GOD ONLY KNOWS.

Whither are going with hurrying feet Forms that are passing to-night on the street?

Faces all sunny and faces all sad. Hearts that are weary and hearts that are glad,

Eyes that are heavy with sorrow and strife, Eyes that are gleaming with beauty and life;

Pictures of pleasure and crosses of care, Going, all going, God only knows where!

Hands that have earnestly striven for bread, Hands that are soiled with dishonor, instead;

Hearts that are turned to a purpose sublime, Hearts all discordant and jangled with crime;

Souls that are pure and as white as the snow, Souls that are black as the midnight of woe;

Gay in their gladness, or drunk in despair; Going, all going, God only knows where!

Some to the feast, where the richest red wine And the rarest of jewels will sparkle and shine.

Some in their hunger will wander, and some Will sleep nor awaken when morning shall come.

The robed and the ragged, the foe and the friend, All of them hurrying on to the end;

Nearing the grave with a curse or a prayer, Going, all going, God only knows Where!

PRIOR PRE-EMPTION.

I am an architect, and a few years ago was charged with the erection of a building in Boston, in the construction of which I used a considerable quantity of granite.

I bought some of the stone of a down East woman, whom I knew as Widow Haley. One day I called my assistant, Mr. Benjamin Barker, into my room and said: "Look here, Barker, you've got to go down to Widow Haley's. She sent word that there is some stone ready for us, and I want it looked over before it is shipped, especially those pillars for the entrance."

"Very well, Sir," replied Barker, "I'll take the first train to-morrow and be back to-morrow night."

"No," said I, "don't do anything of the sort. Sit down and write the old lady that you'll be down to the place Saturday and then she'll meet you at the train. Besides that, she'll kill a yellow-legged chicken for your dinner."

It was about 10:30 o'clock when Barker reached Agamenticus, and when the train had gone he was like the world renowned Robinson Crusoe—"monarch of all he surveyed"—and he felt, to a slight extent, as Mr. Crusoe felt when he found himself all alone and "a long way removed from anywhere."

But he was not a great while left to his meditations. It was not more than five minutes before his attention was attracted to a cloud of dust rising through the trees in the direction in which the highway leading by the station seemed to run. The cloud of dust came nearer very rapidly, and suddenly a powerful bay horse, hitched to a Concord wagon, bounded into view, and he conjectured that the woman was widow Haley, and she was.

The horse approached the station at a smart pace, and was brought to a stand-still with a suddenness that must have given a shock to his nervous system.

"Good morning, Madam," said Barker, lifting his hat and at the same time moving toward the wagon. He had been standing in such a position that the woman had not obtained a fair look at him, and as he moved out into full view she seemed to see something in him which had at first escaped her attention. Barker noticed that she gave a start and that she had to pause a little before she spoke. But when she did speak it was with directness and without embarrassment.

"I'm Widder Haley," she said. "Be you the man from Architect Bullard's that was to meet me?"

"Yes, I'm your man," Barker answered. "Shall I climb in?"

Mrs. Haley gave her assent, and when Barker was seated by her side she hit the horse a vigorous slap with the ends of the lines, and he was soon pulling his load briskly over the road which he had recently traveled in an opposite direction. They were well along in the last mile of the road when Barker, turning sharply around, caught the widow's eye while she was gazing earnestly upon his face.

"Well," he said good-naturedly, "what is it?"

The woman blushed and turned her head away.

"I's'pose I was rude," she said when she had thought out her reply, "but I couldn't help it. You look so much like him."

"Who's him?" demanded Barker.

"My husband."

"The late Mr. Haley?"

"Yes. He's been dead an' gone these twenty years, but when I see him last he was as much like you as peas is like peas."

At the quaries Barker heard corroborative evidence as to his resemblance to the defunct Mr. Haley. Two old men stopped hammering stone and looked at him, and he heard one of them say to his mate: "Did you ever see a man look so much like another as that feller looks like Rufe Haley?"

It was understood when Barker and Mrs. Haley left the quaries that the former should not return to Boston until Monday, for there was a certain stone quarrying which would not be ready for examination earlier than Monday morning. "I won't get along all right over Sunday," the widow said. "You kin climb the mounting an' go gunnin' and p'r'aps Effie will take you out a-ridin' in the artemoon."

"Effie," that's a girl's name, is it not?"

"Yes; Effie is my daughter, an' if I do say it, nobody ain't got no better girl than she is."

"Of course not."

"She was just a year old when her father died, an' I've had to bring her up all by myself, but I ain't ashamed of her. I think she's a pretty likely girl; I don't know what you'll think of her."

"Oh, I'm sure that I shall like her," said Barker, laughingly.

Upon the wall of the room into which Barker was shown on arrival at the widow's house was a large photograph of the late lamented Haley. Barker no sooner set eyes on this picture than he was ready to share with the widow and the two quarreners their astonishment at its resemblance to the man who had been twenty years dead. When dinner was served Barker found the yellow-legged chicken which had been promised him and sundry other things good to eat. He enjoyed his dinner very well until the servant spilled a quart bowl of hot pudding sauce down his neck and back. When that happened he felt uncomfortable for a minute, which of course was perfectly natural.

"You'd better take the coat off an' have it cleaned before the stuff dries in," said the widow.

"But," objected Barker, "I can't go around in my shirt sleeves."

"Would you be willin'," asked the widow, "to wear one of Rufus's coats?"

"Certainly, Madam," said Barker.

The widow bustled off up stairs and was soon back again, holding out a long-tailed shiny-black coat. Barker took the coat and, after regarding it for a little as it hung suspended from his thumb and forefinger by the back of its neck, put it on and finished his dinner. He was still wearing the coat an hour later, when the widow's daughter Effie arrived home from North Berwick.

Barker did not fail to mark a similarity between the daughter's features and his own, but, seeing that the widow was looking at him inquiringly and expectantly, it occurred to him to ask her if she still considered him a reproduction of her departed husband.

"More than ever," said the widow, "and when I look on you an' Effie, standing there together, I kin scarcely believe that you ain't brother and sister."

When bedtime came, Barker was conducted to a chamber leading off from the room where the widow kept her safe and account books. He went off to sleep very easily, in spite of the fact that he was incased in a strange nightshirt, one of the late lamented's, and, if he had not been disturbed, would have continued sleeping till morning. As it was he was awakened a little after midnight by a noise in the next room. Listening, he heard what seemed to be blows upon some hard substance. Instantly he thought of the safe. The next instant he slid quietly out of bed and started upon a tour of investigation:

He saw two men, one of them was grey-whiskered and apparently fifty years old, engaged with hammer and chisel upon the safe. The grey-whiskered man was the first to take cognizance of Barker, and he no sooner saw him than with a loud shriek, he threw down his tools and started on the run for the door leading into the hall.

"Quick, Joe!" he called back to his younger mate. "Quick, Joe, don't you see Rufe Haley's ghost there in the doorway?"

The younger man ran after the older one, and after the two ran Barker, still in his borrowed night-shirt and nothing else, carrying one of the burglar's hammers in one hand and their lamp in the other. He followed the men down stairs and into the sitting room, but he did not leap after them out of the window. Probably he would not have done that under any circumstances, clad as he was, but there was one overpowering circumstance in the case which made him understand that the sphere of his duty was inside the house. Something which he saw after he had entered the sitting room stopped him short in his pursuit of the burglars, and for a second or two riveted him motionless to the floor.

He saw three bed-gowned, bare-toed women sitting in a row of chairs placed against a side of the room, bound hand and foot and made mutes by something crammed into their mouths, each staring at him with widely-distended eyes. Barker recognized in the three women the widow, the widow's daughter, and the woman who had scalded him with her pudding gravy.

"Pardon me, ladies," he said, "I was not aware that you were in this room or I should not have followed those gentlemen in here. If you will excuse me for a moment I will—see you later."

He whisked out of the room, rushed up the stairs, three at a time, dived into his bed chamber, grabbed his trousers, got into them fireman fashion on the way down stairs, and within a minute from the time of his departure from the room where the women were, he had returned to it, and was ready to begin the work of emancipation. When he had finished it he retired to complete his toilet, promising to return very soon.

When he reappeared he found the widow alone; no, not alone, for she was sitting with a double-barreled gun over her shoulder, gazing fixedly at the windows through which the burglars had made their exits.

"I didn't know but that they might come back ag'in," she said.

"I guess not," said Barker. "But give me the gun and go to bed yourself. I'll lie down here on the lounge and keep guard, and if any burglar tries to enter here I'll blow his head off."

"If I can get near enough to hit him," he added sotto voce, calling to mind the fact that he had never fired a gun in his life. "But where were the hired men?" he asked after a pause. "Or did they kill the hired men outright?"

"The hired men," answered the widow; "the hired men is over to Eliot to a weddin'. That's why we women was left alone."

"Weddings are bad things," said Barker, impressively.

But of course he spoke jokingly, for he knew that he himself was to be married the very next week to my daughter. He told the widow the following day about the approaching wedding. She had just suggested to him the possibility of a union with her daughter.

"I'm a sudden sort of a woman," she had said. "I ain't one of them who believes in deliberatin' an' prayin'. I make up my mind and shoot off where I want to go, an' git there as quick as I kin. I only knowed my husband twenty-four hours before I was married to him, and I didn't make no mistake, nuther. Now I want to ask you a question: How would you like to marry my daughter?"

The average man, in Barker's place, would have been stumped by a proposition like this, but Barker answered to it without the least hesitation.

"Nothing would suit me better," he said, "but I've been pre-occupied by another woman and she takes possession of me next Friday."

Barker in all human probability will never see the Halesys again, but he has certainly made an impression upon their minds which is destined to last. Neither mother or daughter ever looks at the photograph of the late lamented Rufus Haley without recalling that another man one day stood in front of it, who, though (so far as they knew) he had not a drop of Haley blood in him, was Rufus Haley all over again.—N. Y. Times.

His Impudence Cost a Watch.

Gen. Bligh and his wife happened to arrive at a Yorkshire inn when there was only just so much in the larder as was sufficient for them, and, of course, they bespoke it. Some sporting gentlemen presently arrived, and, on hearing what had happened, asked who was the guest. "An Irish officer," said the landlord; whereupon one said "Oh, if he's Irish a potato will do him. Here, take my watch up to him (a very handsome gold one) and ask what's o'clock." The inquiry had, doubtless, some impertinent significance in those days, which it has now lost; at all events it brought down the General with the watch in his hand and a pistol under his arm. "I am come," he said, "to tell you what o'clock it is. Whose watch is this?" Everybody hastened to deny any knowledge of it whatever. "Then I have made a mistake," said the General, "in the company. I received an impudent message, which I came down to resent, but I find I have come to the wrong room." The watch, which would have paid the dinner bill fifty times over, he kept to his death, and left it by will to his brother, the Dean of Elphin.—Argonaut.

"Lady" and "Woman."

Shortly after the war closed the negroes began to call each other "lady" and gentleman," but in speaking of the whites, they generally called them that "man" and that "woman." An instance occurred a few years ago in which Gen. W. T. Sherman played a part. The general was sitting in front of his house one pleasant evening with some friends, smoking and talking, when a fellow as black as the ace of spades sidled up, and, addressing the general, said: "Is de a lady here named Johnson?" "No," said the general. "Well," said the darky, "I think there must be a lady of that name living here, because she is my wife, and she is working for a woman named Sherman."—Washington Critic.

The family is just about sitting down to the midday meal, and some of little Frank's especially favorite dishes are already on the board. At that moment a letter is brought announcing the death of an aunt.

"Papa," suggested the lad, apprehensively, "instead of crying over it now, don't you think we'd better eat dinner first?"

Glorious it is to wear the crown Of a deserved and pure success; He who knows how to fail has won A crown whose lustre is not less.

—Adeleide Proctor.

ENGLISH as she is spoke sounds funny to a foreigner when you hear him with something like "I will come by and by to buy a bicycle."

THE STRIKING COKE WORKERS.

Rioting was resumed in the Pennsylvania Coke region Saturday. The plant of the Frick Coke Company at Leisenring was attacked by strikers, and shots were exchanged between the guard and the mob, when the latter retreated, but prevented all the men from going to work. A crowd of strikers gathered on the hill above the Leisenring works, and at one time thirty dynamite bombs were exploded simultaneously, tearing great holes in the earth, breaking windows in many houses and frightening the people for miles around by the terrific roar. No one was injured and but little actual damage was done, the strikers contenting themselves with this portentous warning to the workers below. The sheriff and his posse, while attempting to execute a writ of eviction, were driven away by strikers. The water tank at the Kyle Works was blown up, and at Leith a striker who had been arrested was rescued from about 25 deputies by a crowd of 250 strikers. The military was ordered out after a second request had been made by the sheriff, but did not assist in the evictions, neither did they do police duty. A Hungarian girl was killed and several persons wounded Wednesday in a battle. The Fayette county officers made two attempts at evictions at Adelaide. The officers were overpowered and driven away, but obtained reinforcements and returned, when they were attacked by about three hundred Hungarian men and women and a pitched battle occurred. The soldiers saved the deputies at a critical moment.

MT. ST. MARY'S COLLEGE NEWS.

First Game of Ball.—Arranging for Another with the Pennsylvania College Nine.—Disagreement as to the Position of Lawyer McPherson.—Notes.—Personal.—The Movements of a Former Student.

The base ball season was opened on Thursday morning by a very interesting game between a nine selected from the 2nd and 3rd Collegiate classes and the 4th Collegiate. A feature of the game was the excellent battery work of both nines, and from the support which they received both from the in and out fields, the indications are that we shall see many excellent games during the season.

THE SCORE. Table with columns for 2ND AND 3RD COLL., R, I, B, P, O, A, E. Lists players like Sullivan, Cashman, Madden, etc.

4TH COLLEGIATE. Table with columns for R, I, B, P, O, A, E. Lists players like Campbell, Teague, Kerrigan, etc.

SCORE BY INNINGS. Table with columns for 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, T. Lists runs, hits, errors.

Earned runs—2d and 3rd Coll., 8; 4th Coll., 5. Two-base hits—W. Cashman, Madden, Donohue, (2), Ingoldby, McCloskey, J. Cashman. Struck out—By Cashman, 7; by Teague, 8. Bases on balls—Off Cashman, 8; off Teague, 7. Wild pitches—Cashman, 2; Teague, 1. Hit by pitched ball—Seton, Kerrigan, Burkhardt, McGinniss, (2). Double plays—Campbell and Kerrigan, Ingoldby and Kerrigan. Umpire—T. J. McTigue. Time of game, 1:55. Scorer, Behen.

McCloskey is a graceful and easy player, and keeps a cool head throughout the game. Keep it up, Mc!

We expect to behold your smiling countenance in the first nine this year. Oh! Bottle. Sullivan played with his usual earnestness and vim and seems to have lost none of his old time prestige.

Campbell is right at home on the diamond. No flies on "Lefty." Will and John Cashman are "clear out of sight." They each made a two-bagger and from the way they covered the field, base ball seems to run in the family. Donohue was right on hand with his little two-baser. Good boy, Tim! John Madden covered first in great shape, and as the score will show, was by no means behind in wielding the bat. Harry King is a base-ballist to the backbone. He wore a pair of the new style shoes, which are very low and have extremely thin soles. Ingoldby, Kerrigan, Teague and Burkhardt played a good game. Teague's curves seemed to bewilder some of his opponents. Seton, McGinniss and Malone stopped everything that came in the way. Dyer, Echeverria and Gallagher were right there every time. "Poz."

The manager of the Pennsylvania College ball team, accompanied by a committee delegated for the purpose, visited Mt. St. Mary's College on Wednesday afternoon to negotiate for a game of ball between the nines of the two Colleges. Nothing definite however was settled. The visitors wishing to make it a condition of the game that Mr. McPherson, a graduate of some years standing from the Pennsylvania College, and now a prominent lawyer of Gettysburg, should take part in the game. Both managers are quite willing that Mr. McPherson, Prince of Ball Players, should participate, but they do not exactly agree as to where to place him. The strangers think his best position would be the field, while the Mountaineers, not wishing to see so much talent wasted on the desert air, would like to see him behind the bat, where he justly holds the enviable title of King of Umpires. It is earnestly hoped that an agreement will soon be effected, as during their past visits to the Mountain, the Pennsylvanians left behind them nothing but the most pleasant recollections.

James D. Casey, the popular and efficient manager of the Base Ball Team of Mt. St. Mary's College, for two years, ex-president of Parcell Lyceum, and Tennis Club, has been receiving new honors in a larger field, having been elected manager of the University of Pennsylvania Glee and Banjo Club. He will take the Club south the latter part of the month. The Club under Mr. Casey's management gave a performance at Lehmann's Hall, Baltimore, Wednesday.

Primrose, his father, in Queen Anne's county, the latter got a shot gun and fired a load into his son's body at close range, seriously wounding him. The elder Primrose is believed to be out of his mind, having suffered a stroke of paralysis some time ago, from which he never recovered.

An accident occurred on the Maryland Central Railroad last Thursday morning by which three men lost their lives and two others were seriously injured. The accident was caused by the breaking of a trestle, which spanned a ravine 50 feet deep and 200 feet wide, near Belair. The train was a heavy one and three locomotives were attached to it, two of which, with all the cars were carried to the bottom of the ravine. The coroner's jury returned a verdict that the accident was caused by decaying timbers and neglect.

FOR THE TOILET SPRING.

No better preparation can be had than Ayer's Hair Vigor. All who use it speak of it as a dressing, far beyond anything else of the kind. It imparts to the hair a beautiful silken lustre and a fine fragrance, prevents baldness, and restores gray hair to its original color and texture. For five years I was troubled with a disease of the scalp, which caused the hair to become harsh and dry and to fall out in such large quantities as to threaten complete baldness. Ayer's Hair Vigor being strongly recommended to me, I began to apply this preparation, and before the first bottle was used the hair ceased falling out and the scalp was restored to its former healthy condition.—Francisco Acevedo, Siles, Mexico. "I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor and have received more satisfaction from it than from any other hair dressing I ever tried."—C. E. Woodson, Westover, Md. "I use Ayer's Hair Vigor constantly, and find it excellent."—T. C. O'Brien, Fort Keogh, Montana.

ONLY TWO VAGABONDS.

But There is a World of Pathos in the Simple Story.

BY JULIA TRUITT BISHOP.

Main street was at its busiest, and was crowded throughout its entire length with all the hurrying throngs that business and pleasure send along that thoroughfare.

But nobody noticed the shuffling figure that made its way down the busy thoroughfare for several blocks, and then turned down a cross street, where the passers-by were few.

Some one with him, however—some one who led him with the tenderest solicitude through all that hurrying throng; who looked to right and left in crossing the street, and saw that no carriage or street car was near.

And the some one was a dog! He was not much of a dog to look at. He was very small, unimproved as to ancestry, and nondescript as to color.

"What is it, Dick? Dinner-time, hey?" asked the blind man, suddenly stopping, as the dog ran back and clapped him about the leg with two shaggy paws.

"All right, boy," rejoined the old man, as though his companion had spoken, his face lighting up with a smile.

"The dog at once abandoned his gymnastic performances and was in an instant the soberest and steadiest of dogs; not even a hand wagon and a monkey could have turned him from his purpose.

They sat down side by side. As the beggar thrust his hand down into the pocket of the garment that had once been a coat, Dick watched him from the corners of his eyes, a little thrill of expectancy running over his frame.

"Come now, Dick," said the old man, pausing and turning his attentive face toward his companion, "what comes next, my boy?"

With an appearance of great compunction for his thoughtlessness, Dick immediately sat upright, with his paws pressed together, his head drooped, and his eyes closed;—as pious looking a dog as could be found in the land.

"Lord, make us thankful for what we have!" At many a well-filled table, that day, men and women sat down and ate, with no sense of gratitude;

The bundle was unrolled, and there was brought to light a slice of stale bread and a small piece of sausage. Dick's eyes glistened when he saw it, and again he licked his lips, but he made no unseemly demonstration.

"Now, Dick," said the beggar, with a smile lighting up his old face, "you are very tired to-day, I know, and you shall have the first bite. And as I don't care much about sausage, myself, I will give you the most of that. A little piece will do for me, a very little piece."

The division was made on this plan, and they were soon busily engaged, Dick eating the sausage with an appearance of the liveliest satisfaction, and the beggar munching the dry bread.

Two young men, in passing by, had paused, and were looking on in an idle way. They were followed by a huge mastiff, whose blunt nose and heavy jaw told of the bulldog blood in his veins.

The mastiff looked at Dick and then at his master. He enjoyed sport of this kind and had indulged in it, with his master's permission, more than once.

"What is it, Dick? Dinner-time, hey?" asked the blind man, suddenly stopping, as the dog ran back and clapped him about the leg with two shaggy paws.

"Come off, Leo!" one of them commanded, when he had grown tired of the "fun."

"Dick!" he screamed, feeling for the heart that was beating no more in the little breast; "Dick, have they killed you? Oh, my poor little Dick, was there nothing they could do but murder a poor blind beggar's dog?"

"One of the young men began to move uneasily. "Come on," he said; "pay the beggar for his dog and let's go."

The other tried to push a silver dollar into the old man's trembling hand, but he threw it from him and it fell far away, ringing on the sidewalk.

"You offer to pay me for my dog!" he cried; "the dog that has led me every day, that has slept beside me every night for five long years! You can pay for him, you think? The dog that has guided me through mud and rain and sleet, that has suffered with hunger and cold for me, that has trudged along rough roads until his little feet were tired and sore? And old as I am, and blind, and a beggar, he has loved me—me, as much as if I were a king; and not the richest or the handsomest among you could have made him leave me for a minute, I scarcely knew that I was blind, because I had him. And now you want to pay me for my dog! Oh, my poor little Dick!"

The young men turned and walked away, followed by the mastiff, and looking somewhat disconcerted, in spite of their attempt at bravado.

It was an old man, utterly, utterly blind, that groped his painful way along the sidewalk, and as he went tears streamed from his sightless eyes and fell upon the shaggy coat of the little dead dog in his arms.

A thoughtless man, wandering through the woods, caught sight of a cluster of giant toadstools growing at the foot of a tree and began to slash them with his walking-stick.

"Why, they're no good. They're poisonous and unsightly, too," replied the cane wielder.

"Well," retorted the thoughtful man, "they're one of the most useful things that grow. They are excellent proof of the old chestnut that everything in nature has its use and value to man."

"It's the first time I ever heard it," said the thoughtless man dubiously, whereupon the thoughtful one, at the very first opportunity, took the thoughtless one into a big city drug store.

"What are they?" asked the thoughtful man, in surprise.

"Nobody ought to be without them," chimed in the druggist. "There isn't a better simple cure for nosebleed known than a bit of toadstool thrust into the bleeding nostril. Toadstools make excellent dressing for certain kinds of wounds, are highly valued by surgeons and are in big demand in hospitals. Germans use toadstools extensively as pipe lighters also. The dried fungus makes perfect tinder. It is cut in long stripes, and these in turn are clipped at the edge in a sort of fringe and tipped with phosphorus and sulphur just like match heads.

"Ah," said he, "the lady with whom he had an appointment came sooner than he expected. He would never have lighted it if he had known."

"No," said the second, "that isn't it. He was only a beginner, and he couldn't stand any more of it."

"I think you are both wrong," put in the other. "He dropped it by accident, and was too proud to pick it up."

Each one of the three was sure that his conjecture was correct, and they urged their respective views with some heat and animation. At a short distance from them stood two boys, one of whom had been intently watching the group.

"Where you goin', uncle?" "Ter Pitchburg, sah."

"Want a through car, I's'pose?" "No sah, don't. Las' kyar I rid in went fro' an' cum nigh killin' me. Los' my hat."

It is a slight matter, perhaps, but at a time like this everything about Columbus is of interest. When he broke the end of the historical egg to make it strong enough to stand and thus prove him the discoverer of America, wasn't it a good thing it was fresh? And what would have happened to our country if Christopher hadn't thought of this expedient?

Religion and the Rod.

The novel scene of a jury engaged in prayer just before it sentenced a murderer to death might have been witnessed in a Lexington jury room recently.

"Something novel occurred in connection with the jury in the late Duncan case. After the case had been submitted to them and they filled into the jury room to consider their verdict, it was suggested that the jury engage in prayer before taking a ballot.

The occurrence reminds the Gazette of the curious custom observed by an earnest and determined Richmond mother in raising a brood of six boys, whom a dying husband had left to her care and whom she raised to honorable manhood on a mixed diet of prayer and flogging:

"She was an exceedingly pious woman, and so strict a member of the Presbyterian Church that Dr. Breckenridge or some other observant preacher called her the 'She Elder.' When the boys were caught in some ugly scrape requiring her attention she would lock them up in the attic in the old Northern Bank, where they lived, and just before the night the 'old lady' would make her appearance, armed with Bible, hymn book and a bunch of tough switches.

Three gentlemen stood chatting together in a railway station, and one chanced to notice two-thirds of a cigarette lying at their feet.

"Ah," said he, "the lady with whom he had an appointment came sooner than he expected. He would never have lighted it if he had known."

"No," said the second, "that isn't it. He was only a beginner, and he couldn't stand any more of it."

"I think you are both wrong," put in the other. "He dropped it by accident, and was too proud to pick it up."

ORDER OF PUBLICATION.

No. 5808 EQUITY.

In the Circuit Court for Frederick county, sitting in Equity. MARCH TERM, 1891. John T. Gelwick, Plaintiff, against Frederick C. O. Sless and Margaret Sless his wife, and William Heagay and Virginia Heagay his wife, Defendants.

The Bill in this case is filed to procure a decree for the sale of certain Real Estate in Frederick county of which Daniel Sless, died, seized and possessed, and that the proceeds of said sale may be distributed among the parties entitled thereto according to their respective rights.

The Bill states: 1. That Daniel Sless, late of Frederick county, deceased, was in his lifetime and at the time of his death seized and possessed of certain Real Estate, situated in Frederick county, which said Real Estate is a part of that conveyed to the said Daniel Sless in his lifetime by Jacob Sless and others, a certified copy of which is filed for a full description of which the plaintiff prays leave to file a survey thereof hereafter in the further progress of the said cause.

2. That the said Daniel Sless, died intestate on or about the twenty-eighth day of June in the year Eighteen Hundred and Seventy-six.

3. That the said Daniel Sless left surviving him a widow, Barbara Sless, who died on or about the twelfth day of March in the year Eighteen Hundred and Eighty-nine, and the following children and heirs-at-law: (a) Mary Ann Elizabeth Dotterer, a daughter, who is of full age, now a widow and residing in Washington county.

(b) The defendant Frederick C. O. Sless married to the defendant Margaret Sless, both of whom are of full age and reside in Frederick county.

(c) The defendant Virginia Heagay intermarried with the defendant William Heagay, both of whom are of full age and reside in Adams county in the State of Pennsylvania.

4. That the said Real Estate owned by the said Daniel Sless at the time of his death descended to his said children upon their father's decease.

5. That the interest of one of said children and heirs-at-law, the said Mary Ann Elizabeth Dotterer, is now held and owned by the plaintiff, as will appear from a certified copy of the Deed therefor filed with the Bill as part thereof marked Exhibit B.

6. That the said Real Estate is not susceptible of partition or division among the said parties entitled thereto, and cannot be divided without loss and injury to the parties interested therein, and that it is necessary and to the interest and advantage of all the parties entitled thereto, that the same be sold and the proceeds thereof divided among them according to their respective rights.

7. The Bill prays for the following relief: 1. That a decree may be passed for the sale of said Real Estate.

2. That the proceeds of said sale may be distributed among the parties entitled thereto according to their respective rights.

3. For general relief.

4. That process may issue against the said defendant.

5. That an Order of Publication may issue against the non-resident defendants, William Heagay and Virginia Heagay his wife, giving them notice of the object and substance of the Bill and warning them to appear in the Circuit Court for Frederick county, sitting in Equity, in person or by solicitor on or before a certain day to be named therein, to show cause, if any they have, why a decree ought not to pass as prayed.

It is thereupon the 35th day of March, A. D. 1891, adjudged and ordered by the Circuit Court for Frederick county, sitting in Equity, that the plaintiff cause a copy of this order together with a statement of the object and substance of the Bill to be inserted in some newspaper published in Frederick county, once a week in each of four successive weeks before the 27th day of April, A. D. 1891, giving notice to the non-resident defendants, William Heagay and Virginia Heagay his wife, in said Bill and warning them to appear in this Court in person or by solicitor on or before the 14th day of May, A. D. 1891, to show cause, if any they have, why a decree ought not to pass as prayed.
