KING DOLLAR.

BY THOMAS DUNN ENGLISH.

In a land of the West, that is far, far away,

Where the little ones toil and the older folk play,

Where professors are made from their ignorant fools,

And the chief of the pedagogues teaching in schools

Is the very worst scholar.

Where their columns with nonsense the journalists fill,

Where the rivers and rivulets hurry up hill,

Where reason is hot, and where passion is cold,

Where for cash, by the pennyweight, justice is sold,

There reigneth King Dollar.

There fondness for money is first of the lusts,

Competition is smothered by rascally trusts,

A day of fair toil foulest wages receives,

And station and luxury on one achieves

Whose neck shirks a collar.

He is foremost who makes the most profit from sin;

Truth and falsehood in quarrel, then falsehood will win;

A long life of infamy garners no shame,

But an honored old age, without leathern or blame.

At the court of King Dollar.

There each in servility crooketh the knees,

And much the back bendeth the monarch to please;

These he who works hardest in poverty dwells,

And he who lolls laziest riches compels,

With lead to the loller;

There he who has millions, though holding them sure,

Having nothing but money forever is poor;

There the mass crawl and grovel, none dare go erect,

For woe to the wretch who preserves self-respect

In the land of King Dollar.

Who abuses his body and sullies his soul,

Who refuses the beggar his pitiful dole,

Whoever is ready with knaves to conspire

To tax the poor man on food, clothing and fire,

A greedy forestaller;

Who gives to the church, while religion he mocks,

Keeps benevolence jailed under double strong locks,

Whose language is best, but whose actions the worst,

He comes to distinction, and stands with the first

In regard of King Dollar.

There the flimsiest paper is better than gold,

There they kick out good manners because they are old,

There virtue is rotten and wickedness sound,

And vice, in the midst of the merry-go-round,

As queen they install her.

Ah! never were slaves half so abject as they,

And never was king with such absolute sway!

He smites, and the sun shines; he frowns, and it rains;

He has chains on men's bodies and locks on their brains,

This despotic King Dollar.

But ours is a land where such kings could not reign,

Where avarice seeks for a victim in vain,

Where pity and truth of the people are dear,

And trusts, deals and syndicates, should they appear,

Would stir up our cholera,

And rouse a fierce tempest to sweep in its wrath

The Guardian Angel.

ONE MORE STRIKING INSTANCE OF THE SUPERNATURAL AFFORDED.

WHO GAVE THE WARNING.

From the Philadelphia Weekly Times.

That each man is possessor of a guardian angel or a guiding spirit of some kind, who at one time or another assumes tangible form to guide or protect the being confided to his care, has for the past four years been a well-founded belief of mine. This apparently peculiar belief has a strange foundation, and experts in psychology who are in the habit of clearing away hypnotic mysteries by the mere statement, uttered with ponderous profundity, that nearly every strange happening is caused by hypnotism, will here have a chance to exert their giant intellects to explain away my belief.

About four years ago I was assigned by the paper in St. Louis, on which I was employed, to make a trip through Oklahoma. I took the train in St. Louis one chilly evening in the fall en route to Kansas City. I had my sleeping car ticket and my passes and handed them over to the sleeping-car conductor so as not to be disturbed while enjoying a new novel, which I was about to read. The train started and we were soon speeding over the prairies of Missouri.

The night was a dark one and the wind was howling fiercely about the flying train, but I was not troubling my head much about the night or the weather; I was too deeply interested in my novel and thinking of the little wife whom I had taken to myself four months before, and from whom I had that night parted for the first time. I must confess, though, that the novel occupied most of my attention.

Sitting on the seat opposite to me, and in the same section, was a young woman of perhaps 20 years. A very pretty and a very proper young woman, I thought, as I saw her modestly she refrained from meeting my possibly admiring gaze. She was sitting idly gazing out into the night, and I courteously handed her a paper, which she thanked me for, in a sweet, low voice and a pretty inclination of her graceful head. This broke the ice and I began to chat with her. I found her a very interesting conversationalist, but withal mysterious concerning herself.

I tried a number of times to make her talk a little about herself, her home and her friends, but she dexterously turned the subject and chatted pleasantly on quite a number of topics, utterly foreign to the one in which I was for some unaccountable reason deeply interested. One of the reasons may have been that she looked mysterious, and that, as everybody knows, is enough to make any newspaper man exert his brains and tongue to solve the apparent mystery. But what was mysterious to myself may not be so mysterious to you or the next person.

The girl, first of all, had mysterious eyes. They were a flashing black-blue when at rest, but occasionally, when animated or a trifle excited, it seemed to me as if the entire eyeball was a dull white. It may have been my fancy, or the dim light in the Pullman, that caused me to imagine that the woman's eyes did occasionally show a dull white, but in the light of subsequent events I firmly believe that my eyes saw facts, not fancies.

The hours sped by quickly and the berths were nearly all made up, when I realized that I held the ticket for the lower berth. My new lady acquaintance held the check for the upper berth. As a gentleman should, I, of course, offered to exchange berths with her, but she refused. Her reasons for declining my kind offer were that she would be less exposed to draughts in the upper berth, and would be warmer there. As an old traveler I knew she was wrong in her ideas concerning sleeping car berths, but she would not accept my offer. There was a lull in our conversation, during which she seemed to be studying the black night, as seen through the car window. Suddenly, however, she turned to me and asked in what I would call tones of suppressed agitation:

"Do you ever take advice from strangers?"

"Sometimes," I answered quickly, but before I was stunned by the strangeness of the question.

"Will you take a piece of advice from me?" she asked, in the same agitated tones.

"That depends upon the nature of the advice you may tender," I answered.

"Well, try and secure that berth opposite, on the right-hand side of the car. It is unengaged and just as good as this and may be much better. Please do what I ask."

I accepted this "advice," as she termed it, with the same thought as would possess the mind of any sensible man. She was an inexperienced girl, and did not relish the idea of occupying the same section with a man, and a strange man at that.

The look of gratitude on that strangely pale and sweet face when I accepted her "advice" was enough to repay any man for suffering a much greater inconvenience. I removed my traps to the section opposite, and, as the berths were soon made up, I bade my mysterious acquaintance "good night" and turned in for a sleepless night. I lay on the berth for fully an hour, gazing out into the night, and straining my eyes to see something of the landscape as we whirled past.

Sleepless nights spent in the berth of a sleeping car are generally occasions for the birth of mild fancies in an imaginary brain. The thousand and one strange ideas that float across the mind, pausing for an instant and then floating as into the realm of forgotten fancy, possibly never to be thought of again, are all at the time unwelcome visitors; they drive away sleep just when most do we wish sleep to abide with us. There is generally, however, one strange fancy or idea that will linger longer than the others.

The idea that remained with me was, you must confess, rather odd and startling. It began with a supposition, as many fancies do, and ended in an imaginative catastrophe. Supposing, I thought, a train of flat cars, loaded with railroad ties, should be passing on the other track. Suppose one of those ties to have been jolted and jarred till its end protruded far beyond the edge of the flat car and far enough to reach the train upon which I was riding. Suppose that the last jolt necessary to dislodge the tie a distance sufficient to reach the train should be given just as the tie reached the car in which I was sleeping, what would be the result?

Then I realized, with a feeling of relief at which I was for a moment after amused, that I was on the side of the car farthest from the other track. No sooner, however, had I laid all my suppositions and began to draw my theoretical deductions, than there came a terrible crash of smashing wood and broken glass, mingling with the dull roar of the flying train and the yells and cries of the passengers.

I myself was covered with splinters of wood and pieces of broken glass, and something heavy had fallen across my left leg. I managed to push it off, and hastily pulled on my pants and coat. When I looked out of my berth I gazed into the open night and the cold air was fanning my cheek; the other side of the car had been torn completely away.

I jumped into the ruins of wood and glass, and tried to lift the heavy boards, which, I felt certain, must cover perhaps dead or dying the form of the young lady who had given me the strange yet providential advice during the evening. Willing hands were soon helping me and we soon came upon a human form, yet warm, but dead. It was the body of a man probably 35 years of age, and from papers found in his

THE SUPERSTITION.

POCKET, evidently a traveling man.

A few minutes later we came upon the form of a woman, crushed beneath the weight of a heavy upper berth. This, I thought, as I tugged and dragged at the tightly-wedged timbers, must be my young friend. When the body was taken out I found to my sorrow that it was the body of an old gray-haired lady; her neck had been broken. The search went on, but beyond a few badly injured men, no other bodies were found. There was no trace of the mysterious girl, who had, probably through a whim, saved my life.

I was puzzled and astounded, and though I ran about like a madman hunting up and down and all around me, I could hear nothing of the young girl. Yet the great-est damage had been done to the coach at just the point where was located the berth which the girl occupied. If she had escaped death it was by a miracle; but if she had escaped, where had she gone to? She had disappeared as utterly as though she had been swallowed up by the night.

While I stood there on the other track, in the cold night, still dazed and wandering, the conductor of our train came along with his lantern and was immediately surrounded by a scared but curious crowd.

"How did it happen?" asked one of the passengers, breathlessly.

"A train of flat cars loaded with new ties was passing and one of the ties became dislodged and caught this car, which stands out a little further than the ordinary passenger car," was all the explanation offered by the conductor, but it was enough to thicken the haze of surprise and wonder which had already enveloped my brain.

Four years have passed since that night, and I have never heard anything concerning that strange woman. Who she was and what she was I do not pretend to know definitely, but that she was a spirit, sent to warn me of impending danger, as is firmly fixed in my mind as God's truth itself.

A MYSTERY is confronting the citizens of Thibodeaux, La., and exciting the superstitious beyond measure. A day or two ago Mam Rhea, an old negress of this place and a reputed witch, died after a prolonged illness and was found after death to have one temple marked with the image of a cloven hoof. Mam Rhea was believed by the negroes to have sold herself to his Satanic Majesty for money, and indeed the old woman was always well supplied with comforts and small change from some revenue, which she persistently refused to make public.

She lived a solitary life, held little communication with any one and had been ill for some time before any one knew of it, but upon learning her need of ministrations the women of her race flocked about her and she died surrounded by a crowd, whose presence she was unable to resent. These stayed about her, prepared the body for burial and are willing to swear that it was not alone for a single moment from the time death ensued to the finding of the mysterious mark on her temple. The image appeared to have been burned in with acid, or traced with a pencil dipped in caustic, which Dr. Osborne, who was with her when she died and declares she bore no such mark then, says must have been done after death.

The women, however, who performed the last offices have all been examined separately and cross-examined carefully, but are unshaken and unanimous in their testimony that such a thing was impossible of execution without their knowledge. The community is greatly divided in opinion on the affair, many believing that the negroes have either forewarned themselves and are cognizant of the hand that traced the mark, or must have left the body for a time, when it was done, while the more ignorant are convinced that Mam Rhea's dark master left his signature thus.

IF YOUR BACK ACHES or you are all worn out, really good for nothing, it is general, really try BROWN'S GREAT PEPPERS. It will cure you, and give a good appetite. Sold by all dealers in medicine.

DEATH BY ELECTRICITY.

The late infliction of the death penalty in New York by electricity though declared by the officials and the medical men favored with admission to the "chamber of horrors" to have been a success in every particular; has been notwithstanding such unimpeachable testimony, criticized pretty generally and in many cases severely.

There is a good deal of sympathy wasted in the compassionate tenderness with which criminals are regarded and the fear of suffering being inflicted upon them entirely overbalances the atrocity of the crimes which they have committed.

There can be no doubt that the criminal classes regard electrical executions with a horror far exceeding that which is associated with the gallows, notwithstanding its gruesome surroundings, and the ignominy attached to such a death.

The very mystery with which the arrangements are conducted is calculated to increase the dread with which the miserable wretch faces the terrible ordeal through which he is to pass to eternity, whilst the elaborate preparations to which he is subjected to fit him for his part in the scientific experiment is arranged with the utmost minuteness of detail as well as such due regard to dramatic effects that nothing seems to be lacking to the proper presentation of the tragedy.

but the want of a full dress rehearsal to precede the final performance.

The secrecy of the proceedings and the meagre reports given to the public by those who were permitted to witness the experiment have provoked unfavorable comments, for there are not wanting those who insist that the public, if not permitted to view the spectacle, has a right to know all the particulars, and the sensational newspapers, resent the injustice which deprives them of so much stock in trade; but whatever may be said of electrocution, it is undoubtedly right to keep everything connected with the lawful execution of criminals, from being published for the gratifying of a depraved public appetite.

Electricity as an agent in the hands of the law for the infliction of the death-penalty, is only an experiment, as yet, and it is to be hoped that experience on the part of those whose work it is to execute the law, will enable them to dispense with much of the complicated machinery now deemed necessary and thus do away with the disgusting details as well as the expense, which as things are now managed makes capital punishment an expensive luxury even for a government which does every thing regardless of expense.

"Whose sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed," is a plain simple law, as necessary for the protection of society now as when it was promulgated and the simplest, surest, way of carrying it out, must be the best, and if electricity is to be the generally accepted agent for its execution, it must be very much simplified in its application.

Deafness Can't be Cured by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that we cannot cure by taking Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

A Tie That Didn't Bind. The issuing of a marriage license does not always denote a wedding, as we show. One day last week a marriage license was issued by County Clerk Parsons for a young man of this place, (with his knowledge or consent, as he avers), and a young lady in another part of the county. The young lady, accompanied by some of her friends, came here on Thursday, expecting or desiring the marriage to be solemnized at once, but the young man named in the license was not "at home" at that particular time.—Middle-town Register.

Complimentary. The following complimentary notice from the Baltimore Daily News was mislaid at the time we prepared a list of such good wishes several weeks ago:

THE EMMITSBURG CHRONICLE has entered upon the thirteenth year of its successful career. Feeling assured that the influence of the paper has been beneficial to the community it represents. This is a recognized fact and is the natural result of an energetic effort to produce what is really a model county paper. Its record of local events is admirable and the general appearance of the paper indicates that there is intelligence as well as enterprise and pluck at the back of it, combined with capable and judicious management.

A Snake Story. The following snake story is as related by Mr. G. J. Michael, of Park Mills, Mr. Michael states that as he was crossing the farm of Mrs. Wm. Funk, near Park Mills, he came in contact with a copper snake which he killed. About twelve feet distant lay a log with a large hollow in it and in this hollow he saw another snake. He cast his eye up along the log and saw a large black snake lying coiled up there. He passed by about 25 yards and cutting himself a club to reach to the snake, he killed it. He killed the black one first, then hooked the one out of the log. When he struck at it he struck a piece of bark and to his surprise there were five copper snakes under it. It took a pretty considerable time to dispatch the snakes. He killed the black one first, then hooked the one out of the log. IN MEMORY OF CHARLES A. MULLANE

A Brilliant Member of the Class of '88 of Mt. St. Mary's College.—The Class Poem Written by Him.

The writer of the following poem, the late Mr. Charles A. Mullane, of New York City, was a member of the graduating class of '88, of Mt. St. Mary's College, near Emmitsburg, Md., and a young man of high literary taste, and of an amiable and generous nature.

Early in the year 1888 Mr. Mullane's health began to fail, and soon the seeds of hereditary consumption began to develop rapidly, and although he himself kept a stout heart and a cheerful mind, yet to those around him it was evident that a young and promising life was soon to be rudely nipped in the bud.

As the year wore on and the time for contesting for class honors drew near, Mr. Mullane, though greatly weakened in body, yet strove in mind, determined to compete for the gold medal which was to be presented on his graduating day to that member of his class who should have written the best English essay on "The Genius of Longfellow."

The medal was the gift of His Eminence, Cardinal Gibbons—Despite the great disadvantage of ill health, Mr. Mullane took the medal and, as the scholarly critic of the essays—the Rev. Thomas Doran, Chancellor of the diocese of Providence—remarked, Mr. Mullane's essay was an exceedingly fine production, and from a literary standpoint, as fine a disquisition of the kind as he had ever read.

The commencement took place on June 27th, 1888, and Mr. Mullane graduated with high honors, but when his name was publicly announced as the winner of the English Essay Medal, he was too weak to go forward to receive it.

The following day he left Mt. St. Mary's for Brooklyn, hoping against hope that a change in climate would stay the ravages of disease. In Brooklyn, however, he failed to rally and the change instead of deterring seemed rather to hasten his approaching end. He lingered till the latter part of August, when in the midst of friends and surrounded with the consolations of his holy faith, he breathed forth his pure soul to God.

The verses which we publish were a class poem, written at the request of his classmates shortly before commencement.

At the time of his death Mr. Mullane was an ecclesiastical student of the Diocese of Brooklyn, and was held in high regard by his superiors.

While at Mt. St. Mary's he endeavored himself to all and was a constant source of defeat, by his singularly blameless and irreproachable life. And now—off in the pleasant spring days, ere commencement, when those who knew him well gather in the garden on the hill side, that overlooks the quiet valley of St. Joseph's, and the holy hush of twilight gently falls on hill and vale, a sudden and joyful singing starts through the hearts of all, while from the sepulchre of dear dead days comes the picture of a face we may not see again, the sound of a voice long stilled. But list! forth from the tomb of buried hopes the youthful poet speaks.

EXPECTATA DIES. (The long looked for Day) As came of old to Priam's wandering son, A longed-for day, with morn serene begin, So now to us the long expected day Has come with all its charms and fair array. All hearts are turned the buried past to, Inviting us to treat its emerald laws.

What truly be this day, if one might ask? The fair fruition of youths greatest task! No more to be the "boy" nor con by rote, What greater or what lesser mortals wrote, But now we start upon a new career, Directed by the beacon, "Eato Vir!" And you, a something more remains unglad.

Why we with special joy this day behold, Today the golden sun of Summer crowned, The eightieth circle of his yearly round, Since first those saintly sons, Dubois, Bruté, Raised up these hallowed halls we see today, From out whose classic precincts e'er to last, Some eight and twenty mired sons have passed!

But, O! the number of unmirred sons! That stand among the People's honored ones! And as my fancy views these sons so tall, courtly, stands a form above the rest, 'Tis one who ruled for eight and thirty years This classic spot, not least among its peers, 'Tis one undazzled by the Mitres sheen, Which thence did he refuse with humble mien.

Though thoughts like these make up one day of joy, Yet, if we are not without a sad alloy; For we must now these scenes forever leave, A parting which each soul doth sadly grieve, Oh scenes familiar, scenes enchanting, Once our own, no longer ours; Sad are our hearts to think of passing From beneath your vernal bowers!

Though far from us these haunts henceforth appear, Their distance shall but make them doubly dear, Must we fore'er from Alma Mater go? In body, yes; in soul communion, no! O'tt will these bells familiar strike our ears, That link fond memories through these four score years.

Fair land of William Penn these sons of thine, Soon destined are with brighter light to shine; This one, that's born of Academic race Shall soon with fame the world of let-tors gild, That, more the lawyer's than the scholar's brow A mine of laws shall be, if Fate allow; The third behold, so fresh in strength and lore, For whom there seems a call divine in store, The Nut-meg-State may proudly claim the son That has so oft the envied laurel won; Who urges knowledge with her mystic wand To pierce the veil of words that lie beyond.

'Tis well thou mayest majestic Empire State Shall proud seal a mother truly great! Thy soil a harvest reaps from constant toil.

Who finds a fragrance in the midnight oil.

Old Massachusetts, home of greatest men, Thy sons are great no matter where or when: With cheerful, loving eye thy son behold, In genius modest, yet in courage bold, Boswellian-like, he studies Nature's plans, As he their courses from Parnassus scans.

Now classmates ere we part come let's renew Our pledges, to keep in all its native hue, That gift of gifts, that anulet of fate, That smooths the frown from erring nature's face, That peerless gift, that gift without a flaw, That pearl of greatest price, "Christ's Holy Law."

King of Medicines

Scrupulous Humor—A Cure "Almost Miraculous."

"When I was 14 years of age I had a severe attack of rheumatism, and after I recovered had to go on crutches. A year later, scrofula, in the form of white swellings, appeared on various parts of my body, and for 11 years I was an invalid, being confined to my bed years. In that time ten or eleven sores appeared and broke, causing me great pain and suffering. I feared I never should get well.

Early in 1881 I went to Chicago to visit a sister, but was confined to my bed most of the time I was there. In July I read a book, "A Day with a Circus," in which were statements of cures by Hood's Sarsaparilla. I was so impressed with the success of this medicine that I decided to try it. To my great gratification I soon began to feel better and in a short time I was up and out of doors. I continued to take Hood's Sarsaparilla for about a year, when, having used six bottles, I had become so fully released from the disease that I went to work for the Fruit & Wallingford Co., and since then I HAVE NOT LOST A SINGLE DAY.

On account of sickness, I believe the disease is expelled from my system, I always feel well, am in good spirits and have a good appetite. I am now 27 years of age and can walk as well as any one, except that one limb is a little shorter than the other, owing to the loss of bone, and the sores formerly on my right leg.

To my friends my recovery seems almost miraculous, and I think Hood's Sarsaparilla is the king of medicines." WILLIAM A. LEHR, 9 N. Railroad St., Kendallville, Ind.

ORDER OF PUBLICATION.

No. 5863 EQUITY. In the Circuit Court for Frederick County, sitting in Equity. MAY TERM 1891.

John T. Gelwick, Plaintiff, against Frederick C. O. Sless and Margaret M. Sless his wife, William H. Heagy and Barbara A. V. Heagy his wife and Daniel L. Sless and Annie R. L. Sless his wife, Defendants.

The Amended Bill in this case is filed to procure a decree for the sale of certain Real Estate in Frederick County, of which Daniel Sless, died, seized and possessed, and that the proceeds of said sale may be distributed among the parties entitled thereto according to their respective rights.

The Amended Bill states: 1. That Daniel Sless, late of Frederick County, deceased, was in his lifetime and at the time of his death seized and possessed of certain real-estate situated in Frederick County, which real-estate was a part of that real estate which was conveyed to him in his lifetime by Jacob Sless and others of the deed for which Exhibit A filed with said Amended Bill as part thereof is a copy annexed to the petition of the plaintiff for the sale of said real estate, hereinafter in the further progress of this cause, and that if said allegation be not true, then in point of fact it does not appear from the Land Records of Frederick County, that he ever had any paper title at all for said real estate.

2. That the said Daniel Sless had been in undisputed possession of said real estate for more than twenty-five years before his death, and that said real estate of which he died seized and possessed is described in the Deed of which Exhibit B filed with the Bill as part thereof, is a certified copy and that the number of acres which said real estate contains is unknown to the plaintiff.

3. That the said Daniel Sless died intestate on or about the twenty-eighth day of June in the year Eighteen hundred and eighty-six.

4. That the said Daniel Sless left surviving him a widow, Barbara Sless, who died on or about the twenty-four day of March, in the year Eighteen hundred and eighty-nine, and the following children and heirs-at-law.

(a) Mary Ann Elizabeth Dotterer, a daughter, who is of full age, now a widow and residing in Washington County.

(b) The Defendant Frederick C. O. Sless married to the Defendant Margaret M. Sless, both of whom are of full age and reside in Frederick County.

(c) The Defendant Barbara A. V. Heagy, intermarried with the Defendant William H. Heagy, both of whom are of full age and reside in Adams County in the State of Pennsylvania.

5. That the said real estate owned by the said Daniel Sless at the time of his death descended to his said children upon their father's decease.

6. That the interest of one of said children and heirs-at-law, the said Mary Ann Elizabeth Dotterer is now held and owned by the plaintiff as will appear from a certified copy of the Deed thereof filed with the Bill as part thereof marked Exhibit D in the Deed of which Exhibit B is a copy.

7. That the said real estate is not susceptible of partition or division among the said parties entitled thereto and cannot be divided without loss and injury to the parties interested therein and that it is necessary to the interest and advantage of all the parties interested therein that they be sold and the proceeds thereof divided among them according to their respective rights.

The Amended Bill prays for the following relief: 1. That the said Frederick C. O. Sless and Margaret M. Sless his wife, William H. Heagy and Barbara A. V. Heagy his wife, Daniel L. Sless and Annie R. L. Sless his wife may answer this Amended Bill of Complaint.

D. 1891, giving notice to the non-resident defendants, William H. Heagy and Barbara A. V. ADVERTISING.

We are firm believers in the efficiency of printer's ink. We employ it in various ways and methods, but we only use it to tell people of the good things we have and to attract attention to us. When people once get to the store we advertise with low prices and a proper stock—this is an advertisement that strikes home, and goes farther than ink, because unless backed by facts that are indisputable, it draws but once and don't have the desired result even then. Now in the matter of low prices how is it that in a majority of cases we are below other stores? This question naturally arises. Here is the answer. We have learned the secret of opening our goods at less money than our competitors. We aim to Buy them right and the rest is plain sailing.

When we buy a bargain we sell a bargain.

Now, these in the main, coupled with the fact that everything sold must be satisfactory, has made us the leading merchants with sales double that of any store in Adams county. Our store is now filled with the choicest of everything and the prices make the sales.

You Take No Risk
In buying Hood's Sarsaparilla, for it is everywhere recognized as the standard building-up medicine and blood purifier. It has won its way to the front by its own intrinsic merit, and has the largest sale of any preparation of its kind. Any honest druggist will confirm this statement. If you decide to take Hood's Sarsaparilla, do not be induced to buy anything else instead. Be sure to get Hood's.

His injury was caused by a hatchet slipping from his grasp and severely cutting one of his feet.

Storm at Westminster.
The storm which was threatened here on Tuesday evening seems to have spent its fury at Westminster. A special to the Baltimore Sun says: The lightning was sharp and thunder heavy. The rain poured down in torrents and the wind blew hard, uprooting trees, breaking large limbs from them and beating down the fruit and vegetation and flooding the streets. At the railroad station the track and platform were covered to a depth of eighteen inches. The corn-field and roads are badly washed, and the small creeks overrun their banks. The storm lasted over an hour, commencing about sunset, the wind at times giving it the appearance of a cyclone.

Washington Monument on South Mountain in Danger.

It is reported that the hand of the despoiler has been laid on Washington monument on South Mountain. A hole has been made in the board roof that tops the observatory, and a large stone has been removed from the top of the monument and thrown off to the ground. It is remarkable how indifferent some persons can become to a just appreciation of the efforts of the fathers whose patriotism led to the erection of the original monument in 1827, and to the recent work of rebuilding by the Odd Fellows and the citizens of Boonsboro in 1883. The monument association is chartered and the arrest and punishment of the desecrators can be effected.—Boonsboro Times.

A MISSTEP will often make a cripple for life. A bottle of Henry & Johnson's Arnica and Oil Liniment at hand, will not prevent the misstep, but used immediately it will save being a cripple. For sale by J. A. Elder, Emmitsburg and A. C. Musselman, Fairfield, Pa.

Monument to Dr. Higbee.
Herman Strecker, of Reading, the well known sculptor and naturalist, says the Lancaster (Pa.) Intelligencer, has just completed a handsome monument under the auspices of the Higbee Monument Association, which will be placed over the grave at Emmitsburg, of Rev. Dr. E. E. Higbee, late State Superintendent of Public Instruction of Pennsylvania. The memorial fund, which was mostly raised by contributions from the scholars of public schools, was entrusted to J. P. McCaskey, M. J. Brecht, M. G. Brumbaugh, George M. Phillips and H. W. Fisher, composing the Higbee memorial committee. The monument is of a unique and original design, having been hewn out of one solid block of granite weighing over 12 tons, and represents a massive polished cross, nearly five feet high, standing against a huge boulder. The other side of the boulder contains this inscription:
Elnathan Elisha Higbee, D. D., LL. D., Superintendent of Public Instruction of Pennsylvania, March 27, 1830, Dec. 13, 1880.
Erected by the schools of Pennsylvania. "O man, greatly beloved."
Daniel 10th, 19v.

The monument will be unveiled with appropriate ceremonies in a few weeks. The committee has issued a report stating that on the abandonment of the original project for a monument in the Capitol grounds at Harrisburg they decided upon the above form of memorial and also a bronze bust, a life-size picture and a memorial volume; the bust to be placed in the department of public instruction at Harrisburg, the pictures to the number of 12,500 distributed to be hung in schools and elsewhere, and the volume of from five to six hundred pages distributed with the picture to the extent of 10,000 copies. Eight thousand books and portraits have already been distributed.

MT. ST. MARY'S COLLEGE NEWS.
The alterations of the study hall are well under way, a large force of men working at them from early morning until dark every day. The improvements will consist of a new and beautifully decorated ceiling of steel, a new floor of the finest Georgia pine, new pulpit, pews, desks and chairs of special design. In fact, the whole room will be changed. A door has been cut in the rear wall of the room and a passage built to the refectory building—a change that all the students will hail with delight. Outside the hall new stairways of elegant design and finish will be built to the dormitory floors and to the back terrace. There will also be a door and stairway leading from the passage to the play rooms. Neither expense nor pains are being spared in making the room attractive and comfortable, and from present appearances there is every indication that when the College reopens in September the mountain boys will occupy the most beautiful study hall in the country.

The Green Goods Man.
The green goods man has invaded Maryland again with seductive visions of misty wealth. On July 6 he sent a letter to Mr. M. Etchison, a merchant at Etchison, Montgomery county, which that gentleman has sent to the Baltimore Sun for the purpose of heading off any designs that the counterfeiter or pretended counterfeiter may have upon citizens of this State. He attempts the same old game and it is not likely that he will catch many in this section.

Changes of Climate
Kill more people than is generally known. Particularly is this the case in instances where the constitution is delicate, and among our immigrant population seeking new homes in those portions of the West, and where malarial and typhoid fevers prevail at certain seasons of the year. The best preparative for a change of climate, or of diet and water which change necessitates, is Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which not only fortifies the system against malarial, a variable temperature, damp, and the debilitating effects of tropical heat, but is also the leading remedy for constipation, dyspepsia, bilious complaints, bodily troubles specially apt to befall emigrants and visitors to regions near the equator, mariners and tourists. Whether used as a food, or of agriculturalists in newly populated districts, this fine specific has elicited the most favorable testimony.
