THE WANDERING JEW.

A Tree That Proved to be an Ark of Safety in a Time of Peril.

BY HELEN HARCOURT.

From the Philadelphia Weekly Times.

The "Wandering Jew" was a great, uprooted tree that had been drifting to and fro over the broad bosom of Mirror Lake ever since the Somers family had settled on its banks, about four years previous to our story, and how long it had floated before that, it would be hard to say. Jennie Somers, bringing all the wisdom of her ten years to bear on this important point, decided that the fallen giant must have been drifting over the lake for many, many years, and so she named it the "Wandering Jew," and as such she and her little brother Charlie had come to regard it as a familiar, though somewhat uncertain playmate.

For sometimes it came floating majestically up to the shore, tarrying for a few days or even weeks, and they played around it and stood on its broad back to fish. Sometimes it would roll a little and dump them off into the lake, and then it would shake its great sides as though laughing heartily at the joke. And that was not the only joke it played on them, either, because, time and again, just as the children had come to think the Wandering Jew had decided to stay with them altogether, the breeze would dance along the water and pause to whisper to it of a frolic to be had over yonder, and then away it would go sailing out over the lake again.

Mr. Somers had selected as the site for his house a peninsula, a narrow strip of land about half a mile wide, which reached out into the lake, separating it from a river that flowed into it a mile or more away. Sometimes this peninsula really became an island, for in unusually wet seasons the water rose and backed across, so that at one point the lake and the river shook hands, as it were. There was a little bridge just here, one that Mr. Somers had built for his own use when he drove to the town, twelve miles away.

It was rather an isolated place, this peninsula, but the land was fertile, and, therefore, Mr. Somers chose it for his farm.

"They does say," remarked a distant neighbor while Mr. Somers was looking for a site, "They does say as how a good many years ago the river busted its banks and come clean into the lake across that strip o' land. There was cattle on it, and they was all drowned."

"I'll risk that," laughed Mr. Somers, for, you see, this man was trying to sell him some of his own land. And so, on this little peninsula, Jennie's parents built up a lovely home, which they had enjoyed for several happy years without interruption.

But now, at last, there was quite a commotion in the family. Business required that Mr. and Mrs. Somers should leave their home together for at least two weeks' absence. They had never been separated from their children before, and many were the injunctions given to John and his wife Betty, the faithful servants, who had been with them even before Jennie, the eldest child, was born. But Jennie was now 14, and really, if the truth must be told, she felt that she was quite equal to looking after, not only herself, but her little brother and baby sister without any supervision from the servants.

The arrangement was made that the children should spend the night with John and Betty in their little cabin at the inland end of the peninsula, but during the day they should stay at the farm as usual, where the live stock needed their care.

The days passed quickly, although the children sorely missed the father and mother, all the more, perhaps, because it rained almost constantly, and they had to stay indoors most of the time. Ordinary rains they heeded little, but these were a different sort. They came down in torrents, only stopping to take breath, as it were, and the river on the one side, and the lake on the other began to break up and flood the meadows on the Somers farm.

At last, however, the clouds began to break away, and John and Betty took advantage of the chance to hurry off to the town twelve miles distant to lay in a much-needed stock of provisions, while Jennie, with Charlie and baby Dollie, decided to remain at the little cabin until their return.

"And that'll be before dark," called out Betty as they drove away.

"But soon the sun went in again, as if weary of well doing, and a perfect deluge of rain drove the children indoors.

"I never saw anything like it," exclaimed Jennie after several hours of this downpour. "And just look, Charlie. The lake has crept up to the fence!"

And so it had, and if she had been able to see through the trees on the opposite side of the cabin she would have noticed that the encroaching water from the river was not far away, either.

And so the hours wore on and the rain still poured down. The brief twilight came, then darkness; but still John and Betty did not return. Charlie began to cry. The loneliness, the blackness and the roar of the rain frightened him, and then Dollie cried with him for company, so that poor Jennie had her hands full.

How would she have felt, think you, if she had known that long ago John and Betty had reached the point connecting the peninsula with the mainland, to find the bridge gone and a rushing torrent in its place? The only thing the dismayed couple could do was to drive to the nearest neighbor's, four miles away, to see if any means could be devised for getting home that night. They were drenched and shivering, but neither of them cared for that in their anxiety to reach the children.

But they did not even reach their neighbor's that night, for what with the new country and faint roads through the woods, and the inky darkness, they soon got lost, and the only thing they could do was to unhitch the poor tired horse, tie it to a tree and then themselves creep under the wagon and wait for the daylight to come.

Meanwhile poor Jennie was having a hard time of it, between her own natural fears and Charlie and Dollie, but finally she succeeded in soothing them, and singing them to sleep, and then, though she tried hard to keep awake, she too set sail for that mysterious, much-loved "Land of Nod," though not very comfortably, for her ship was a chair, and her voyage frequently interrupted by such snags as a cry from Charlie, or Dollie, or a lurch of her own body that threatened total shipwreck.

After a while, however, even in her uneasy sleep, Jennie became conscious of a strange gurgling sound, and at first hastened to Dollie, to see if she were strangling. But she was quietly snoring, and soon Jennie, in spite of her desperate struggles, dozed again, half conscious now and then of that strange gurgle, and a cluck, cluck, click, clack, and deciding, finally, that a stray hen was resting uneasily under the cabin, which was set up on low posts or blocks.

Then Jennie dreamed that she was standing on the broad back of the Wandering Jew and hauling in some fine fish, and that her frolicsome playmate suddenly tipped her over and she got her feet and dress wet. The sudden start woke her, but, strangely enough, the dream seemed reality; her feet and her dress felt wet; she felt the familiar shaking of the old tree and in the gleam of the lamplight she seemed to see the shimmer and sheen of water all around her, all over the little room.

She rubbed her eyes. Surely this was the most vivid dream she had ever had. If she had not known that she must be still asleep she would have felt sure she was awake, the water seemed so real. And then, all at once, like an electric shock, she knew that she was awake; that her feet and dress were really wet, that the carpet was cover with water and that the little log cabin was trembling and shaking.

Poor Jennie, her heart stood still as the reality of what was happening came home to her, and, quivering like an aspen leaf, she fell back into her chair and cried as though her heart would break. And who can wonder? There she was, a girl of only 14 years, all alone in the midst of a rising flood that was already lifting the cabin on its blocks, and threatening not only her own life but that of her little sister and brother.

No wonder that her heart grew cold with fear.

But she could not stand the awful suspense and waded to the door with the lamp in her hand and looked out. The storm was over and the moon was trying to struggle from the clouds, so that Jennie could see by its faint light the gleam of water everywhere. There was no line now between the lake and the land. The picket fence around the cabin was almost hidden and some of it had been carried away. That showed how high the water was already, and it was still rising.

Jennie, thinking now with the clearness of an older head, saw only one place that offered a chance of escape, and that was a tall, old apple tree that stood against the fence looking towards the lake. If only she could get Charlie and Dollie up into that tree she thought they would be safe. The sooner they got out of the cabin the better, for it was already beginning to rock and at any moment might topple over, float out into the deep lake and then sink.

So she roused Charlie, and soothing his fright as best she could she took Dollie in her arms and stepped carefully out into the water, which was waist high, calling Charlie to follow her. Slowly she made her way to the apple tree, and then paused agast. How was she to get Dollie up there? She could not climb up herself, holding Dollie in her arms, and then there was Charlie. He had not followed her at all, but remained in the doorway screaming with terror. In the midst of her trouble Jennie had a brilliant idea.

Dollie, happily, had gone to sleep in her afternoon dress, and this dress was belted by a broad sash. So now Jennie, first making sure that the knots were tied securely, slipped the loose belt over one of the pickets and then gently loosened her hold, and lo, there Dollie hung, as comfortably as possible, with the broad sash under her arms and her little feet downward, as they should be. Surely never was baby hung on a fence before in such style as Dollie! She did not approve of the arrangements, of course, and shrieked piteously as Jennie waded back to the house after Charlie, who, always a nervous boy, was now so helpless from terror that his sister had to half carry and half drag him through the water to the apple tree.

When he got there, however, he grew calmer and helped Jennie to settle Dollie safely in the spreading branches. Then they had nothing to do but to sit there and watch the water by the fitful light of the moon as it crept up and up until no trace of the fence remained.

By and by Jennie became conscious that the tree quivered once in a while and then, with a sharp terror besetting her, she remembered having heard her father say that this tree, which grew on the top of a bank that sloped abruptly to the lake, could easily be uprooted if the water should ever reach its base. The cabin had rolled over and floated away, water-logged, some time ago, and now the apple tree would soon go.

"O, Jennie," cried Charlie, suddenly, "what's this black thing floating here right under the tree?"

Jennie looked down and felt that her deliverance had come, for there, as if inviting them to mount his broad back and be safe, was their familiar playmate, the Wandering Jew. The tall giant was rubbing up against the apple tree, as though he had come on purpose to save them.

To drop down upon the great tree trunk, to take Dollie from Charlie's outstretched arms and then to help him down, too, and find a safer place for them all among the old weather-beaten roots at one end of this queer craft, was the work of only a few moments. Then Jennie pushed the Wandering Jew out from the doomed apple tree, and none too quickly, either, for they had scarcely drifted twice its length, when over it went with a crash into the water. The old Jew rolled a little, but only a very little. Perhaps he remembered his precious freight, and was resolved to carry it safely.

And thus, all through the rest of that eventful night, the Wandering Jew floated over the broad bosom of the lake, and when daylight came Jennie tied her own red jacket to the highest root she could reach.

She felt sure that some one would see it and she was right, for the sun was not more than two hours high when a faint shout startled the crew of the Wandering Jew, and there, across the waters of the lake, a boat came along propelled by three pairs of strong arms. John and two of the neighbors were there; and Betty was there, too, nearly wild with joy at finding the children safe.

You can believe that it was a happy party that rowed back across the lake and landed at the big farmhouse, where everything was safe, for the land just there was higher than that on which the cabin stood and the water had not reached the sudsore at all.

And you can believe that the three young voyagers, who had just escaped wreck, did not turn away from the generous breakfast that Betty soon prepared for them.

THE SOUTH'S INDUSTRIAL PROGRESS.

Editor Cohen's speech at the Opening of Raleigh's Exposition.

RALEIGH, Oct. 1.—In an address at the opening of the Southern Exposition here at noon today Governor Cohen, Governor of the Charleston World, said:

Nature has done much for the south; man has done but little. Instead of employing our remarkable advantages of soil and climate as steps to lead to the pinnacle of material progress, we have regret to say, simply made use of them to a sufficient extent to enable us to exist in scant comfort.

Right here in North Carolina, at the next door, in my native state, South Carolina, is also greatly blessed, do you not know, and are you not willing to admit that if New Englanders, with their feverish push and keen financial instinct, possessed half our advantages, they would have two of the most thriving, bustling and wealthy states in the Union?

We have lived too much within ourselves, and we must stop! Our education, intercourse almost always involves a reflection on some point, and it must, therefore, be of benefit.

You all know as well as I do that the argument advanced in nearly every southern state against the school law, that you will be helping to educate a negro's children.

Of course you will, and why should you not, pray? The correct theory is that property should provide educational facilities, inasmuch as property finds its greatest protection in, and derives its principal value from, an enlightened populace.

Give all of your people in this state, respectively good education, and the appreciation in the value of property, before the close of this exposition would be almost startling. I think every one will admit the correctness of this statement.

Now, if it be true, why should we desire to keep any portion of our population in ignorance?

I say to you now, my friends, in all earnestness and with a full appreciation of the importance of the statement, that the negro is with us to stay, and the sooner we come to a realization of that fact, the better.

And further, I wish to express it as my honest conviction that if this were not so, the future of the south as a nation, especially for the next thirty or forty years, would appear to me to be very gloomy. Any great negro exodus means untold loss to our people.

The negro is docile and gives a better grade of labor for a given amount of money than any other nationality. In many portions of the south, even in my own state, agriculture is next to impossible without the negro. He wants to live with us and continue to ride along with us to wealth. He is a man, and we must make it possible for him to do so. Climatically, this is his only proper home in North America. But we are fast approaching the twentieth century, and we must not shut our eyes to the fact that no contentment is now willing to have his children grow up without some education. Therefore, let the negro have it as well as your own children. Give lots of it to both and you will merit the well-earned respect of your own people.

On the other hand, the negro must bear in mind that his place in the political economy of the south is clearly defined.

He must not hope to rule here. He is incompetent to do so. He has no right to the experiment, and will himself admit that it was a terribly disastrous one for the south, coming to us as it did, based upon the devastation and desolation of the greatest civil war the world has ever known.

At the same time, as I have already said, we owe him educational facilities, and we should give them, and with a good grace, too. That he can avail himself of them is amply evidenced by the showing made here today in his department.

I am not a farmer, but I take the greatest interest in all measures suggested for the amelioration of the condition of the agricultural classes, and my observations leads me to the conclusion that the two remedies for the farmers' ills are—first, a city of crops and planting "ten acres to the mule." In other words, don't pay the western farmer an enormous price for corn for yourselves and your stock, when your cotton is selling for less than the cost of any other article.

But above all, my friends, let us broaden our views; let us not imagine that the sun rises and sets only in our section; let us bear in mind that the money of the north and east sits idly awaiting the welcoming hand, and evidence of willingness on our part to help ourselves to come here to assist in developing our truly wonderful resources; let us put aside petty jealousies in small communities; let us devote less attention to electing this, or that, or the other man to office, and more to our own business; in short, to borrow the vernacular of the day, let us make up our minds to "instill" so that when the historian of 1941 compiles his records, the south will be found to be the busiest and wealthiest, as it is today the fairest, most chivalric and God-blessed land on the face of the earth.

SCIENCE VERSUS OMNIPOTENCE.

Scientific research at the present day has reached a point which threatens to overturn the time-honored doctrine of man's dependence on the Almighty power by which the worlds were formed, and to give to mortal hands the control of sublimity things. We have ceased to be surprised at the accuracy with which storms can be predicted and are quite prepared to accept the assurance of the possibility of making them to order, just when and where they may be needed; though from published accounts of the recent extensive experiments in the southwest, we are forced to the conclusion that the amount of material required, together with the skillful handling necessary to produce a downfall of rain, will make even a slight shower, a very expensive luxury, from which fact, added to the uncertainty as to how far or in what direction from the base of operations the needed rain will fall, it is evident that science must learn to control the winds, before it will be able to get up storms to order that will satisfy public demands.

It will be important too, that experiments be made in the way of preventing the disastrous downfalls by which so much damage is done to life and property, for too much rain is sometimes a greater evil than too little and the philosophers who have taken in hand the regulation of the weather have a vast deal to learn before they will be equal to shouldering all the responsibilities involved.

In the mean time it would be well to remember that there is a Power beyond that of feeble man and that He who hath said to the sea, "Thus far shalt thou go and no farther," can control the movements of science and stay the hand which seeks to grasp, more than the finite mind can fathom.

DEATH OF CHARLES STEWART PARNELL.

Parnell died on Tuesday night after a short illness, and the announcement of the fact created a profound sensation both in England and Ireland, but as his political star had already set and the name once so revered in Ireland and feared in England had become stained and dishonored, few will, today, mourn the loss of the man whose death would have been considered a national calamity if it had occurred a year ago.

That tired feeling now so often heard of, is entirely overcome by Hood's Sarsaparilla, which gives mental and bodily strength.

What Voters Should Understand.

Every voter in the county should well understand the rules governing the manner in which he shall stamp his ticket when going to vote. The rules are these: A vote is to be made in the large square to the right of emblem near the top of ticket he intends to vote; or if he intends to vote a "split" ticket, or for persons on two or more tickets, he must not stamp opposite the emblem as above, but must make a stamp opposite and to the right of each and every man's name for whom he intends to vote. It would be well for all to study this ruling and bear it in mind. Of course the easiest understood and carried out is the first named.—Exchange.

Tragedy in a Tunnel.

BALTIMORE, Oct. 8.—A tragic accident occurred in the Union tunnel between Pennsylvania avenue and Fulton street, yesterday afternoon, in which two men were killed outright and three injured, all probably fatally.

The victims were all track walkers who were at work at the time in the tunnel directly under the bed of Argyle avenue. The men heard the Western Maryland train approaching and stopped from the track which they thought it would take to the other track, on the opposite of the tunnel. When the train rounded the curve the men saw that it was on the same track they were standing on. They made a rush to escape, but it was too late. The train sped by, leaving them mangled and bleeding on the ground. Following are the killed and injured: Thomas Hughes, 45 years old, married; Julius Miller, 35 years old, unmarried; Frederick Cappel, 38 years old, married, leg. arm and two ribs broken; John Zink, 35 years old, married, right arm and leg broken and right foot cut off; Henry Coleman, 49 years old, probably fatally injured about the head and body.

A British Leader Dead.

LONDON, Oct. 7.—Rt. Hon. William Henry Smith, first lord of the treasury, warden of the cinque ports and the government leader in the house of commons, who has been ill for some time, died yesterday afternoon. He was supposed to be on the road to recovery, but had a sudden relapse. Mr. Smith was born in 1825. He has held the following official appointments: Financial secretary of the treasury, 1874-7; first lord of the admiralty, 1877-80; secretary for war, 1885. On the resignation of Lord Randolph Churchill Mr. Smith vacated the war office and assumed the leadership of the house of commons as first lord of the treasury.

A Great Religious Gathering.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 7.—The Methodist ecumenical conference, which began its sessions here today, is one of the most remarkable religious bodies ever convened in this country. The ecumenical conference, as its name implies, is composed of the representatives of all the various branches of Methodism established throughout the world. Over 300 delegates answered to roll call—300 from the various Methodist churches in the United States and 200 from abroad.

For the above occasion on October 13th, 14th, 15th, the B. & O. R. will sell tickets at all stations East and West of the Ohio river at low rate of fare for the round trip. Tickets will be sold Oct. 9th to 13th inclusive, and will be valid for return passage until October 19th inclusive.

PARNELL DEAD.

LONDON, Oct. 8.—Great Britain and Ireland were startled yesterday by the utterly unlooked for announcement that Charles Stewart Parnell, the noted Irish leader, died suddenly Tuesday night at his home in Brighton.

It has been well known that Mr. Parnell has not enjoyed the best of health for years past, and it has been noticed and widely commented upon that since the O'Shea divorce developments became a matter of public notoriety, and since political trouble came upon him, that he had grown thinner and that he had perceptibly aged in appearance. But nobody expected to hear of his death, and no inkling as to his illness had reached the newspapers.

He died at his home, Walsingham Terrace, Brighton, at 11:30 Tuesday night. His death was indirectly due to a chill which he caught last week, and which at first was not regarded as being of a serious nature.

His Fatal Illness. Mr. Parnell arrived at his home at Brighton, from Ireland, on Thursday last. On the day following he was unable to leave his bed and his regular physician was called. He seems to have considered Parnell's illness of a serious nature, for he soon sent for another physician, with whom he held a long consultation over the sickness of the Irish leader.

This consultation was resumed on Sunday, when Mr. Parnell was found to be in great pain and apparently growing weaker every hour. His sickness was pronounced to be a case of acute rheumatism, and every attention and care was paid to the sufferer.

He was carefully and antiseptically nursed by his wife, who hardly left his bedside from the moment her husband's illness was pronounced to be serious.

Mr. Parnell, in spite of the care and attention which he received, did not seem to rally from the rheumatic attack and grew weaker and weaker.

Died in Intense Agony. Several hours before his death he became unconscious, and so remained until he died, in intense agony.

Owing to the suddenness of the Irish leader's illness and to the belief of his wife and of the attending physicians that he would recover no friends or relations of his family or that of Mrs. Parnell were present at Mr. Parnell's bedside when he died.

Mrs. Parnell and the physicians were alone in attendance upon him at the end, and the sufferer died in his wife's arms.

Telegrams received here from Dublin and other towns in Ireland and the principal towns of England unite in reporting that the death of Mr. Parnell has caused the greatest sensation among his supporters, principally on account of the news that although he had died in Dublin the late Irish leader's supporters are in a state of consternation.

The death of Mr. Parnell has caused the most intense excitement throughout the country, which has been increased by the fact that, although he died Tuesday night, the news only reached this city yesterday afternoon. This, taken in conjunction with the neglect of Mr. Parnell's relatives to send out any preliminary announcements regarding his death, and the news to fall upon the metropolis like a thunderbolt from a clear sky.

PARNELL'S OPPONENT DEAD.

Sir John Pope Hennessy, Who Led the Kilkenny Contest. LONDON, Oct. 8.—Coupled with the announcement of Mr. Parnell's death was the news that Sir John Pope Hennessy, member of parliament from North Kilkenny, was also dead.

Sir John Pope Hennessy, it will be remembered, immediately after the expiration of the O'Leary divorce case in December, 1890, contested the North Kilkenny election, backed up by Mr. Parnell's opponents, and defeated the Parnellite candidate, Mr. Vincent Scully, by 1,147 votes.

Sir John was possibly the greatest test of strength between the Parnellites and McCarthyites, and the defeat of Mr. Scully no doubt counted for a great deal in the future series of disasters which befell the Irish leader.

Sir John Pope Hennessy was born in Cork in 1834 and entered the house of commons as a member for Kings county in 1859. He was appointed governor of Labnan in 1867, of the West African societies in 1872, of the Bahamas in 1873, of the Windward Islands in 1875, of Hong Kong in 1877 and of the colony of Mauritius in 1882.

In April, 1880, he was created a knight commander of the Order of St. Michael and St. George.

Sir John also won considerable attention with his pen, being a most attractive magazine writer.

A COMMITTEE OF SAFETY.

Five Members of Parliament to Manage Irish Interests. ST. LOUIS, Oct. 8.—The Post Dispatch says: The death will not be followed by the question of who shall succeed him as the leader of the Irish cause. The announcement is made on the authority of Dr. Thomas O'Leary of this city, and the action taken was known at the recent convention of the Irish National League in Chicago, but was not then made known for good and sufficient reasons.

GRANT STATUE UNVEILED AT LINCOLN PARK.

CHICAGO, Oct. 8.—All day yesterday an almost unbroken procession sought to pour out of the five central depots until the streets in the center of the city were for blocks at a stretch little better than a swaying mass of pedestrians. Lincoln Park was the scene of both residents and visitors. Long before the hour at which the exercises were to commence the broad acres of the beautiful park and the lake embankment for miles were black with human forms.

As early as 9 o'clock the various divisions of the parade began to form on Michigan avenue and the thoroughfares adjacent thereto. The instructions issued by Major General Nelson, 41 Miles as chief marshal were clear and explicit that no confusion was experienced in forming the line, but the turn out of organizations was far in excess of all anticipations.

The first division on foot headed the pageant, followed by mounted police. The second division was composed of soldiers of the regular army. The third division was a notable one, being composed of members of the Societies of the Army of Tennessee, the Army of the Potomac and the Army of the Cumberland. Many of the distinguished men in this division were recognized by the crowds and heartily cheered. Among those that came in for more than a hearty greeting were Senator John Sherman, Secretary of War General Horace Porter, General Edward S. Bragg, of the famous iron brigade; Senator Davis, of Minnesota; Judge Walter G. Gresham, ex-Senator J. J. Ingalls and Henry Waterson, General Butterfield, of New York, president of the Society of the Army of the Potomac, also came in for a share of the hearty greeting accorded to this and the fourth division, which was composed of distinguished guests in carriages.

General Horace Clark and his staff headed the fifth division, which was exclusively composed of members of the Grand Army of the Republic. Conspicuous in this division was a little band of veterans, fifty in number, all survivors of Grant's old regiment, the Twenty-first Illinois. The sixth division was composed of veterans and sons of veterans, and the seventh and last of civic societies. Prominent in this division was Chicago's post of veterans of the Confederate army, and the feelings that prompted the men who wore the gray to turn out on this occasion was heartily recognized by the spectators.

When the division containing the distinguished guests reached the base of the monument Mrs. U. S. Grant, Jesse Grant and his wife and their children were escorted to seats on the right of Judge Gresham and the immense gathering was called to order. Prayer was offered by Bishop John P. Newman, after which the statue was presented on behalf of the trustees of the association to the commissioners of Lincoln park and the people of Chicago by Edward T. Tracy, its secretary. A salute was fired. Hon. W. C. Gowdy made a speech of acceptance on behalf of the park commissioners and Mayor Washington Gresham then delivered the oration.

At the conclusion of the exercises the participants in the parade returned and marched back to the city.

Last night the twenty-third annual reunion of the Society of the Army of the Tennessee opened with imposing ceremonies at the auditorium.

The distance was ninety-two miles, and this was covered in exactly 92 minutes. The run from Canton to Newark, Del., fifty-four miles, was made in a little less than 54 minutes. From Newark to Philadelphia, thirty-seven odd miles, the time was 36 minutes, including brief stops at Wilmington and Chester. A part of the train was run at a speed of seventy-two miles an hour.

BALTIMORE, Oct. 2.—Thomas Oscar Squires may expect no assistance from the Baltimore courts in his efforts to recover his young bride, Ella Squires, unless he can produce stronger evidence than he has yet shown to support his claim that the bride's mother, Mrs. Martha A. Williams, exerted undue influence to induce her to leave the city. Judge Harlan dismissed the habeas corpus petition of Mr. Squires against Mrs. Williams, at the same time expressing sympathy for the husband. A dozen witnesses testified that Mrs. Squires had acted of her own free will in leaving her husband and going to St. Paul. Mrs. Squires abandoned her husband immediately after the marriage.

Dyspepsia

Few people have suffered more severely from dyspepsia than Mr. E. A. McMahon, a well known grocer of Staunton, Va. He says: "Before 1878 I was in excellent health, weighing over 200 pounds. In that year an ailment developed into acute dyspepsia, and soon I was reduced to 162 pounds, suffering burning sensations in the stomach, palpitation of the heart, nausea, and indigestion. I could not sleep, lost all heart in my work, had fits of melancholia, and for days at a time I would have welcomed death. I became morose, sullen and irritable, and for eight years life was a burden. I tried many physicians and many remedies. One day a workman employed by me suggested that I take Hood's Sarsaparilla, as it had cured his wife of dyspepsia. I did so, and before taking the whole of a bottle I began to feel like a new man. The terrible pains to which I had been subjected, ceased, the palpitation of the heart subsided, my stomach became easier, nausea disappeared, and my entire system began to tone up. With returning strength came activity of mind and body. Before the fifth bottle was taken I had regained my former weight and natural condition. I am today well and I ascribe it to taking Hood's Sarsaparilla."

N. B. If you decide to take Hood's Sarsaparilla do not be induced to buy any other.

Simple, Beautiful, Good—these words mean much, but to see "The Rochester" will impress the truth more forcibly. All metal, tough and seamless, and made in three pieces only, it is absolutely safe and unbreakable. Like Aladdin's of old, it is indeed a "wonderful lamp," for its marvelous light is purer and brighter than gas light, softer than electric light and more cheerful than either.

"Don't Care to Eat."
It is with the greatest confidence that Hood's Sarsaparilla is recommended for loss of appetite, indigestion, sick headache, and similar troubles. A Large Man's Death.
David H. Herman, probably the heaviest man in Adams county, died suddenly Sunday week at his home in Latimore township. After eating a hearty meal, he went to lie down complaining of shortness of breath. He was found dead soon after. Squire Beales held an inquest, the verdict of the jury being that death resulted from natural causes. His height was six feet five inches, and when last weighed two months ago, he tipped the scales at 462 pounds. He was in his 36th year.—Star and Sentinel.

Shoppers Didn't Catch Him.
Mr. Jacob Schertzer, of Churchville, Harford county, was lately visited at his home by two men, who represented themselves as wanting to buy a farm. He guided them to a neighboring place, which was for sale, and while there a third man put in his appearance and claimed to be an agent of the Louisiana lottery. He said the lottery was a perfectly fair and legitimate business, and to prove it brought out some gambling apparatus and soon all were in the game. Mr. Schertzer won $2,000. The gambler paid him $1,650, probably bogus money, and began to inquire what money Mr. Schertzer had before. This made the latter suspicious, and becoming convinced that the men were trying to swindle him, he handed back his winnings and told them he would have nothing more to do with them.—Baltimore Sun.

Poisoned by Scrofula.
Is the sad story of many lives made miserable through no fault of their own. Scrofula is more especially than any other hereditary disease, and for this simple reason: Arising from impure and insufficient blood, the disease locates itself in the lymphatics, which are composed of white tissues; there is a period of foetal life when the whole body consists of white tissues, and therefore the unborn child is especially susceptible to this dreadful disease. But there is a remedy for scrofula, whether hereditary or acquired. It is Hood's Sarsaparilla, which by its powerful effect on the blood, expels all traces of the disease and gives to the vital fluid the quality and color of health. If you decide to take Hood's Sarsaparilla do not accept any substitute.

Threatens every man, woman or child living in a region of country where fever and ague is prevalent, since the germs of malaria disease are inhaled from the air and are swallowed from the water of such a region. Medicinal safeguard is absolutely necessary to nullify this danger. As a means of fortifying and acclimating the system so as to be able to resist the malarial poison, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is incomparably the best and the most popular. It regularizes the stomach, liver and bowels and encourages the action of the system promoted by it. Constipation and phlegm are thus deflected against the invasions of malaria by this most efficacious remedy. It is also a certain and thorough remedy in the worst cases of intermittent and remittent fevers.

The Gettysburg Granite Company is getting out large quantities of excellent granite at what was long called "Round-Top," on the York pike, four miles east of this place. Over fifty hands are now engaged in stone quarrying and dressing, and the force is about being doubled, to keep up with increasing orders. Coping for the Mount Hope institution, on the Western Maryland Railroad, will require some time and a considerable force of hands, whilst other contracts claim early attention likewise. The granite polishes beautifully, as specimens exhibited show. The company consists, we are told, of Baltimore gentlemen, prominent among them being Messrs. Jones & Thorn, the well-known contractors.—Compiler.

He ate a few morsels and again praised his Maker and said he was healed. She said, "No, you're not." He said, "Yes, I am." She said, "Have you examined the limb?" He said, "No, but I know it's healed." At the earnest solicitation of his wife he raised his pantaloons leg and the bandage dropped off and what the day before had been a stubborn and painful ulcer over the entire leg was now healed and without sign of festering. Mr. Fehl is a consistent member of the M. E. Church at Dillsburg, where he first told of his cure on Sunday morning.—Star and Sentinel.

The Gettysburg Granite Company is getting out large quantities of excellent granite at what was long called "Round-Top," on the York pike, four miles east of this place. Over fifty hands are now engaged in stone quarrying and dressing, and the force is about being doubled, to keep up with increasing orders. Coping for the Mount Hope institution, on the Western Maryland Railroad, will require some time and a considerable force of hands, whilst other contracts claim early attention likewise. The granite polishes beautifully, as specimens exhibited show. The company consists, we are told, of Baltimore gentlemen, prominent among them being Messrs. Jones & Thorn, the well-known contractors.—Compiler.

Abraham Fehl, living a mile north of Dillsburg, has had necrosis of the tibia of his one leg for years. After trying every possible way to heal the leg and failing, he began praying to the Great Physician for a cure. He prayed one afternoon and night and when his good wife called him to breakfast next morning he came into the kitchen shouting and praising the Lord. He ate a few morsels and again praised his Maker and said he was healed. She said, "No, you're not." He said, "Yes, I am." She said, "Have you examined the limb?" He said, "No, but I know it's healed." At the earnest solicitation of his wife he raised his pantaloons leg and the bandage dropped off and what the day before had been a stubborn and painful ulcer over the entire leg was now healed and without sign of festering. Mr. Fehl is a consistent member of the M. E. Church at Dillsburg, where he first told of his cure on Sunday morning.—Star and Sentinel.
