULUS.

Fair was her form, her tresses fair, Far fairer was her face;
But fairer still her sinless soul, A chalice of God's grace.

Her eyes were bright, and bright her smile Majestic was her mien;
And had she lived a child of earth She would have reigned a queen.

But, she had heard His voice divine When even but a child,
And often felt His tender glance On her, serene and mild.

And she had sought, through weary years, His will whate'er it be;
And lo! at last His voice was heard—"My child, come, follow Me."

Bright was the world, the skies were blue, All nature on her smiled;
But having once that sweet voice heard, She could not be beguiled.

So from the busy, bustling world Far from the place of pride, She left a mansion for a cell,
To be Christ's chosen bride.

To kneel always beside His feet,
To love them with her tears, To gaze into His gentle face, To bless Him with her prayers,

To feel always His kindly glance, His smile divine to see,
At Bethlehem with Him to joy,
To grieve at Calvary,

To smile with Him, with Him to weep, His joys and woes to feel, Compassionate His sacred wounds, Herself therein conceal,

To bear His cross, to wear His crown, E'en though of thorns it be,
Through fasts and vigils, prayers and tears, Unto eternity—

These were the charms her ravished soul Left all things else to find;
Nor counted as the slightest loss The all she left behind.

Then sound a sad and solemn dirge For her who now is dead; Dead, only that she lives in Him, Who for her sake once bled.

Fair spouse of Christ, great is the day That marks thee as His bride; But greater still, that finds thy will One with the Crucified.

The Many

Remarkable cures of Catarrh effected by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla are conclusive proofs that this loathsome and dangerous disease is one of the blood, needing only this searching and powerful alternative to thoroughly eradicate it.

"I have suffered for years from catarrh, which was so severe that it destroyed my appetite and weakened my system. None of the remedies I took afforded me any relief, until I used Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I began to take this medicine last spring, and am now entirely free from the disgusting disease. My appetite has returned, and I am one more strong and healthy."—Susan L. W. Cook, 500 Albany street, Boston Highlands, Boston, Mass.

The April number of the Eclectic opens with a paper by Karl Blind on the late Dr. Schiemann. Aristotle as a man of science is discussed by Mr. George J. Romanes. Oscar Wilde's brilliant paper on "The Soul of Man under Socialism" will set many minds thinking. Prince Malcolm Khan, late Persian minister to England, has an entertaining study of civilization in his native country. The judicial estimate of a great question, embodied in "Public Opinion and Strikes," by J. Hall Richardson, ought to attract attention from thinking readers. Andrew Carnegie's essay on "The Advantages of Poverty" is somewhat unique, as being the work of a multi-millionaire. Prof. C. H. Herford gives us a translation from Deen's last drama of "Brand." There are two striking short stories, "Our Midnight Visitor," by A. Conan Doyle, and "The Portrait of Concetta P." by Madame E. Gerard. THE Wren Company played before a good audience at Gelwick's Hall on Tuesday evening. The public school teachers of this county number 215, of which 188 are white and 27 colored. The white males number 98 and the females 90. The colored males number 15, females 12. ### Heavy Snow Storm.

The snow storm of last Friday and Saturday is said to have been the heaviest we have had in this section since 1856. The depth was twenty-one inches on a level, and considering that it was melting all the while, must have been equal to over two feet. No serious damage has been reported, but a number of shade trees were broken by the weight of the snow. Several handsome evergreen trees in Mr. J. H. T. Webb's front yard were badly damaged.

Everybody Knows.

That at this season the blood is filled with impurities, the accumulation of months of close confinement in poorly ventilated stores, workshops and tenements. All these impurities and every trace of scrofula, salt rheum, or other diseases may be expelled by taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, the best blood purifier ever produced. It is the only medicine of which "100 doses one dollar" is true.

An Old Banner.

The Independent Hose Company has placed on exhibition in their brick room a banner which was painted in oil by Mr. John Markell, an artist of this city, in 1841. It represents the great fire which consumed the residence of Dr. Wm. Tyler, on Record street, on the site where the All Saints rectory now stands, also the igniting of the Independent Hose Company's engine house, which adjoined it, and the cupola of the old Court House, adjoining the engine house. It also represents the Independent and Junior section engine at work on the fire. In the cupola of the Court House at the time of this fire were Wm. Martin, father of Oliver Martin; Eli Moberly, father of the Moberly brothers, William, Charles, Lewis, &c., Baldwin Woodward and Tom Prince. The banner is in a pretty well preserved state. It was 50 years ago that the fire occurred.—Frederick News.

William J. McTighe, who was a student at the Mountain for several years, died at his residence in Pittsburgh on Wednesday, March 25, 1891, of la grippe. He was a brother of Thomas J. McTighe, Esq., Vice-President of the Alumni Association, and also of Rev. James J. McTighe. Will was a bright business man and possessed very pleasing manners which endeared him to all his friends. He leaves a wife and six children to mourn his sudden death.

Married at Mount St. Mary's.

Our Mt. St. Mary's correspondent says, an enjoyable social event in that section on Monday, was the marriage of Mr. Jos. F. Elder to Miss Mary Baker, daughter of Mr. Aloysius M. Baker. The ceremony was performed at the College Church by the pastor, Rev. Edw. P. Allen, D. D., after which the party repaired to the residence of the bride's parents, where a sumptuous breakfast was served, which was enjoyed by a number of guests. About noon the party went to the residence of the groom's parents, and at 3 o'clock the wedding dinner was partaken of. The bride wore a pearl colored heurietta trimmed in silk, with bonnet and gloves to match. The groom wore the conventional black. The attendants were Mr. Harry Elder, brother of the groom, and Miss Sallie Baker, sister of the bride. Notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather and the bad roads, quite a number of young folks called on the happy pair during the evening, and tendered their congratulations, wishing them success and happiness in their new home, which will be in Toledo, Ohio, where the groom has resided for some time. The callers remained until a late hour, spending the time in social amusements. They were the recipients of over sixty handsome and useful presents. Mr. and Mrs. Elder will start for their home on Monday, and carry with them the best wishes of their many friends here.

Will Be Made in Waynesboro.

Messrs. James T. Hays and Son have sold the royalty right for their creamers to the American Manufacturing Company of Waynesboro, which company will at once begin the manufacture of them on a large scale. This change was brought about owing to the demand for these justly celebrated creamers having exceeded the facilities of Messrs. Hays and Son to make them. They will, however, continue to supply this section.

The Attorney General.

However much we may differ with the Hon. William Pinkney White politically, all must admit that he has filled the office he now holds with ability and fidelity. In truth it is no more than justice to him to say that to all the various offices he has been assigned by the people he has brought the most commendable devotion and efficiency. He organized the office of State Comptroller, for up to the time of his incumbency there had been little or no method in that portion of the Treasury Department. He was equally faithful and efficient as Governor, United States Senator, and as Mayor of the city of Baltimore, and when he leaves his present position he will take with him the esteem of the people of Maryland and deserve the plaudit "well done, good and faithful servant." The office he holds is a non-political one and he has in no instance permitted it to be soiled by the mire and dirt of partisanship. Would it not be well at his retiring for the people of our state irrespective of party to give such expression to their feelings towards him as will manifest their appreciation of an honest, upright and able officer?—Examiner.

The Loy's Station correspondent of the Frederick News says: Mr. Henry Beiter was hauling hay to the station one day last week. He let the team stand and went into the warehouse a few minutes. In this time the horses turned short and upset the load of hay. Nothing was broken or injured. The fun was throwing the hay up the hill.

A Good Argument.

The Western Maryland company never paid the interest upon the $300,000 of second mortgage bonds endorsed by Washington county, and each year the county had to pay $18,000 on this account.

Before the road was built the price of a ticket to Baltimore was $4.50, now that is the price of a ticket to Baltimore and return. Until the Western Maryland railroad reached Chambersburg the difference between the price of wheat in that town and Hagerstown was always ten cents per bushel in favor of the latter place. Chambersburg is no further from Baltimore than Hagerstown, and the difference in the price of wheat grew out of the fact that Chambersburg had but one track to market, whilst Hagerstown had two. The Western Maryland road increased the value of the wheat crop of Washington county, amounting to a million of bushels a year, ten cents a bushel—$100,000 a year—Proportionate difference was made in the value of everything we sell and buy.

No candid man will then deny that the investment was a good one, and that if every cent now in the road is sunk, it will still be a good investment.—Hagerstown Mail.

THERE has been a rumor current in the upper portion of the county, that the Western Maryland Railroad and the Frederick Division of the Pennsylvania system were endeavoring to arrive at some satisfactory settlement of the connections between the two roads at Bruceville junction. It is a great drawback to the entire Northern part of our county that it is practically shut off from railroad connection with the county seat, mainly because of a disagreement between the two railroads. We do not know to which road belongs the blame for this condition of affairs, but the fact is that for many years the connections at Bruceville were maintained, but have since been broken. It is to be hoped that there is something in the rumor and that the connections so much desired will be made.—Westminster Carolinian.

We trust the above rumor has a solid foundation. An improvement of the existing arrangements at the junction is of as much importance to the North End of Frederick county as to Carroll.
